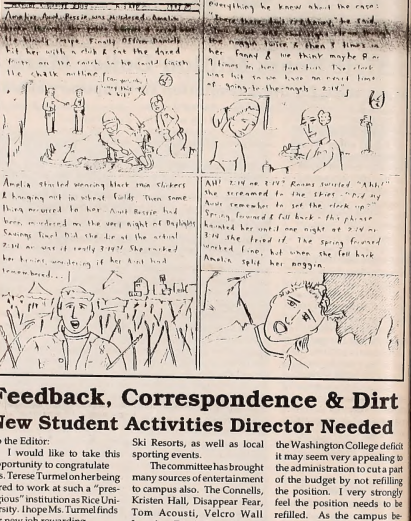
Now, I am not going to reverse this and say all men are capable of such a thing. Because I don't think that's true. But after something like this happens, my trust in HUMANITY drops to a level it hasn't lowered to in years.

Her head experienced a hairline skull fracture accompanied by severe bruising and bleeding; there is danger of stroke with the high incidence of clots at the back of her head. Other than that, she just had the "usual" bleeding and bruising.

She is at home again (or rather, on campus); she is conscious. But she is now a statistic. Bisexual women don't often appear in the one-in-ten status now attributed to the homosexual population among hets. But they appear as frequently as any other woman in these astonishing figures:

- one in eight women has been raped
- one in four college women sexually assaulted during college years
- one in 50-78 percent of victims who know the rapist (acquaintance rape — this was certainly no date rape)
- one woman raped every six minutes in the US.



and only 10 percent of those raped will report the crime.
and only 1 percent of male students who rape are ever prosecuted (much less convicted).
and one in 12 male college students admits to raping or attempting rape.

WHY IS THERE SO MUCH HATE?
Obfuck. Have a nice, happy day. And be careful out there.

New Student Activities Director Needed

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Ms. Teresa Turmel on her being hired to work at such a "prestigious" institution as Rice University. I hope Ms. Turmel finds her new job rewarding.

I would also like to address the importance of filling the position of Director of Student Activities. Great strides have been made in creating alternatives to what are traditionally alcohol based activities. The Campus Involvement through Activities Committee, which Ms. Turmel created in 1991, has provided trips to New York, Ski Resorts, as well as local sporting events.

The committee has brought many sources of entertainment to campus also. The Comedians, Kristen Hall, Disappear Fear, Tom Acousti, Velcro Wall Jumping, Dan LaRosa (hypnotist), and Snickers Comedy Club to name a few examples. Ms. Turmel also began a leadership program (B.U.I.L.D.) for campus leaders in order for the students to learn more about committee leadership and to meet other leaders on campus. Far more activities have occurred than I can name.

With the oncome <sic> of the Washington College deficit it may seem very appealing to the administration to cut a part of the budget by not refilling the position. I very strongly feel the position needs to be refilled. As the campus becomes more diverse it will be very important to have a professional to coordinate activities so as to avoid overlapping activity dates and to deal with entertainment agencies. The benefits of a Student Activities Office far outweigh its costs.

Fraternities Aren't That Bad, Really

To the Editor:

Fact: In one way or another, about 25 percent of Washington College is somehow involved in the Greek system.

Fact: Although that means about 200 people are involved, comprising some of the most influencial people on this campus, the Greek system does not assert itself over the school.

Or does it?

You need not be a member or pledging a fraternity or sorority to realize that some people would question that second point. Why? Because, I would venture to say that of the 75 percent that are not Greek at WC, an equal 25 percent are vehemently Anti-Greek. Truth? Very much so. Anything to fear? I really don't think so. Washington College carries on the tradition of being a very liberal arts college, bringing like-minded liberal thinkers.

The idea of the Greek system, men and women of common beliefs and respect for each other bonding in a unique way is, to many who go here, one of the most blatant forms of conservatism that one could conceive. Add to that that some people came to WC with grossly incorrect stereotypes of Greek life (i.e. Animal House), and you have a 25 percent that doesn't like, support, or sometimes even acknowledge the Greek system. Now, is that right?

I think not. My reasoning for this is the other side of liberalism, the freedom of choice. I was talking a few weeks back to another student here about fraternities, particularly the one I am pledging, and she couldn't understand how something so old and "elitist," as she called it, could exist in such a liberal

CRISIS
Scott Ross Koon

As of this writing, the standoff at the maximum-security state prison at Lucasville, Ohio remains unresolved. At this juncture, negotiations between state authorities and 450 prisoners are deadlocked, and state authorities will not allow the prisoners to publicize their list of 19 demands until they release at least one of the eight guards they are holding prisoner. But since the prisoners have not been fed since last Sunday, it is probable that they will have capitulated by the time you read this column on Friday.

Until we finally know what the prisoner's demands consist of, it is impossible to determine the cause of what authorities now say was a premeditated revolt. But the riot is a symptom of the larger problem faced by our correctional system. That larger problem is simply that there are far too many criminals.

No one is more cognizant of the problems caused by overcrowding than correctional personnel, whose task it is to maintain order and discipline among an ever increasing prison population. The National Institute of Justice (a research branch of the Justice Department) periodically conducts a survey of criminal justice professionals which it calls The Survey of Criminal Justice Professionals.

The 1990 survey showed that 69 percent of all jail managers reported that their facilities operated at more than 100 percent capacity, and that rate was 20 percent higher when only those facilitated in large jurisdictions were considered. This statistic has risen 55 percent since 1986. When taken as a whole, state and federal prisons are operating at 129 percent of capacity.

And yet this problem exists despite ever-increasing budgets for correctional facilities, especially when compared to other justice-related activity. From 1971 to 1990 real per capita national public expenditures for police protection have risen only slightly, whereas real per capita national public expenditures for corrections have risen by 153.6 percent! In 1990, $74 billion was spent on criminal justice, and 87 percent of this came from the coffers of state and local governments.

Getting back to the Survey of Criminal Justice Professionals results, most wardens cited the following as the reasons for over-crowding; the increase in drug-related offenses, longer sentences, a higher percentage of those found guilty being sentenced to prison terms, higher percentages of sentences being served, and mandatory sentencing for certain offenses.

Open Forum: Netsex: Know when to say "No"

Allen Marhall is a Freshman who has been pounding the Internet since Washington College started the service this semester.

It seems that a lot of people have discovered how to use the University of Iowa's BBS, or at least how to login. One popular occupation of the users of the ISCABBS (Iowa Student Computing Association Bulletin Board System) is netsex. Yes, you yourself probably engaged in it over Broadcast, but imagine flirting over thousands of miles. That is what netsex and netcourtship is on ISCA. A few of my friends have fallen in love with those they meet over the computer; some have worked, some have not. I believe the editor-in-chief has a little thing going, and we'll all get to meet this guy (who is apparently a babe) sometime soon.

There are those, however who use this network as a means simply to flirt. Now, aside from getting the keyboard and mouse all sticky, you can now catch a computer virus: BBSSyndrome. Yes, that's right, now you have to use finger condoms when you type because of some careless user who might have been there before you. "Oh great", you say, "Now there is another thing I have to worry about. First it's AIDS, now I can't even have sex in my imagination." Well, sorry, I'm not the one who came up with this virus, it's just out there. I'm the one who can tell you how to prevent the infection.

First of all, watch who you try to deparnty over the Internet. You can't always Finger the right person, now can you? I'd watch out for names like "EZ" or anything remotely sexual. These people are at high risk for this disease. Also, be on the lookout for anyone asking you if you want to get into bed with them. Their virtual bed may not be as empty as the real one. You'd be surprised at the number of people who are experienced in netsex and not in real life.

Second, even the most innocent sounding people may be infected, so I'd take a few extra precautions. The finger condoms I mentioned before are a good way to start. You might want to also try a protective film over the screen (gotta protect those eyes). As far as data goes, well, you might find yourself printing prematurely. Disinfectant (not even 3.1) will not help you get rid of this virus, and remember, you're at risk too.

The third thing you can do to prevent this is the safest: just don't do it. There is nothing worse than going to the library to type a paper and seeing that someone had the pleasure of using it before you if you know what I mean. (Kind of like when you go into a bathroom on the upper two floors of Caroline and see that someone has had a sexual experience with the toilet seat.) This sort of thing is hardest on the mouse balls. Please, if you do have netsex (or an auto-erotic experience) remember to clean up after yourself. It's better for all of us if you just say "no" to that horny little bugger out in Minnesota or Arkansas.

How to Tell if You're Infected

There are a few common symptoms of this disease. The biggest one is a really annoying back ache. All those with the BBS Syndrome have this symptom for some time. Another is a slight discomfort when you use the mouse followed by pain in your wrists when you type. This is a common symptom, but not everyone gets this symptom because the disease affects people differently. A few rare cases actually begin to prefer netsex to the real thing. Yes, there is help for you if you have reached this stage.

There are some lesser known symptoms along with these common symptoms. There have been reports of a milky discharge from output devices; this may be a result of cheap screen savers. Monitors have been known to lose their color when infected, but again, this is rare. There is also a tendency to do Internet searches for GIF files of models, porn stars, average (and not so average) people, and rather pornographic cartoons; if you have this symptom, remember to keep your computer clean.

One last note: always watch out for falling spam and other potted meat products.

The Board

Last-week's-Board was very yellow and very straw-covered. (Why was it straw-covered? Ask last-week's-Board-designer, Ryan Walker.) The most exciting thing about last-week's-Board was the mysterious appearance and disappearance of the Dental Dam. Mmhm. The Question of last-week's-Board was: What do you think of the school's attendance policy?

Some good answers:
—I love it.
—What Attendance Policy?
—Policies in which grades are affected by lack of attendance are good for me—incentive to wake up, etc. However, if a student can do well on exams, papers, etc. w/o attending class—all the more power to him/her. Failing a student solely on the basis of attendance is ridiculous.
—Any attendance policy in college is absurd. Those who, for whatever reason, do not want to go to class do not belong there....
—If I'm not responsible enough to go to my classes/fail—it's my fault. Hey, I have to pay the consequences!
—I think that if all the students are not in class at the appointed hour, the professor should calmly load his/her shotgun and hunt down the delinquents. Sure this can disrupt class but it really encourages attendance!
—Let's see more credit from teachers for attending lectures + discussions outside of class....

Other questions and answers:
Things that make me sad about WAC:
—Not much good lighting—scary to walk around at night.
—The fact that the George Washington statue is hollow!! Boo Hoo!
—The fact that dating at WAC is the equivalent of incest.

Things that make me happy about WAC:
—The thing by Kent where all the steam comes out of (smells like fish)
—The trees behind the art building
—Mark Murphy—what a funny guy!!!

Two American 'Cats' Present Two Different Pornographies

Students who attended Dr. Richard C. DeProspo's lecture April 3 got a taste of pornography.

"The Female Pornographer: Katt Shea Ruben and 'Cat' McKinnon," a lecture co-sponsored by the Gender Relations Awareness Alliance and the Philosophy Club, offered a brief preview of the course in pornography that will be offered next semester by DeProspo.

The lecture started off with DeProspo asking everyone present to raise their hand and swear "I will not sue you for sexual harassment." He said that while the pledge did not necessarily ensure that he would not be sued, he wanted everyone to be aware that there would be film footage of women's breasts and that those who might be offended by the clips should leave.

DeProspo went on to profile both Katt Shea Ruben and Catherine McKinnon — "the two 'cats.'" McKinnon is a prominent lawyer who was instrumental in promoting the recent anti-pornography statute in Minneapolis. The landmark 1988 law prohibits the distribution of pornography anywhere within Minneapolis city limits.

Her article in defense of anti-pornography legislation was printed in The Harvard Law Journal, which, as DeProspo noted, was the first time that such lurid language — in particular, the word 'fuck' — appeared in one of the United State's most prestigious law journals. He remarked that McKinnon can therefore be given credit for "elevating" the journal to the ranks of "Oprah, Sally, Phil and Geraldo."

The other "cat," Katt Shea Ruben, was an obscure ex-pornactress who became a well-known writer and director of soft-core pornography films. Her films include Stripped to Kill, for producer Roger Corman, and Poison Ivy, which was responsible for rejuvenating Drew Barrymore's career.

DeProspo's discussion was not so much centered on arguing either side of the case for pornography as it was to show that Ruben's films are perhaps smarter and more aware of the situation of the female pornographer than many, including Catherine McKinnon, would like to believe.

Amanda Burt

He proceeded to play footage from the opening dance scene of Stripped to Kill. The scene features an extremely athletic dancer performing a strip routine on a stage dominated by an "always already-phallic pole." But he said the nature of the choreography makes it difficult for an average male consumer of soft-core pornography to become sexually aroused. Rather than being the victim of the viewer's gaze, the dancer turns aggressively and subversively on the audience.

Similar clips were also shown from the opening scenes of Poison Ivy and Savage Beach, a film by Andy Sidaris, a well-known male pornographer.

Poison Ivy, one of Ruben's most recent films, is not pornography, but still incorporates elements of erotica. Once Ruben hit the major studios, said DeProspo, she stopped having to make porno to make a living.

DeProspo concluded the lecture by saying that the female pornographer ironically poses a greater threat to the typical audience for soft-core pornography than the more militant feminist activists such as Catherine McKinnon. He later said that his intention was to mix the media of the lecture by interlineating both writing and film, and he added that the structure of his course next fall will follow a similar format.

Although DeProspo had only a few days to prepare for his discussion, the reception to his lecture was positive. After the lecture, one student said, "I can't wait to take the class next year. I'm there. It's going to be good."

And so are may other enquiring minds. As a preview of "Pornography in America," DeProspo's lecture intrigued.

No, they don't just drink. If you do not believe me, ask the Zetas where the money for their car wash went or what the Phi Delts spent the last two Saturdays of March doing? They were helping someone other than themselves. Kind of puts a damper on the vain pampered beauty or the brainless beer guzzling jock stereotype, doesn't it? Like it or not (and I hope you like it) each fraternity and sorority has a niche on this campus, a purpose that will go on after every person reading this paper has graduated. Each organization holds continuancy from the oldest of the old (Kappa Alpha) to the newest of the new (Phi Delta Theta). So no, the men and women of the Panhel and IFC, and the organizations they represent, are not in any way undermining the sanctity of Washington College, and nor would they. This school is liberal, and that is how it is going to stay, and for better or for (what some think) worse, so is the Greek system.

Career Center News

Attention Seniors: Graduation is fast approaching, and before you know it, you'll be standing there getting your picture taken with President Trout, receiving your diploma. After the last crumb of graduation cake is devoured, you may start to think about 'Life After College' and getting a job.

Reality is that you need to start thinking about these things now. There are some real life decisions facing you in the upcoming months; namely bills, budgets, where you are going to live, health insurance, the need for a job, and many more. It is a change, a shock really for some people, to go live at home after college. There is this Transition Period that is rarely formally discussed with college students, but is extremely necessary to acknowledge and understand. It's a drastic change from life as you know it.

This transition from college student to real-life-employee can be very disconcerting for the former student, without prior preparation or at the very least, awareness of some of the issues. The Center for Career Development is organizing a "Transitional Workshop" for this very reason, to help ease the potential trauma of a rocky transition and to aid in your awareness of issues that need to be dealt with.

The workshop will be held on Monday April 26 at 7:00 PM. This early notice will hopefully arouse your interest, allow you to plan ahead for this valuable workshop, so you can use these resources now. Don't wait until you are home or moved in with five intolerably psychotic roommates who you met through a newspaper ad because the monthly rent was 50 cents a month (now you know why) and are miserable and without a dime to spare, to regret not having checked these things out sooner when the resources were at your disposal.

This workshop hopes to step students through a mini "survival kit" so to speak, and will include a few expert speakers on health insurance, financial planning/budgeting, getting a job (what employers are looking for) etc. So please mark this date down on your calender — it's one workshop you won't want to miss!!

What it's Like To See Gorbie

Christabel Garcia-Zamor
Staff Writer

On Tuesday morning, at four a.m., I drove to the University of Virginia in the hopes of catching a glimpse of one of the most influential and revolutionary men in today's world, Mikhail Sergeyevich Gorbachev. I heard around midnight the night before that he would be speaking at U.V. for the 250th anniversary of Thomas Jefferson's birthday, otherwise known as Founder's Day. To see a men responsible for such vast social and political change was an opportunity, literally, of a lifetime.

Mr. Gorbachev, former president of the U.S.S.R., was born in the Northern Caucasus in 1931. In his youth, he combined his studies with work as a harvester operator's assistant at a machine and tractor station. He is a graduate of both the Department of Law at the prestigious Mikhail Lomonosov Moscow State University and the Department of Economics at the Stavropol Agricultural Institute. While still attending the University, he formally joined the Communist Party, a move which combined his legal training and background in the Young Communist League prepared him for a career in the party administration.

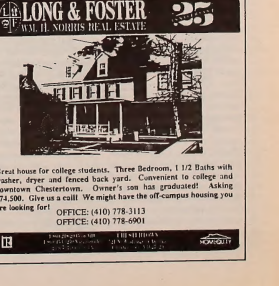
From 1967, when he graduated from the University and returned to his native region (the Stavropol territory), to 1980, when he became a full member of the Politburo, his rise to eminence was unusually rapid. He introduced a number of agricultural reforms and gained a reputation as an innovator. In 1985 he became a member of the Presidium of the USSR Supreme Soviet and served as Chairman of the President from 1988 to May 1989. At the First Congress of the People's Deputies, he was elected Chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet. On March 15, 1990, he was elected the first president of the USSR.

When I arrived at 'The Lawn", a huge grassy expanse covered with chairs and surrounded by beautifully architectured buildings on three sides, I stopped short in my tracks. The "Lawn" is about as big as the lawn in front of Bill Smith, if you measured it from the road by Dunning all the way to the Cater Walk (if there were no buildings on it at all). Thousands of students swamped the entire area ... the sitting area looked completely full, from front to back, and people were shoulder to shoulder everywhere else— on terraces, standing on the back of the lawn and the hills after that, hanging out of classroom windows, and on all steps and cement rails.

My brother, who invited me looked at his two tickets for chair seating, looked at me, and then back at the crowd. I felt my gut drop. We were an hour early, and there was not a seat to be found. Gorbachev would be a speck from the distance we were standing at now.

Luckily, partly due to my brother's full beard and suitand my dark sunglasses and conservative dress, we managed to slip into chairs in the first four rows, designated, "Faculty and Special Guests". We watched as students were dragged from the section, left and right, but no one bothered us. We were within twenty feet of the podium!

When everyone stood up on their chairs and clapping thundered in the air, I left my seat and ran to the center aisle, where he would pass. When he walked by, there were only two students between me and him. I saw his face. The first impression I got was that I liked his smile. It did not look strained. He looked genuinely happy to be there. I went back to my seat as the crowd took their seats again. The snipers who were supposed to be hiding on the landings shifted nervously.



The one thing which struck me the most was a statement made by a Russian couple who was sitting behind me while the National Anthem was playing. They were looking around confusedly, whispering amongst themselves. Then I realized that despite the fact that there was thousands of people present, I couldn't hear one voice singing our national anthem. There was sheer silence, aside from the music through the speakers. I think I even saw Mr. Gorbechev glance around with a furled brow. I felt a little embarrassed.

There was a big lag time between what Mr. Gorbechev said and the translations which took place, and it was all focused around how he looked to Thomas Jefferson as a role model for social change. Somehow, he managed not to mention the USSR at all, and many of his statements were generalizations. However, I do have to admit that being so close to the man who held a major part in ending the Cold War was thrilling, indeed.

Washington College To Hold Spring Gala In Baltimore

Alumni and friends who comprise the 1782 Society of Washington College will gather at the Stouffer's Harborplace Hotel at 7:00 p.m. on Friday, April 23, 1993 to honor Alonzo G. Decker, Jr., W. James Price, and Walter Sondheim for their leadership in developing philanthropic support for the College. Washington College development officers hope the event will raise thousands of dollars for scholarships.

Lester C. Thurow, Dean of M.I.T.'s School of Economics and economic advisor to Lyndon Jonhson, will be the keynote speaker. He is the author of several well-known books, including The Zero-Sum Society (1980) and most recently, Head to Head: Coming Economic Battles Among Japan, Europe and America (1992). As commentator on the economy and public policy issues, Thurow writes for the Boston Globe and appears regularly on The Nightly Business Report on television.

Alonzo Decker is former Chairman of Black and Decker Corporation, James Price is a retired Managing Director of Alex. Brown & Sons and Walter Sondheim is Senior Advisor for the Greater Baltimore Committee. All three serve on the Board of Visitors and Governors of the college.

The highlight of the black tie dinner and dance will be the presentation of the 1782 Society Awards recognizing exemplary leadership and philanthropy in keeping with the tradition started by George Washington, whose gift of fifty guineas helped establish Washington College, the tenth oldest college in the country.

The 1782 Society, named for the founding year of the College, represents approximately 300 alumni and friends who contribute $1,000 or more to the College annually.

Its members were instrumental in raising money for the Campaign For Excellence, the most successful fundraising effort in the history of Washington College. This year, 1782 Society members support an innovative scholarship program that enables more than fifty needy scholars to benefit from a liberal arts education.

Participation in the 1782 Society entitles members to use Washington College Facilities, including the Casey Swim Center and the Lifetime Fitness Center, and to attend special events, including this year's Spring Gala in Baltimore.

Among those serving on the Dinner Committee with President and Mrs. Charles H. Trout are Henry Beck, William Brogan, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Cafritz, Mr. and Mrs. George Cromwell, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Duemling, Christian Havemeyer, Mr. and Mrs. John Roberts, and Mr. and Mrs. William Russell.

The 1782 Gala will be funded by corporate sponsors. Those who wish to join the 1782 Society and participate in the Spring Gala should call Joyce Huber Cafritz, Chair of the 1782 Society, at 410-778-5083, or Martin Williams, Assistant Vice President for Major Gifts, Washington College, at 410-778-7805.

Philosophy Major Wins Fulbright Fellowship

Timothy Stoltzfus, a senior philosophy major at Washington College, has been awarded a Fulbright Fellowship to study theology in Germany next year.

Stoltzfus, who grew up in a Beachy Amish household in the Eastern Shore village of Kennedyville, will be investigating the German beginnings of this pietistic movement and its continuing effect on German secular culture. Although no Amish remain in Germany, Stolzfus says, the Amish custom of "shunning" is still practiced in small communities in the Hardt region of the Rhineland. This is the region to which Jacob Amman, a Swiss reformer of the 17th century, led his religious followers when they broke off from the Mennonite church.

Stolzfus will be studying at the University of Trier, under the supervision of Leroy Beachy, a scholar of the Amish church. Here he plans to take coursework in Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Biblical studies, and religious movements of the 17th and 18th centuries in Europe, and pursue his investigation of the practice of shunning.

Stolzfus has been abroad before-he spent his junior year at Manchester College, Oxford University in England. "A visit to Germany in December of that year sparked my interest in the language of my childhood," he says. Upon his return to campus, he enrolled in Professor Lida Baldwin's introductory German class, where he blossomed as a student of German and was encouraged to pursue a Fulbright scholarship in the area of theology.

"Tim is a wonderful, wonderful person," says Baldwin. "He is truly a gentlemen and a scholar, and sensitive to the needs of others. With his intellectual curiosity and his compassion, I believe he is going to go far and he is going to help people along the way. He truly thinks of how he can be of service to others."

After completing his Fulbright studies, Stolzfus intends to pursue a doctorate in theology and become a scholar and teacher of theology.

Natural Sciences Receive Grant For Summer Research

The Jessie Ball duPont Fund has awarded Washington College a grant of $78,000 to establish a student/faculty summer research program in the sciences. This is the first grant of its kind for the College.

Washington College has long encouraged students and faculty to collaborate on investigative projects through its "senior obligation" requirement for the baccalaureate degree. Extension of this tradition into summer research permits students to engage in more intensive and exciting projects.

The newly-created summer research program will involve about 15 students and nine faculty members in its first year. Gene Wubbels, Provost and Dean of the College — and also Professor of Chemistry — will serve as Program director. The program will support individual research projects to be carried out in Dunning Hall/Decker Center, a science complex completed at the cost of $4.5 million in 1989. A unique feature of the program will be its multidisciplinary nature, involving students in a weekly seminar that spans all the science disciplines.

"The basic theory behind summer research programs, wherever they exist, is that science must be done 'hands-on' in order to be learned," says Wubbels. "To learn anything well, it helps if the teacher and student are practitioners."

Wubbels, who was a founder of the national Council of Undergraduate Research, explains the philosophy of undergraduate science research this way. "The easiest way to fail at science education is to permit the subjects to be airtight, bite-sized packets of information. What the philosopher Alfred North Whitehead called 'inert ideas' — abstractions that are merely received into the mind and not put into context — are the bane of good education. The college that does no research — that tolerates inert ideas — becomes a vicarious outpost of science, a place that merely reports on science undertaken elsewhere.

"A nice consequence of doing science is that it provides the college with a convincing rationale for good library facilities, state-of-the-art equipment, and adequate supplies for the laboratories. These attributes also attract faculty and students who are well-qualified to do scholarship. And students who have the chance to do science are happier and better prepared for post-graduate training or employment. Summer research makes a direct connection to greater quality of science education.

The three-year grant from Jessie Ball duPont will support the purchase of scientific instrumentation (specifically, a UV-VIS spectrometer) and the research efforts of up to 15 students. The students will work for ten weeks under the supervision of nine science faculty, including the Provost and Dean of the College.

Faculty participating in the program include David Russell and Rosemary Ford in biology; Rick Locker, Rosette Roat, and Gene Wubbels in chemistry; Juan Lin in physics; and George Spilich, Michael Kerchner, and Kevin McKillop in psychology.

Students are invited to collaborate with faculty on research projects devised by the faculty. Examples of research projects include theoretical modeling of ecological systems (physics), cancer chemotherapeutic agents and mechanisms (chemistry), genetically engineered organisms in plant symbiosis (biology), and psychological effects of nicotine (psychology).

Woodward to Speak at Commencement

Chief Justice Robert C. Murphy, Is Also Honored

Washington College will honor a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist and the head of Maryland's judicial branch at its 211th commencement on Sunday, May 23rd, when more then 220 undergraduate and graduate students are expected to receive their degrees. Commencement begins at 10:30 a.m. on the campus lawn.

Robert U. Woodward, Assistant Managing Editor of the Washington Post, will be the commencement speaker and will receive the honorary Doctor of Laws.

Bob Woodward made his name as a young reporter with the Washington Post. While on police beat he was assigned to cover the arraignment of five men who had been arrested for breaking into the Democratic National Committee's offices in the Watergate complex. Woodward, teamed with his post colleague Carl Bernstein, followed by the story from a Washington courtroom through a complicated tangle of clandestine political activities into the highest offices of the White House. Woodward won several awards in 1973 for his investigative reporting of the Watergate scandal, including the Pulitzer Prize in journalism and the George Polk memorial award.

The two reporters collaborated on a book telling the story of how they reported the Watergate cover-up. All The President's Men, published in 1974, has since been made into a movie. A second book chronicling the end of the Nixon Administration -The Final Days- quickly followed.

Woodward has written several other books rooted in U.S. politics, including The Brethren (1979); Veil: The secret Wars of the CIA (1987); The Commanders (1991); and The Man Who Would be President (1992, with David S. Broder).

The Leader of Maryland's judicial system will give brief remarks during commencement. Robert C. Murphy, Jr., Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, is noted for his commitment to gender equality and for administrative reform of the courts.

Chief Judge of the state's highest court since 1972, Judge Murphy oversees the Court of Special Appeals, the circuit courts, the district court, and orphans' courts of state. During his career as a jurist, Judge Murphy has encouraged the proper care and preservation of the historical records of the courts. Under his leadership, the Maryland State Archives has garnered a reputation as the most heavily used, yet easily accessible, state archives in the nation. He has gained a national reputation through his effective leadership with the National Center for State Courts, the Conferences of Chief Justices, and the Council of State Government.

Create a Logo for New Centennial Conference

The newly-formed Centennial Athletic Conference, which Washington College will join as a founding member in the fall of 1993, is sponsoring a contest at member schools to design a logo representing the conference as a whole. Guidelines are as follows:

1. The logo must include the words "Centennial Conference."
2. The camera-ready logo must be submitted by April 30, 1993 to the Conference Office.
3. Logos will be judged by athletic administrators and presidents.
4. The prize for the winning logo will be $150.
5. All entries become property of the Conference.

The member schools of the Centennial Conference are Bryn Mawr College, Dickinson College, Franklin and Marshall College, Gettysburg College, Haverford College, the Johns Hopkins University, Muhlenberg College, Swarthmore College, Ursinus College, Washington College and Western Maryland College. The Centennial name stems from the fact that all the institutions are more than 100 years old.

The purpose of the Centennial Conference is to provide for athletic competition among institutions that share similar academic aspirations and are committed to the importance of the total educational experience for students engaged in sports.

The Conference comprises independent institutions whose student body are academically selective and whose mission and curricula are predominately in the tradition of liberal education. The member institutions share an educational culture that seeks to foster academic excellence.

Intercollegiate athletic programs are an integral part of the life of a member institutions and complement their educational objectives. Each institution provides a comprehensive, broad-based athletics program, available to all students. All varsity sports are expected to be treated equitably.

The supervision and oversight of the athletics programs is vested in the president of each institution. The day-to-day operation of the program is conducted by administrators of athletics.

Within an atmosphere of integrity and mutual trust, the member institutions pledge their commitment to the purpose and mission of the conference.

Submissions should be addressed to: Steve Ulrich, Exec. Secretary, Centennial Conference, Franklin & Marshall College P.O. Box 3003, Lancaster, PA. 17604-3003. For information, call (717)399-4463.

Thinking About Summer School?

Before enrolling for summer school courses it is necessary to stop by the Registrar's Office and obtain a permit and copy of the summer school policies and regulations. Approval for the proposed summer program must be secured with the faculty advisor and appropriate department chair. Summer school work will not transfer to Washington College without the appropriate approval.

The Earth Day Celebration will be held at Wilmer Park, not Worton Park. Tickets still available at the Book Store

Student Profile:

Kristen McMenamin

Kristen McMenamin, a Junior Psychology Major from Radnor, Pennsylvania, needs to be looked for around campus because, if you do not keep your eyes open, you could be run over. That is, when the fire siren goes off, you can see her pony tail bobbing up and down as she runs to the firehouse.

Kristen is a volunteer fire fighter for Chestertown and also works with the Emergency Medical Team. Along with this, classes, rowing crew, pledging the Zeta Tau Alpha fraternity, and working at the WC Deli, she says that she really has no other spare time. In fact, she thinks that she ought to move into the Deli because she is there so much.

This summer, she will be spending her time working for the WC Summer Conferences doing leg work. That is, she will be working as a caterer, making beds, doing basically whatever, but most of all she wants to have fun. This could be a pleasant change because when she is at home she works as an Assistant Manager at McDonalds™.

Contrary to popular opinion, Kristen does own some feminine clothing and says that she looks stunning in spiked heels.

When asked about her hobbies, she said that fire fighting was interesting enough. But she also finds time to read at the boathouse and basically to chill. When asked about men, she just sighed and giggled. Jeanine Bilderback described Kristen as bubbly, happy and hardworking. Valerie Neidig simply stated: "DUUUUUUUHHHH?!"

Her nickname, which was affectionately given to her by Miss Bessie in the WC Deli, came about because she was caught ordering waffles one evening around 6 p.m.

Poet Phillis Levin to Read at Lit House

There is no song in chalk,
No sail in ash.
But with your blood I'll mix the chalk into clay,
And with your breath I'll make the ashes dance
Into the forms that take your breath away.
—Phillis Levin, "Chalk and Ash"

In Spring, Washington College becomes filled with poetry and other English-major-type stuff. Bright-colored Broadsides are taped up on Bulletin boards and window glass around campus. Sophie Kerr weekend arrives and miniature English majors camp out in the Alumni House. Deadlines for the Washington College Review and the Veryan Beachan Prize are broadcasted everywhere. This — the WC 1993 student-edited literary magazine—prepares to come out. The Seniors have a reading. The Juniors and Sophomores have a reading. On May Day all those scary Lit House people get naked and have a reading. The WC SGA sponsors yet another reading to be held on Parent's Day. And Washington College hosts a visiting poet—who is going to give yet another reading!

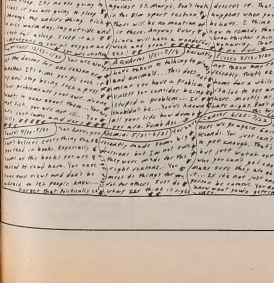
On Thursday, April 22, the poet Phillis Levin will visit Washington College. Phillis Levin is the author of Temples and Fields (University of Georgia Press, 1988), which won the Poetry Society of America's Norma Farber First Book Award. Her poems have appeared in many magazines and anthologies, including The Best American Poetry 1989, Partisan Review, Paris Review, Grand Street, The Nation, Poetry, and PN Review (Great Britain), and her work has been published in translation in Peru, Argentina, Slovenia, and Israel. She is the recipient of a grant from the Ingram Merrill Foundation, has been a resident fellow of the MacDowell Colony and The Virginia Center for the Creative Arts, and has been a fellow at Bread Loaf and the Sewanee Writers' Conference. She is an Assistant Professor of English and Creative Writing at The University of Maryland at College Park, and is the Senior Editor of Boulevard. (Press Release)

Phillis Levin will be reading on Thursday at 4:30 p.m. at the O'Neill Literary House. All who attend the reading will be invited to the following reception and dinner, which are also to be held at the Literary House. Everyone is invited to hear a fine poet read, and to feast with her afterwards! Come! Celebrate poetry! Celebrate food! Celebrate Spring at the Literary House!

Western Wind Blows at Washington College

The Washington College Concert Series is wrapping up its 91st season with a toe-tapping evening of vocal music, courtesy of Western Wind. The performance begins at 8:00 p.m. in Tawes Theatre of the Gibson Performing Arts Center.

Despite the recent explosion of a capella bands onto the contemporary music scene, the 23-year-old Western Wind still reigns supreme as the country's premiere a capella group. This co-ed sextet of singers employs a blend of baritone, tenor, countertenor, and soprano voices that result in a full, rich, flexible sound.



The Western Wind has played to captive audiences in the world's finest halls. The Kennedy Center, Carnegie Hall, and even NBC's "Today Show" have hosted the group to overwhelming response. One such concert inspired the New York Times to comment : "As fresh and stimulating a concert as this listener has attended in quite some time. Long may the Western Wind blow."

The band has also enjoyed an eclectic mix of engagements ranging from their show on National Public Radio, The Western Wind on the Air, and their soundtrack work on the Phillip Glass score to the film Koyaanisqatsi. Their extensive repertoire is likely diverse, with pieces ranging from everything from Renaissance to barber shop to jazz.

Tickets can be purchased at the door. $10 adults, free for students and youth under 18. For additional information, please call 778-7839.

Musical Picks from the Bitch and the Bore

As you might have guessed this is filler but that does not mean it has to be boring. Music is entertaining and sometimes art, depending on what one listens to, therefore this article is about music. Specifically it is about taste, or the lack thereof, in music. The reviewers are George Arthur Jamison, Jr.(Gemini and editor of this page, which is why he has the power to let this article go through) and Rae Brown(the one with the taste). We have racked our brains and come up with our ten favorite albums. After reading through our selections I feel that most people now have a definite insight to our lives(i.e. misery and boredom) so take these lists with a grain(or a mountain) of salt. Please note that the lists are in no particular order as it was hard enough for two indecisive people to even narrow down ten albums.

George's List

1. The Cure-Kiss Me Kiss Me Kiss Me
Bob Smith and the rest of them outdid themselves with this album. Depression, happiness, drugs, sex, etc. What else can a human ask for?(We can ask for money! I agree with this choice but I feel mine is better-R)

2. The Smiths-Louder than Bombs
Morrissey, Morrissey, Morrissey. What else needs to be said.(A lot more needs to be said. Tear down the shrine! Is there life after Morrissey, George? I doubt it.-R)

3. Tom Waits-Closing Time
Depressing jazz with satirical quips and odd lyrics and musical interludes.(No! This man is Cookie Monster on acid. I have been made to endure this album too many times. Run!-R)

4. Jane's Addiction-Nothing's Shocking
Currently, my favorite album to sit down and chill with after a good evening of whatever.(The only time I have listened to these people is when I have been to altered to move. Even then my soul cries out for release.-R)

5. 10,000 Maniacs-In My Tribe
Natalie, I want your children.(Pervert.-R)

6. The Sundays-Blind
Harriet, I especially want your children! I'm sorry I'm not British. Once again you have taken a talented women and made her selling point sex. As to being British, that is completely unnecessary. You are pompous enough.-R)

7. Prince- Sign o' The Times
He's a Gemini. Also, he leaves the public questioning his sexuality. Who cares? He is the self-proclaimed Prince of pop and lives up to those expectations.(His only downfall is that he is a Gemini. This man is sex.-R)

8. The Beatles- Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band
Perhaps the greatest album ever. Good to listen to when chilling and doing whatever.(God spare me from the driving album from hell. I have listened to this album on short trips and long trips. Yes, it is good but I have nightmares about driving through Tennessee with no other cassette but this one.-R)

9. Indigo Girls-Strange Fire
The first in a line of fine albums. They outdid themselves on their other albums but I love this one the most.(Yeah! He only likes this album best because it has a song from me on it(Crazy Game) . A good choice but definitely snag the other three to hear the progression of their talent.-R)

10. Epiphany-Edge of a New Day
One of my closest friends' bands. Personal meanings. If you would like a copy, give me a blank tape. I would love to share the beauty with anyone who wishes.(Argh! Okay so it's his friend and I have to admit that this one is better than the first one I heard but that does not mean that I would chose to listen to this of my own volition.-R)

Rae's List

1. Indigo Girls-Rites Of Passage
They are my women. They are me. I am them. Especially Emily! If you don't own a chics album you have not experienced life.(A little obsession goes a long, long way-G)

2. Uncle Bonsai-Boys Want Sex In The Morning
Yeah! Male bashing at it's finest. This album is a little obscure but the best things in life are worth searching for.(They are also worth dying for-G)

3. Annie Lennox-Diva
The women with the voice. Definitely an end of the day album. Sit down with a smoke and listen.(I agree, I guess. I am not totally with it today-G)

4. The Cure-Disintegration
Pure SEX! If you don't feel these rhythms you are not alive or you are just asexual. This is probably the Cure album everyone has but it's still worth it.(Liked it for a while, didn't like it for a while, now am starting to like it again-G)

5. Prince-Under The Cherry Moon
Even though he is a Gemini(I do not particularly care for that sign) I still think he is a musical genius. Once again this is an album made for sex. I Wonder U. (My second favorite Prince album. I think that you just want to get into his pants. Blame me for sexist views, will ya. Ever hear of reverse sexism? I think Prince would be offended. Or maybe not.-G)

6. Phoebe Snow
This is a woman I grew up listening to and I was without the music for a while but luckily good friend(you know who you are) lent me her copy recently. For those who are chemically endowed this is a pleasant change.(I can't believe that you like to get chemically endowed you tramp, you scamp.-G)

7. They Might Be Giants-Flood
Campy fun! Even Tiny Toons did a take on Istanbul (not Constantinople) . (When in doubt, turn to campy things.-G)

8. Sade-Love Deluxe
Sultry. If you want to seduce someone these are the tones to use(I am sensing a sex theme throughout my list).(Suppressed / Repressed are we?-G)

9. Disappear Fear-Live At The Bottom Of The Sea
Local band. Okay they're from Annapolis but they've been to the school enough times. I love folk music!(I know I'm lazy, but I'm so damn crazy....-G)

10. George Winston & Mary Streep-The Velveteen Rabbit
This may sound like a strange selection but this story makes me smile. It's great for a nap or for pointed selections on music for friends. A new twist on an old story.(An old twist on a new story?-G)

For those of you who read this article in its entirety, we are sorry for the mindless ramblings(I do not mindless ramble-R(yes, you do-G). Think of this as a WAC.He Said, She Said with a better cast. For those of you who like it, ask for more. For those of you who do not like it, you should not have read it. It's free speech in action. And if you have any ideas for future articles, please don't keep them to yourselves. Chyeah, you think that this was a total waste of space, you are right. I am suffering from MONO(maybe you are just bored-R.) and life has taken a downswing(nothing new).

I would like to leave you with a few last thoughts. Rae has not Repressed. George is unbearable when he is sick. The article took entirely too long. Rae has better taste in music than George or least more diverse taste. And finally, I embarrass him further. George's favorite rapping album is The Sound Of Music. Nice work here is done.

Sports Guys Need to Wake Up Now

To the Editor:

The coverage in the sports section on the women's softball team last week was abominable, not to mention the other women's teams. My main concern is the softball team; therefore, I will not address the poor coverage of all the other female sports. Last week the article on the softball team was the first since the season started, despite the fact that we started our season nearly three or four weeks ago. Nonetheless, it was a terrible article.

The coverage was unenthusiastic, cold, unmotivating, uninformative, inaccurate. (I became infuriated when thinking about it.) No stats were given except for the score of one of our four games and our record as of mid-last-week. The broken 21-game losing streak was mentioned, but it was not followed with additional information that may have given it more meaning.

Instead it passed on as an unimportant fact. If one of the sports editors ever decided to attend one of our games, or if they ever bothered to learn anything about this year's team, they would know a lot of talent and potential lie hidden within this year's team.

We have not only broken a 21-game losing steak, we have won more games than the past two seasons combined. We have also won three of our last four games including a 15-5 win over Lebanon Valley—considered a strong and heavily experienced team. I can also brag about the fact that more than half of this year's starting team is made up of freshmen. This only adds to the never-has-or-would-have-been-covered good news. Our current record is 3-4 and we hope realistically, not optimistically, to be over .500 by the end of the week.

I do not want to prolong this more than I have to so long as I make my point. The women's teams, regardless of the sport, deserve better coverage, not because they're having a good season but because they are athletes with feelings who work hard to achieve whatever is achieved.

If the sports editors have taken on the responsibility of informing the Washington College community on the weekly stats of all teams, may they do so adequately and equally, unlike last week's coverage that gave three-quarters page to a struggling baseball team (nothing against the baseball team, just against equality) with full batting stats and only gave a corner page to an up-and-coming softball team which has the potential of having one of the best if not the best record in Washington College history.

I could go on for ever about my many disappointments including the fact that only twice have females been chosen Newt's Player of the Week, but I'll save them for other letters.

Myrus Is Full Of... Himself

To the Editor:

This is in response to the letter written by Whitney W. Myrus in last weeks Elm. After we translated your letter into English, Mr. Senior Class President, we still didn't understand what the "f—" you were saying. Is Whitney singular, or are you in the habit of referring to yourself with the royal "we"? Is it we, you, or I: "As a campus leader we find support to be lacking in the student body. However, we can turn to fellow leaders for support, or rather, I thought you could." It seems to us that one of the most important qualities of a great leader is the ability to communicate. Communication, however, includes proper grammar.

As members of the senior class, we made an effort to become involved and offer input. We pointed out in several of the class meetings that many people in the senior class are underage and by law are not allowed in a bar. But this was ignored. Just recently a class meeting was held at Andy's. Consequently, we have no idea what the senior class is up to now, and apparently it doesn't matter what we think to those who are "leading" the senior class. Since we have not been choosing our own leaders and planning our own senior week activities. Where is the room for support in this situation? This is not a game of "follow the leader." A good leader is merely a follower of the group he is leading, and obviously you are not able to do this.

The most unified effort of leaders on campus that we remember was last year's Awareness Week. This was an event, for those who missed it, in which leaders from many campus organizations got together to "strengthen and broaden the community." We also "contend" that "great leaders ...are not those... who turn their nose[s] up [at] or boycott an event for one reason or another." Where were you, Whitney?

That was your choice. We've made ours. We're not complaining. We're setting our best feet forward — without you.

Applications are being accepted until March 19 by the Board of Publications for Editors-in-Chief for next year's Elm and Pegasus. Send letters through campus mail to Richard Striner. Other staff positions will be available after selection of the Editor-in-Chief.

"the newly conceived course merely replicates the problem of Forms of Lit. and Comp.; furthermore, the conception of the new course turns the course over to people who have had less formal writing training," Additionally, the source claimed that revising the Forms course does not address the larger writing problem. "There will still be the assumption that students will magically absorb good writing skills," the source said, also stating that the only way for the writing program to be constructively reworked is to begin teaching from a revisionist perspective. This perspective includes writing workshops, peer editing, and writing extensively.

Finally, this source stated that the freshman common course "does not change the burden" of professors who will still teach Forms. These professors will still be responsible for "teaching writing, introducing three genres of literature, and exploring the content of literature." Either way, "class time won't be given to hands-on instruction of writing."

Professor Bennett Lamond, Chair of the Department of English and a member of the Writing Committee, said that a new freshman common course would permit the faculty to be more flexible. He remarked that the committee has been exploring the option of teaching a one-semester course in composition that would ultimately free the English department from the responsibility of its current obligation to administer the Forms class to all freshmen.

Lamond mentioned the possibility that the new course for freshmen would be interdisciplinary and would involve team-teaching. In addition, he said that there might be another year-sequence course that would be offered in place of the current Forms course and would be included as an option for distribution.

He commented that while the new program would change the structure of the teaching situation within the English department, individual members will be made useful in different ways. "I would think that we could make more creative use of them," he said.

Dr. Thomas Cousineau, professor of English and Graduate Program Director, said that he favors the idea of a revised course for freshmen that would occur in one semester. "I can teach what I'm able to teach about composition in one semester," he noted.

He also said that a new course would offer the opportunity to fill in some "very obvious gaps" in the writing program. In particular, he mentioned the need for more classes in women's studies and classical literature — two areas that he claimed are "scandalously neglected."

Cousineau said that he did not think that the new course would drastically change the shape of the faculty because there would still be a need for professors to teach composition. But he did say that the shape of the current program is due for a change. "The format of the Forms class was decided long ago, and it has become routine. Periodic change is a good thing," he commented. Cousineau added that the hopes there will be room for professors to create highly individualized courses, rather than having to comply with a common syllabus.

Kathy Wagner, lecturer for the department of English, and Associate Director of the Literary House, is "in favor of making the change in content and construct" which the new freshman common course offers. However, she also feels that instructors should be allowed to create their own agenda and there should not be a common syllabus.

Wagner also stressed that the freshman common course should emphasize writing across the curriculum for both the students and faculty. Although most of the students at Washington College participate in the Forms course, the emphasis on writing is sometimes ignored when they enter other disciplines. Wagner states: "What goes through a student's mind when they receive a paper that has no corrections on it? Students are confused." She further said that students lose sight of the idea that writing is a process, and she hopes this problem will be addressed when professors from different areas are required to teach the freshman common course.

Wagner also suggested that students should "have a choice of courses" because "some students need two semesters of writing instruction." She feels this will enhance the opportunity for "writing tutorials because there will be a small student-faculty ratio."

The instructors at the writing lab also feel that the new freshman common course should teach students that "the discovery of writing is a tool for writing." Alice Goodfellow, Tutor and Coordinator for the Writing Program, also stated that the freshman common course should "open up the excitement and possibility of learning ... students should learn to be readers and writers for life."

One of the ways that this can be accomplished is to present writing as a revisionist process. Geraldine Fisher, another tutor at the writing lab, stated that one way that this can be accomplished is through peer editing. This "co-operative and collaborative" method would encourage students to re-work their writing.

All of the members of the writing lab responded positively to having faculty besides those in the English department teach writing. Gail Tubbs, a third tutor, stated that this course structure would allow students and faculty to partake in the "mutual exploration" of the subject matter. Fisher also commented that this format would eliminate the "authority figure" because the professor would be "outside their field of expertise."

In 1990 there were 293 prisoners serving sentences of one year or longer for every 100,000 people in America. This particular statistic has risen by 111 percent since 1980, and is a new record. Another record is that 2.35 percent of all adults are either on probation, on parole, in jail or in prison.

Some people may not see anything wrong in all of this. It's easy to ignore the problems in our prisons and jails if you don't have to work in one or occupy one as a prisoner. But the problems seem a lot closer to home when a violent offender escapes from a nearby pre-release facility and goes on a crime spree.

Clearly, when addressing the crisis in our correctional facilities we need to carefully balance financial considerations with the need to keep violent offenders separate from the rest of society. What it needed is not correctional reform, but a complete re-evaluation of the way society deals with criminal justice.

We, as a society, have not found anything which even approximates a real solution to the problem of crime. Rehabilitation of criminals has not worked. Longer sentences, tougher parole practices and indeterminate sentencing have not worked. Classification systems have not worked. Increased policing has not worked. I don't think that the concept of "community friendly" policing will work either.

Both conservatives and liberals are correct in some of their perceptions of crime. What is lacking in both approaches is an adequate solution to the problem of crime. One can either assume that we need more prisons, or one can assume that there are too many people in prison. The problem, in my view, is that the two approaches have not been combined.

One quick way to reduce the number of prisoners would be to decriminalize drugs. This is impossible in the current political climate, but I would not be surprised if it were to change in the next twenty years. When the baby boomers are senior citizens and the current senior citizens are dead, legalization of drugs will become a real possibility.

Additionally, legal drugs would reduce the number of people who contract the AIDS virus through intravenous drug use. It would also lower cost to addicts, who would then be able to maintain their habits through methods more socially acceptable than larceny and prostitution.

Another way of reducing the inmate population would be to change the way we treat property offenders. Stiffer sentences has not deterred burglars and car thieves. If it does not actually work in deterring property crime, then the only reason our society imprisons non-violent offenders is for revenge. Given the scope of the prison over-crowding problem, we need to ask ourselves if we can afford the financial cost of vengeance particularly

The cost of punishment for a given property crime almost invariably is more expensive than the property lost or damaged. A more constructive solution to this problem would be fining the criminal an amount equal to the monetary value of the property lost or damaged. This money would than be given to the victim.

Imprisoning white-collar criminals is also a mistake. We spend entirety too much money on the so called "country club prisons." The real solution to white collar crime is not to imprison these criminals, but to confiscate every last penny of their property. This would not only have a significant deterrent value, but would make a real dent in the deficit.

Under this program, the only people in prison would be violent offenders. And with the addition of new prisons, these offenders could be locked up for even longer sentences. We would no longer hypocritically pretend to rehabilitate prisoners in over-crowded, inhumane conditions. We would spare society the suffering induced by having fewer violent criminals on the street.

All of this, of course, is a program proposed for implementation within the current operating dimensions of the capitalist system. Of course, after the revolution, we will still need prisons. Capitalism has perverted human consciousness in such a way that the criminal mentality will be with us for a long time to come. Undoubtedly, the crime problem is a symptom of the alienation caused by capitalism, and will be a factor in the demise of capitalism.

Of course, some people might disagree with this hypothesis. That's fine, but if you do disagree, I'd like to hear from you. Quite frankly, I'd like to hear a theory on this topic which holds water; most of the ideas which have been put forward lack explanatory value.

Capitalism objectifies and dehumanizes people by indoctrinating them in the imperisonal ideology which justifies appropriation of surplus value. This is the real root of crime, along with the poverty and desperation produced by capitalism. Is it a coincidence that America, the most advanced capitalist state, is also the state which finds it necessary to imprison the highest proportion of its population? It is not. The more advanced the state of capitalism becomes in a given society, the more criminal its members become.

Where Do All the Bottles and Cans Go?

A 1992 graduate of Washington College last year, Michael Tyson majored in Spanish, studied abroad in Spain, and was active in the music department. He now resides in Chestertown and works for Infinity Recycling, Inc.

The long-awaited weekend arrives at Washington College. It's time for you to take a break, set aside at least a few hours away from the pressures of studying and due dates, and relax. You've heard there are three parties going on this weekend and you plan to let loose, go to them all. Or, perhaps you're not the kind to go so wild, or maybe you're just not up to it this time. So instead of drinking cans and cans and bottles and bottles of beer at the parties, you might relax with a small group of friends, order a pizza, and drink cans and cans and bottles and bottles of soda while watching movies all night long.

Come Sunday morning, you've had your fill; it's time to sleep off that hang-over, or simply, to sleep, and then to start worrying about that paper due on Monday, or that exam on Tuesday ...

But, wait a minute. Look at all those cans and bottles! They're overflowin' those containers at the back door of the Snack Bar, they're piled around small containers in the dorms' hallways, and they're stacked in boxes and bags in and around the metal barrels by the quad. Where do they all go? What happens to them? Maybe you've seen a cleaning person gather them up and take them outside, or someone in a truck with a trailer come and take the barrels away, leaving empty ones in return, but what?

Infinity Recycling, Inc., founded in 1989 by Ford and Marilee Schumann (both graduates of WC), collects glass bottles and jars, steel and aluminum cans, as well as paper, newspaper, brown paper bags, cardboard, and various types of metals, from over 30 collection stations, from Wilmington, Delaware to Vienna, Maryland, including Washington College.

But before I get into what we do, let me back track to cover all four steps of the recycling process.

The first step is source separation. This term means the sorting of recyclable materials right after they are used. All consumers, that is, anyone who buys and uses goods — you, your friends, your family, your professors, President Trout, me, and other workers at recycling companies — must participate in this first and most important step in order to make recycling work. The community and local recycling company must communicate with each other in order to have an effective recycling program. Everyone must understand what they can and cannot recycle and how to prepare their recyclables for collection.

Let me take a moment to summarize what exactly is proper preparation. To be brief, I'll just talk about bottles and cans.

- Separate everything according to the labels on the container. (If your hall uses its own collection, they should be labeled like ours in order to avoid any confusion). Put colored glass into the appropriate container (note that blue glass, such as "Clearly Canadian" bottles, goes in the green glass container), and put aluminum cans in their proper bin.
- Remove the lids of all the glass bottles and jars before putting them into their proper container. Throw the lid in a trash can. If you leave the lid on your drink it will eventually be removed. However, disposing of it yourself makes our production a lot neater and more valuable, and makes the processing for us and other subsequent companies a lot smoother.
- Please deposit emptied bottles, jars and cans only. If you haven't finished your bring, give it to somebody else to finish or pour the rest out before putting it into its proper container. Full or partially full bottles and cans get too messy when we process them.
- No trash. Please do not put trash in the recycling containers; put it in the trash can.
- No exceptions. For example, when we say "clear glass bottles and jars only" it really has to be that way. The more other things, or contaminants, mixed with the specified recyclable item, the more time we have to spend removing them. Even if a green bottle or an aluminum can—both perfectly recyclable—is put into a container marked "clear glass," it is a contaminant, and we have to remove it.

Once everything is separated at the source properly, we pick it up and take it back to the recycling yard. Now begins the second step: processing. Currently, my specialty at Infinity is the processing of glass bottles and jars. I dump the barrels of them onto a conveyer belt. As they go along I pick out anything that doesn't belong —wrong-colored bottles, cans, bits of trash, and any type of glass that cannot be recycled at Infinity — broken windows, drinking glasses, coffee pots, and casserole dishes, to name a few. When they reach the top of the conveyer they fall into a bottomless steel box onto very rapidly spinning hammers which smash them to bits. The pieces fall into a metal bin. Once the bin is full I dump it into what's called a dump trailer—a huge metal bin on wheels.

The way aluminum and steel cans are processed is similar to that of the glass bottles and jars. Just like the glass, we dump the cans onto a conveyer belt, and again pick out any contaminants — glass bottles, plastic bottles, shiny silvery paper that is very easily mistaken for aluminum foil, and bits of trash that never made it to the trash can.

After we remove the contaminants, a magnet in the conveyer belt pulls the steel cans downward into a can flattener. Once flattened, they ride on another conveyer belt which drops them into a dump trailer. Meanwhile, the aluminum cans have not been attracted by the magnet, and have fallen into a large box. When it's full we carry it to a separate machine, an aluminum can flattener, and dump it on the conveyer belt. Once again we pick out any contaminants that were missed on the first conveyer belt, such as aluminum foil. (Although foil is recyclable and we do process it at Infinity, it can not be mixed with aluminum cans.)

The cans fall into a flattener and then are shot by a high-powered fan through a metal tube into another trailer. When the clear glass dump trailer is full it can hold about twenty tons of crushed bottles and jars. A full steel can dump trailer holds about ten tons and the full aluminum trailer six tons of aluminum cans.

Now the trailers are ready to be sold to other companies who will clean them even more to get the materials to as pure a state as possible before melting them down. Afterwards the glass will be turned into new glass bottles and jars while the steel and aluminum cans will be turned into many products, from new steel cans to automobiles and from aluminum cans to aluminum bicycle frames.

As the recycling process starts with us — that is, the consumers — it also ends with us. In the fourth step, to bring the process full circle, we must buy products made from recycled material. That is where the money ultimately comes from to support the recycling industry.

After this summary, I hope to have made the recycling process clearer and a little more tangible for you. Now, I would like to talk specifically about the recycling program at Washington College.

With the recyclables that Infinity collects from WC, another step must be added — namely the entire first step of source separation. We take back barrels and plastic trash bags full of a mixture of different colored glass bottles, beer cans, cardboard boxes, plastic bottles, paper board cases, wet napkins, plastic cups, cigarette butts, and other pieces of trash. Out of all the things on this list we only accept glass bottles and metal cans from the Snack Bar, dining hall and dorms. Although we process a lot of cardboard we do not take it from WC; and although thin-necked plastic bottles (soda and milk bottles mainly) are recyclable here in Kent County's program, we presently do not accept any plastic whatsoever. Or trash.

Students need to be aware that they play the most important part in the recycling program at the college. You are the source separators. When you allow your bottles, cans, and trash to be mixed in the recycling containers you not only waste our time and money, but you also do not take responsibility for your part in your recycling program. I would like to be very clear that I am not slagging your hand, shaming you and telling you that you'd better recycle or else. Rather, I'm giving you the facts and asking you to make a choice.

There are three possibilities: 1) continue the way it is now and Infinity Recycling will discontinue its program at WC; 2) Tell us you would rather not recycle and Infinity will discontinue its program at WC, or 3) make a change in how you collect your recyclables so that they're neater and cleaner, and Infinity will keep processing them.

I realize these possibilities may seem drastic and may come as a surprise. Chances are nobody ever told you how important it is to recycle cleanly and neatly. That's okay. But now it's time to learn.

If everybody is informed it really isn't that hard to have a good recycling program. The hardest part is changing old habits. Other coworkers at Infinity and I have thought of three ways to save the program. First, get the RAs together. Have hall meetings to educate and to encourage good participation. Second, organize support throughout the whole campus. If every SGA-sponsored club donated some of its funds, there would be more than enough money to establish a new and much improved recycling program.

With our feedback we could work something out. Lastly, spread the word. You who have read this article, remember the tips given earlier and let someone else know before they throw a contaminant into a barrel. Suggest that your RA have a hall meeting to talk about how to recycle. Only a little time and effort are necessary on your part in the beginning. After that it's a matter of remembering and informing the new-comers to WC. It's up to you. Just as the citizens of Kent County make recycling happen in the county, it is the students who will make recycling happen at WC. Personally, I see a lot of potential in the student body and a big opportunity to say — in spite of an administration that is very slow to take the lead, in spite of others who just don't care — we're going to make it work, and then we'll do it.

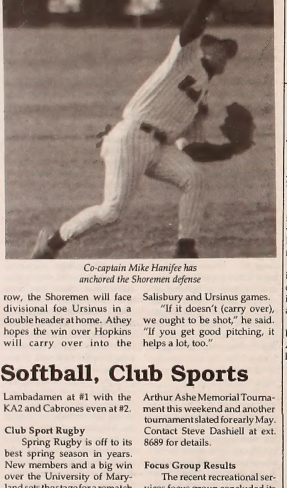
Baseball Overcomes Hopkins Jinx Team Improves With 2-2 Week

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

On Tuesday, the Washington baseball team defeated the Johns Hopkins Bluejays for the first time since 1990. In the second game of a double header, senior co-captain Joe Boan shutout Hopkins 5-0 to improve Washington's record to 7-10.



"It was a good ball game," Coach Ed Athey said. "We played well in the infield, and we got some help from their pitchers who were kind of wild."

Strong play in the infield has been a rarity for the Shoremen this year, as was evidenced in game one. Although Keith Whiteford pitched well, the defense was suspect in an 8-3 loss.

"We had two or three errors in the first inning that really took us out of the ball game," Athey said. "After the second inning of the first game, it was good baseball on both sides."

Last week, the Shoremen split a double header with UMES. Yesterday, Washington played Salisbury State at home. The results were not available at press time. Tomorrow, the Shoremen will face divisional foe Ursinus in a double header at home. Athey hopes the win over Hopkins will carry over into the Salisbury and Ursinus games.

"If it doesn't (carry over), we ought to be shot," he said. "If you get good pitching, it helps a lot, too."

Co-captain Mike Hanifee has anchored the Shoremen defense

Softball Wins

Denise Hakanson exploded for a four-for-four day, including three doubles in the Shorewomen softball team's 11-7 win over Swarthmore. This week's Newt's POW, Hakanson also drove in four runs and stole two bases.

Team co-captain Tara Rathal scored three runs and added two hits. Michelle Chin also contributed two hits with two runs scored.

Diana Holton improved her pitching record to 3-4 on the season with a 7-inning complete game effort.

The team's record now stands at 3-4 after splitting a double header with Lebanon Valley and the Swarthmore win. The team is on a 3-1 streak after dropping the first three games of the season.

Club Lacrosse Beats Washington D.C. Club

Brandon White
Staff Writer

Last Saturday the Washington College lacrosse club went out and faced Washington Lacrosse Club of D.C. and defeated them by a score of 14-9.

The Shoremen struck first in the opening minutes with two quick goals. However, Washington D.C. quickly retaliated and tied it up.

During the rest of the half, both teams alternated scoring. At the half, Washington D.C. had taken a one-goal lead. Most of the goals scored by Washington D.C. in the first half occurred during man-up situations, due to the very tight game that the referees were calling.

The Shoremen regrouped during halftime and came out strong. They took the lead in the third quarter and maintained it for the win. The high scorers of the game were Gibby Semmes (with a game high of three goals and one assist) and Benny Lamanna (with two goals and two assists). The lacrosse club returns in a week to face the Penn State Nittney Lions tomorrow at 2:00 p.m.

Rec Sports Softball, Club Sports

Intramural Hi-Comp Softball

The Hi-Comp intramural softball season openers were played on Tuesday afternoon with Kappa Alpha and the Theta's grabbing commanding wins over the Phi Delts and the Smigs. The Theta's used a six-run last inning rally to defeat the Phi Delts, and the KA's tucked the Smigs away in a four-inning shortened game due to the ten-run slaughter ruling.

High Street and the other Hi-Comp team opened yesterday. The Pre-Season picks for '93 softball favor the KA's who have won more softball titles (six in eight tries) than any other team in recent Rec Sport History. The Theta team will vie for the title come tourney time with the Phi Delts, High Street and the Smigs rounding out the league.

Co-Rec League

The defending Co-Rec softball champs return for a run at the title against the Cabrones and Kappa Alpha. This year the faculty and staff have entered as an exhibition team (Goobers)—just too much talent to be included in the standings. Pre-Season picks place the Lambadamen at #1 with the KA2 and Cabrones even at #2.

Club Sport Rugby

Spring Rugby is off to its best spring season in years. New members and a big win over the University of Maryland sets the stage for a rematch with UMBC and the President's Cup on May 1. A new practice field with goal posts has been developed behind Cardinal and this will go a long way to stabilize the sport on campus. Women's rugby has begun the process of initiating a program with an instructional session scheduled in late April.

Club Sport Lacrosse

Two tough losses on the road to Chesapeake College and Villa Julie College opened the season. Two rematch games at home with additional games are being planned. Next year's club team enters the National Collegiate Lacrosse League with a full eight-game schedule against all Division I teams (Loyola, University of Maryland, Hopkins, Navy, Towson State, and UMBC).

Club Sport Tennis

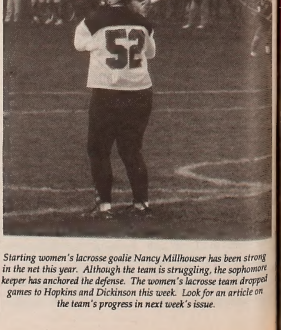
Program sponsors the Arthur Ashe Memorial Tournament this weekend and another tournament slated for early May. Contact Steve Dashiell at ext. 8689 for details.

Focus Group Results

The recent recreational services focus group concluded its small group survey of students and the results will be used to improve the Recreational Sports 1994 program. Preliminary data suggests several areas of interest:

—The Johnson LFC is meeting student needs in design and schedule.

—There is an interest in expanding club sport opportunities with increased funding for club teams and increased opportunites for non-competitive clubs.



—Additional fields and open spaces should be developed.

—Lighting for the running track on Kibler should be installed.

—Outdoor basketball courts and sand volleyball courts should be installed.

—Increased access to the waterfront for recreational use.

—More instructional classes should be offered.

Starting women's lacrosse goalie Nancy Millhouser has been strong in the net this year. Although the team is struggling, the sophomore keeper has anchored the defense. The women's lacrosse team dropped games to Hopkins and Dickinson this week. Look for an article on the team's progress in next week's issue.

Washington Works Over Widener Men's Lacrosse Moves Up to 8-1

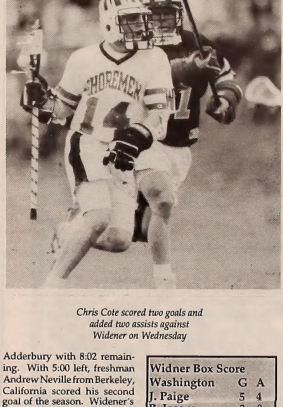
John Murray
Co-Sports Editor

On Wednesday, the Shoremen lacrosse team improved their record to 8-1 with a 28-6 pounding over Widener University. Jason Paige led the attack with five goals and four assists, and Harris Murphy dished out a season-high seven assists.

"Offensively, we're moving the ball well," Coach Terry Corcoran said. "But we're going to have to raise our level of play defensively."

Widener opened the scoring 12 seconds into the contest on a goal from Ryan Price. However, Washington scored 18 unanswered goals over a 21:31 span beginning with a goal from Chris Cote with 12:16 left in the first period.

Murphy assisted on six of the first seven goals. Washington led 9-1 after the first quarter with Greg Lawler, Paige (three times), Greg Mouracade (twice), Chris Sanchez and Stu Warner following Cote to the goal.



Sanchez opened the second period with a goal assisted from Paige. Paige followed with a goal at the 14:10 mark, and Lawler scored unassisted with 13:19 remaining in the second quarter. Fourteen seconds later, defenseman Greg Miller made a run upfield and scored on an another assist from Paige.

Murphy, Brian Flynn, and Mouracade all tallied to make the score 16-1 with 10:47 remaining in the first half. Coach Corcoran emptied the bench at that point and immediately got two unassisted goals from freshman Bart Jaeger to make the score 18-1.

Jeff Silpolu stopped the Shoremen's scoring streak with the last two goals of the first half. However, Cote and Paige both scored before a minute had passed in the third quarter, extending the Washington lead back to 17.

Ryan Price scored his second goal of the game for Widener with 13:48 remaining in the third quarter, making the score 20-4. However, over the next 10:06, Warner, Jamie Carver, Jaeger, George Adderbury, Tom Hiebler, and Mike McDermott all scored in succession giving the Shoremen a game-high 22 goal lead at 26-4.

Adam Prince ended the Widener scoring drought with the first goal of the fourth quarter. However, McDermott tallied on an assist from

Chris Cote scored two goals and added two assists against Widener on Wednesday

Adderbury with 8:02 remaining. With 5:00 left, freshman Andrew Neville from Berkeley, California scored his second goal of the season. Widener's Pat Ryan closed out the scoring with 2:30 remaining with the final score 28-6.

In the groundball department, sophomore Jerry Davis led the Shoremen with six. Jaeger and Janairo Hernandez each picked up five loose balls, and Mouracade, Carver, and Hiebler each had four.

Last Saturday, the Shoremen defeated Franklin & Marshall 11-9. Lawler scored five goals in the winning effort with Paige adding three.

"Franklin & Marshall's a good team," Corcoran said. "I expected it to be a tough game. We did what we had to do to win."

Corcoran anticipates a tough contest on Saturday against trival Washington & Lee who is ranked 10th in the country in Division III. Washington is ranked 4th.

"Washington & Lee's going to be a real big game," Corcoran said. "We have to come out this weekend and play excited."

The Washington & Lee game will take place amidst the Parent's Day activities on Saturday. An Alumni lacrosse game is also scheduled.

NEWT'S
Player of the Week

NEWT'S CHESTERTOWN BAR
Trust Me
(410) 778-9819

This week, there were way too many candidates for the revered Newt's Player of the Week. Joe Boan shutout Hopkins 5-0. Renee Guckert continued her strong play on the women's lacrosse team. Harris Murphy recorded seven assists against Widener, and Jon Lundberg recorded his eighth win as a Shoremen. Tara Rathal continued her consistent play for the softball team. And Dave Cola once again amazed us by showing off his ability to take a licking and keep on ticking (nice shot, Kraus!).

However, receiving the honor of this week's POW is Rathal's teammate, Denise Hakanson. A freshman from New Jersey, Hakanson has recovered from a late start due to swimming, and an early season injury to begin producing offensively.

The right-hand hitting left fielder is batting a robust .667 for the season. Against Swarthmore, Hakanson went four-for-four with three doubles, four RBIs, and two stolen bases.

With all eight spring teams performing well at the moment, this swami/editor says every team will win on Parent's Day weekend. Support the Shoremen this weekend as every team goes into action.

Hey, did anyone else notice that as big as Berger's dog is getting, it's hard to tell them apart? Oh, Bucknor, you better go the batting cages this weekend.

If you like Parent's Day tomorrow, just thank Max.

SCC's Recent Activity Doesn't Account for Last Two Years

J. Tarin Towers
Editor-in-Chief

On April 15 the Student Conduct Council heard the third and fourth cases of the semester (the first two involved the Middle Hall break-in and were reported in last week's Elm).

The third case: Curtis Millington was operating a jeep March 26 with five student passengers returning from Newt's Hillside Tavern; the party cut through the graveyard and proceeded to traverse the women's lacrosse field, doing 'donuts' and generally tearing up the field.

The jeep was spotted by a campus security truck.

The SCC found Millington responsible for vandalism. He was sentenced to 10 hours community service to be completed with Buildings & Grounds lawn crew by May 3; he is also financially responsible for any and all repairs needed to the field.

The fourth case: three WC students, Jon Lundberg, Bart Jaeger, and Mike McDermott were 'wrestling around' in the basement of Wicomico. Subsequently the group broke four ceiling tiles, damaged abandoned property (including some chairs) and spat blood and saliva on a wall.

The trial, originally scheduled for April 1, was rescheduled due to student conflict with a Political Science field trip. The subsequent date, April 15, was later also found to be inconvenient to the group: the SCC trial would interrupt lacrosse practice.

SCC Chair Bridgette Winchester would not re-re-schedule the trial but offered the three the option of being represented by a peer.

Ron Lockhart represented the party, which was found responsible for vandalism and given an official college warning.

Lundberg, Jaeger and McDermott are responsible for paying or doing labor for all damages to the Wicomico Basement, as well as doing 15 hours of community service with the Maintenance division of Buildings and Grounds by April 26.

Winchester told the Elm in an interview Wednesday that these four cases heard in the past month are the first heard by the SCC since January of 1991.

"Many cases have come up this year that were appropriate for the SCC to hear," she said, "however the body was bypassed in favor of Student Affairs or the All-Campus Judiciary."

According to the Student Handbook, said Winchester, a now-defunct body called the Conduct Screening Board supposedly screens all disciplinary cases and decides through what channel the case will be heard. Apparently, the current process is somewhat arbitrary.

"Students do not have a chance to be heard by their peers — the judicial system [at WC] is much more effective when the judgment is up to the peers rather than having a statement handed down from high atop Mount Casey or the Buntagon," said Winchester.

Winchester conducted an informal survey during many of the RA interviews to find out what students knew about the campus judicial system. "I found they had little or no knowledge of the SCC — and these are some of the most outgoing and responsible members of the college community," she said.

"This demonstrates a lack of awareness in the student body as a whole."

Before students decide what they do or do not like about the Judicial System at WC, she said, they should read the section of the Student Handbook which deals with these issues — although they are being reexamined by the college.

Fight Prompts Caution About Off-Campus Parties

J. Tarin Towers
Editor-in-Chief

An off-campus fight which occurred last weekend has been causing a stir in the local papers.

At approximately 2 a.m. last Sunday morning a fight broke out at a Pomona residence rented by several WC students. A non-student apparently provoked an altercation which resulted in three hospitalizations and several minor injuries.

Andrew C. Wood was the most serious casualty; he was flown to Shock Trauma in Baltimore and is back at school.

David M. Kraft and Matthew P. Mullin were treated for a head injury and a split lip, respectively, at Kent and Queen Anne's Hospital.

Nancy E. Whiteman, Sonja E. Wilson and R. Jon O'Connor also suffered minor injuries in the fight, which is currently under investigation by the Kent County Sheriff's Office.

Although no charges had been filed at press time, the Sheriff's Office is taking statements and expects some assault and battery reports.

WC Security Director Jerry Roderick said he is assisting in the investigation. "We're letting the appropriate authorities pursue this; we'll help wherever we can." He added that local reporters "keep pushing the question of what the college is going to do," especially in regard to the alcohol violations by WC students.

"Clearly, there have been some questions raised as to the nature of the party, the amount of alcohol being consumed ... initially, no one was going to touch that," Roderick said. "But the issue has been turned over to Marty Stetson, the alcoholic beverage inspector for Kent County."

Unfortunately, said Roderick, "this is going to affect future off-campus parties and how they're viewed by the local law enforcement."

He pointed out that, aside from the important issues of drunk driving and serving liquor to minors, parties which charge at the door for alcohol consumption are in essence selling liquor without a license — and often selling to minors.

"We're all concerned about events like this — we're looking as to how to best deal with these situations in the future," Roderick said. "Incidents like these bring issues to light that we all have to look at — this is a serious incident where this kid was injured."

Roderick advises other students to take care in organizing any off-campus events; the Spring Sig Farm Party has apparently been canceled due to fears of heavy law enforcement.

Campus Crime Increases as Semester Draws to Close

Jerry Rode Rick, Director of WK Security, would like to remind all students that spring often sees an increase in the crime rate on campus. Students "with their minds on other things" should take care to protect themselves and their property both in and outside of the dorms. "Exercise common sense," he stated.

• On Thursday April 8 between 11 and 11:30 p.m. (directly before Spring Break), a student on the first floor of Caroline dorm who was studying with her window open reported that a young black male tried to gain entrance to the building through her open window.

Rode Rick wants students to make sure their windows are secured, particularly first-floor windows; caution should be exercised especially when the student leaves the dorm or sleeps.

• On April 13 the Theta Chi fraternity reported the theft of their fraternity banner from the Dorchester Lounge. The banner is worth about $100, and the Theta's would like to see it returned.

• On April 15 at 2:10 a.m. a student kicked in an East Hall basement window. The student admitted to causing the damage, and the case has been referred to the Student Conduct Council.

• On April 20 a motor vehicle accident occurred in the Talbot-area parking lot. Jason Ronstadt, driving a Toyota 4x4 pickup, was backing up when the truck's bumper hooked that of a Mazda MX-3 owned by Amy Bickley and parked in the lot. The bumper was torn from the car. Ronstadt came forward immediately and the incident has been reported to the Chestertown Police.

• Security Officer Ken Haines reports a strange rash of vending machine thefts which occurred from Tuesday April 13 to this past Tuesday. The Coca-Cola delivery man, who comes to WK on Tuesdays, reported a significant loss in cash, but not product, from one week to the next. Seven different Coke machines were hit, ranging from the LFC to some of the

Reality Check

I woke up in a cold sweat from the strangest dream I ever had. First of all I dreamt I had made it to all my classes and had even made it to some of them on time. "This can't be real," I thought, and I rubbed my eyes and went to go to the bathroom.

As I got out of bed I stepped over piles of clothes on the floor. Bewildered, I said to myself, "I know I've done laundry in the past two months. How odd."

But I had a sinking feeling that this was really my room and that yes, I was out of socks.

I stumbled into the kitchen and made my way into Tanya's room. She was sitting on her bed and reading Shakespeare. "How's your paper coming," she asked.

"This can't be reality," I murmured. "That paper's not due until the end of April."

"It is the end of April," she said quizzically. "Only two weeks of classes left."

"NO!" I cried. I must still be dreaming! yeah, that's it. I looked around slowly. I didn't want her to know how freaky this all seemed. It was as if I had suddenly crossed cyberspace to live in another world, and I was afraid that this was reality.

I made my way back to my room and turned on the radio. The announcer was making a joke about how many Branch Davidians you could fit in a Yugo.

Now this had to be fiction. Jim Jones was dead, right? There aren't any cults in our time... well. Not anymore. Jesus. How obscene! How ... apocalyptic. Shit. This had to be a movie. Only with no visuals.

Speaking of visuals. A piece of laundry just got up and crawled under my bed. Naw. I was hallucinating.

"Okay," I said out loud. "when does the scary music start?"

As if on cue, the radio began to play "Whip It."

"I LEFT THE EIGHTIES WHERE THEY BELONGED!" I snarled.

"IN THE CAC!"

I shot the radio, and sat down and smoked a cigarette. "When did I start smoking?" I asked myself, bewildered.

"October of 1990," a little voice answered. I shot a furtive look across the room. The voice seemed to have been coming from somewhere in a pile of t-shirts.

I shook my head and, resigned, went back to bed.

I was awoken by the ring of the phone.

"Urgh." I ran and answered it. "Hello?" I tried to sound as awake as possible.

"Hello, Tarin?"

I checked. It was me. "Yes?" I said carefully.

"Hi, this is Lori Burke, internship coordinator for Rolling Stone."

"Uh, Hi!"

"I have decided to offer you the internship at Rolling Stone. Are you still interested?"

"Uh, yeah! yes! I'm definitely interested!"

I was really confused now. I went to the calendar in a daze to tell her when I could start. This had to be a movie. Was I on candid camera?

"No," said the little voice on the floor.

Shit. I missed history class. But I got the call from Rolling Stone. Wait. I was awake. I was. Oh. My. God.

I called Brian. He reminded me I hadn't written my editorial yet. Yes, this was reality. I called Richard Harwood. (!) He told me to call Bill Greider. (!!) (the National Editor. And all around cool guy) I called Bill Greider. (!!!)

And I sighed, lit a cigarette, and looked for a clean pair of socks. So this is reality. Hmm.

Hessey Clarifies WC's Budget Deficit Situation

To the Editor:

I would like to commend your effort to report on the College's finances in the Elm issue of April 16, 1993. Operating deficit projections are a difficult topic to explain even for me at times.

Perhaps I can add some clarification for the campus community and truly dispel fears about a deficit that is in the low six figure range. As you noted it is my expectation that the final deficit will be in the range of $300,000 to $350,000, which was the range predicted in September when the operating budget was adjusted for the financial aid overrun and departmental budgets were reduced to offset the major portion of the additional financial aid costs. It should be pointed out that a deficit of this size accounts to less than 2 percent of the total budget.

There has since September been further belt-tightening and budget reductions, and athletics have not been spared. In fact the amount budgeted for athletics this year is more than $75,000 less than expended for athletics last year. Additional cost savings are expected by year end. The reduction was not apparent due to some athletics costs being included in auxiliaries, which is not an error of formatting by the controller, as you reported, but a common classification of costs at colleges and universities.

An additional corrections to your article is that June revenues from Summer Conference programs are estimated at $250,000, not $25,000 as reported.

Finally, I would add that the faculty and staff have been extremely cooperative in holding costs to a minimum and whatever the final deficit turns out to be will be in large measure to their credit.

Stop Picking on Sports Writers & Ball Players

To the Editor:
RE: Ms. Goenaga

Nice letter. Taking out the complaints, it could have been a nice softball article. It was an understandably heated criticism of the Elm's sports journalism.

Students, in life, if you want something done, do it yourself! Nothing is going to be handed to you.

I'm going to get heat about this, may even be called a chauvinist, or a sexist or whatever garbage. Do I care? Glass house and all of that.

If anyone out there thinks they can write good journalism about sports issues, grass-growing festivals or whatever, do it! I love writing for my sport (rowing), and about the people in it whom I admire, women included (my first article was about a women's team!) Insinuating that the sports writers are sexist is a cheap shot, which is disappointing from such a well thought out letter.

So think this one out Ms. Goenaga; you play softball? Write about softball! Put your money where your mouth is! Produce a solution, don't whine about the problem.

Duke Krieger

P.S. Also, there has been some griping and un-called for words spoken to the varsity women about their race on Saturday, and their entirely respectable finish. To these people, I say you are spineless people who have no class. These women are model athletes, and class ladies everyone of them. I know they do not need me to defend them. They're strong enough to defend themselves., but they are also my friends and the contribution they make to this school is vastly underestimated. I am sick of their second-hand treatment and it will hence forth cease. End of discussion. —DK

CRISIS

Scott Ross Koon

The guilty verdicts rendered against Sgt. Stacey Koon and Officer Lawrence Powell have been hailed by the press as a proof of equal justice in America. The army of occupation in the heart of L.A. is standing down as the threat of rioting diminishes. Last Monday, the covers of many major metropolitan newspapers carried photos of jubilant Angelenos celebrating the convictions.

I, for one, am not joining the celebratory orgasm which seems to be accompanying these verdicts. We must not let the media hoopla cloud our vision to the reality of the situation, which is that these men, acting on the authority of the city of Los Angeles, brutally beat Rodney King and almost got away with it. If it were not for the rioting which followed the verdicts from the first trial, federal authorities would not have brought civil rights charges against the officers.

The beating of Rodney King was not an unusual occurrence. Cro-magnon cops like Koon and Powell are not so unusual as some would have us believe. The only difference between the King beating and normal police policy is that the beating of Rodney King was captured on video and became a permanent part of the American psyche.

Sgt. Koon maintained all along that the actions of the officers were entirely consistent with police policy. Sgt. Koon must know whereof he speaks, since he has a master's degree in criminology. So if the officers violated King's civil rights, and if they were also following normal police procedure, then normal police procedure is a violation of civil rights.

After the beating, Officer Powell boasted that he hadn't beaten up anyone that badly "in a long time." While this may be comforting to some, I wonder exactly how often Powell did beat people up that badly-and how often his comrades at the LAPD will continue to do so in the future.

At some point in the recent past, many metropolitan police forces ceased to be civil police and began to be armies of occupation. The conduct of police today bears less resemblance to "Adam 12" than it does to the Israeli Army in West Jerusalem.

Policemen in America have developed a siege mentality. If police trade journals were an accurate reflection of the reality on the streets today, then cops would be friendly, polite, professional and vigilant.

But this is not the case. We would like the police to be morally better people than society as a whole. They are not. Our police are selected from the society as a whole. If they are racist, it is because our society is racist. If they are brutal, it is because society is brutal.

When I walk around big cities I am less fearful of crime than I am distrustful of the police. Naturally, police departments around the country are a mixed bag; some are professional, some are hotbeds of corruption, inefficiency and harassment.

The function of the police is not only "To serve and protect," but also "To keep the poor in line." The real source of the rioting which erupted after the first verdict was the gross in-

Open Forum: Looking at Labels and Language

Erin Kathleen Rowe is someone you should know. When you're feeling low, she tells you "go go go". She hadn't read Edgar Allen Poe before she came to WAC. Now she has. You better believe it. Next time you see Erin Kathleen Rowe, tell her "way to go". Her aunt lives in Kansas. Kansas: it's good enough for Erin's aunt.

Erin Rowe

Have you ever noticed that people need a label to file you under in their minds? They can't stand not to have something to identify you with — i.e., "jock," "freak," "liberal" "conservative," and a myriad of other things people try to throw at you from day to day.

I had a particularly frustrating conversation with a man who asked if I were a Christian. "No," I immediately said. Apparently, I didn't look either Jewish or Muslim or Hindi to him, so he pursued with: "Oh, so you're an atheist. "No," I corrected him. He asked then if I were agnostic. I replied again in the negative. "Then what are you?" he cried, exasperated. I had no answer for him, except: "An Erinist."

Now, I haven't begun a cult religion based on my teachers as Savior of the Universe, but I do have a definite and strong set of ethics, morals, and religious beliefs. However, they do not seem to conform to any existing labels, and this drives people crazy. Other things I have been accused of being: a Democrat, a "bleeding heart Liberal" (aside: what does that phrase mean, anyway? Don't we all have blood in our hearts? Forgive me if I am wrong, but isn't that the purpose of the organ?), a tree-hugger, a feminist, Politically Correct (because I used the term "Native American" and a lunatic (this is the least offensive to me).

I suppose you've guessed the pattern in what I've been called, so you already have a preconceived notion of, say, my political view. Although I have been known to occasionally accept one or more of these labels, or variations thereof, they never cease to annoy me. Why can't I just believe something, without having someone think I'm following some sort of doctrine or cant verbatim?

I am not pro-choice because it's part of the Democratic Party Platform, nor am I a Democrat because I am pro-choice. I used to be pro-life, but I "converted" after a lot of thought. I reject the label of Democrat. I am not. I reject "liberal" and "politically correct" because of the connotations behind them — connotations that I cannot agree with.

Recently, a big deal has been made out of language and its usage —i.e., in the so-called Politically Correct movement. How our language effects our thought is a fascinating subject to explore. My feelings on this

The Board

Last week's Board posed two questions, the first being "Silly Things Our Professors Have Said", the second being "You know you've been having a bad day at Wac when..." Neither of which are questions. I have nothing important to say other than that I thought the drawing of Dean Wubbels should have won the contest. So here are some of your most poignant responses to last week's questions, listed chronologically in order of when they will come back to ruin you. Profspeak:

Safety Info Inadequate

To the Editor:

It has come to my attention that the security measures on the Washington College campus have room for improvement. I am writing in regard to the escaped convict who was seen in the area during the first week in April. I only learn of the five-hour Maryland State Police search and subsequent departure of the escapee to another state in that week's issue of the Elm. I am sure that other students were not aware of the situation either; therefore, I propose a possible solution.

There needs to be greater communication between the campus security and the student body. The RA's could have been alerted to the escapee and broadcast the news to the students on their hall. Photographs of the escapee could have been posted around the campus warning students not to go out alone and to keep an eye out for him. I hope that better security measures are taken the next time this type of situation occurs.

are not that women should begin to call themselves "womyn" or any such nonsense, but a slightly different slant on the whole idea.

It comes from a conversation I had with a high-school Calculus teacher about languages. He's been to college for about eighteen years (no exaggeration) and had majored in everything at one time or another. Anyway, he told me that our language (and almost all modern languages) are what are called "object" languages. That means that the sentences revolve around nouns. For example: "I sat in the chair" or "I went to college". This means that everything pretty much stays the same all the time. If you left for college and then went back home, you are still "Mary" or "John" or whatever, and you haven't changed a bit.

However, in some Native American languages (I'm not going to argue this point. I'm not being PC, I'm being considerate. If you have a problem with it, pretend like it says "Indian", but I am not referring to those who live on the sub-continent) they have what are called "event" languages. There are no nouns. All their nouns have a prefix or a suffix that are verbs. Thus, everything is always moving and changing.

The fascinating aspect of this is when you look at the difference closer, you realize that in an "event" language nothing stays static, least of all people. People are always changing and moving and it's practically impossible to put them in a category or under a definite subheading, because there is nothing definite. Wowowowowowowow!

I guess the point is that I would get a lot less headaches if people would think in events, not objects. People don't stay the same. We are always changing. Even the earth under our feet is rotating. The planets and stars and entire universe revolves in one giant cosmic dance. Of course, it reduces a lot of stress sometimes to refer to a person in a certain manner —i.e., you bitch/asshole—but what it all comes down to in the end is respect. Respect for others and ourselves. (Wow, did I just sound like a Sunday School teacher to anyone else?)

Give up the status quo and keep moving.

equality in our society. Nowhere is the inequality of American society more easily apparent than Los Angeles. The accompanying graph shows the increasing differences between median family incomes of selected rich and poor areas in Los Angeles County.

This historic redistribution of wealth along class lines is the result of the intensification of the process of accumulation of capital. As western capitalism now increasingly uses sophisticated means of productions which require fewer workers, more workers are rendered redundant and profits accrue at an increasing rate for the economic elite.

Because technological progress has eliminated industrial jobs, the market for labor has become ever more competitive. This has caused the real value of wages to decline. Capitalism is reaching a high point in its development. Employee compensation for physical laborers has declined in real terms, whereas CEOs are paid more total direct compensation than ever before.

According to the Wall Street Journal, three executives (C. Lazarus, S. Weill and L. C. Hirsh) earned over $192 million in total direct compensation in 1992. That sum is equal to the net income of all American affiliates in Chile.

In a truly just society, no one would earn $67 million a year. The riots in L.A. were more than a spontaneous outburst of rage at a specific instance of injustice. They were an example of the enraged proletariat rising up and striking out against a society which offers no hope for a better life. Certainly, the violence was misdirected. But just as surely, many people were radicalized by the experience, and they will know where to strike when the inevitable "next time" rolls around.

Andrea Nolan, this week's guest writer for Start Now, is President of Terra Firma, Washington College's home-grown environmental organization. This special Earth Day edition of Start Now was requested by Mike Tyson, WC alum and employee of Infinity Recycling.

Recycling at Washington College is sporadic, and half-done, but it exists, which is a statement that may not be able to be made for too much longer unless drastic improvements are made. Recycling is a vital part of saving this Earth's environment. The statistics surrounding the impact made by recycling or not recycling can be startling (just read the half-a-dozen Green Sheets posted around campus). If recycling was done a hundred percent around the world, the waste going to landfills could be cut by eighty percent. That is eighty percent of stuff that will not be left to ferment and sit in one place for thousands of years accomplishing nothing but pollution.

Washington College contains 1,000 members of the world's population, and we should play our part in recycling. However, Infinity Recycling (the school's non-profit recycler) is currently losing mondo-money on our school. It seems that they spend at least fifty percent of their time sorting our materials (which are supposed to be pre-sorted), thus losing that amount in man hours. If we do not improve the sorting of our materials, Infinity will have no choice but to pull their services and Washington College will be forced to start a new program since not recycling is not an option.

However, not to worry, all is not lost. Several (and I mean several) meetings have been held on the topic of recycling involving everyone from your friendly dormitory cleaning ladies to the Prez himself, and a proposition has been developed and partially enacted. But now your help is needed. New recycling bins are being constructed for all dormitory hallways following the model of what is now in place in the C-house and outside of the snack bar. The SGA allocated Terra Firma upwards of $1,000 for the construction of the bins. This should fund approximately fifteen bins which will cover half of the hallways on campus. The other half of the money has been hard to come by, due to these budget-freezing days, but while we're waiting, we might as well build some bins.

The bins will hopefully be built next week (barring any unforeseen difficulties), using the C-house as our workshop. The building spree will be happening April 27 - 29 (Tue-Thurs.). Pitch in to help for a half-hour or so on any of these nights. Anyone out there who is addicted to Home Improvement and has brought their own drill to school is more than welcome to come play with their power-toys on our plywood. Please come out and help. If we can show the administration that the student body wants and respects recycling by making recycling in the dorms work, we can hopefully make recycling universal on the campus, and begin placing bins elsewhere (such as in the Casey Center or Bill Smith — yes, I have heard your complaints, and yes, Cardinal, you should be getting a new collection site.)

Besides helping us build the bins, please make your current recycling systems work. If your hallway doesn't have anything, stick a cardboard box or two into your hallway. Separate aluminum from glass, and green glass from brown, and brown from clear. Empty your full bins into either the collection site behind the dining hall, outside of Queen Anne's, by Talbot, or into any of the other random collection drums scattered around campus. Also, while there is as yet no recycling of paper on the hallways you can take your paper to the basement of Bill Smith where two collection bins are standing by.

So, the moral of this Start Now! column is to get off your butts and stop complaining. Don't just wear an Earth Day T-shirt, smoke pot, and talk about how our environment is going to pot — get your hands a little dirty. A sign-up sheet will be in the dining hall on Monday, and probably Friday (sorry about the ambiguity, but as of this writing some of these hectic plans are still not solidified), or if you have any specific questions, or live off-campus and want to help you can drop me a note in inner-campus mail, reach me on Quicknail, or what the hell, even give me (Andrea) a call at #8637.

US Surgeon General to Speak

In celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the William James Forum, the United States Surgeon General will visit Washington College to participate in the lecture series that has brought dozens of speakers of national renown to campus.

Dr. Antonia C. Novello will be sharing her vision of the future for public health care in America. Her talk, entitled "Challenge, Change and Caring; Watchwords for a Healthier America," is set for Wednesday, April 28 at 8 p.m. in Hynson Lounge. She will receive the college's highest award, the honorary Doctor of Science degree. The public is cordially invited to attend.

Novello's appointment in 1990 as the fourteenth Surgeon General was an historic occasion. As Surgeon General, she advises the public on health matters such as the effects of smoking and alcohol consumption, AIDS, diet and nutrition, environmental health hazards, and the importance of immunization and disease prevention.

A board-certified pediatrician, Novello left private practice to enter the United States Public Health Service, where

Phi Delta Theta

Community Service Month

Phi Delta Theta got involved this past week with community service. Earlier this semester members of Phi Delta Theta helped in the clean up effort that took place in Chestertown on the 27 of March. The next day they did the Adopt-A-Highway program. They collected garbage that was strewn along the side of route 297 N from Suds and Soda to the town of Worton. Nine bags of garbage were collected in all.

This past week's community service project dealt with helping improve low income housing. Mr. Wood, owner of low income housing, had recently bought six to ten units just outside the town of Centreville. Eleven members of the Fraternity helped demolish two sheds that were falling down and were no longer of any use. After the demolition of the sheds the Brothers and Pledges went to Bob Baer's Farm on the other side of Centreville. Mr. Baer donated Oak trees to Mr. Wood. Three Oaks were dug up so they could be taken to the low income houses. The project took two and a half hours. Bill Brimhall, one of the Phi Delts helping said, "The demolition was fun but the tree digging was hard work. I was glad to be in on the activity. Helping people out makes it worth the effort."

Phi Delta Theta members are planning on being at the clean up of Betterton Beach this Saturday at 8.30 A.M.. This is the last planned community activity of the semester. Over all I am pleased in this semester's activities, but next semester I am hoping for even bigger projects.

Student Art Show Opens Today

This Friday the Student Art show opens in Tawes Theatre. The show displays student art from throughout the school year. Student art from majors and non-majors will be exhibited. The art show has been an annual event for almost twenty years. There will be a reception on Friday at 4:30 p.m., during which the Lynette Nielsen Award will be given to a student with outstanding contribution and dedication to their field of art.

The hours of the showing during the remaining weeks will be from 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. Thursday through Sunday -- there may be schedule difficulties so please check with the art department.

Graduating art major Jim Crawford is presenting his senior thesis at the exhibit. Whitney Myrus, also a graduating senior has pieces on display as well as Juniors J. Tarin Towers and Andrew Stone.

Student Profile: Jim Crawford

Jim Crawford, a Studio Art major from Kent Island, will be very visible around campus this weekend. Or rather his art work will be. He is the only Senior presenting a Senior Thesis in the Student Art Show that opens this weekend.

Jim is a Dean's List Student and says that Art is his main hobby and vocation. Besides that, he enjoys reading and said that college has opened him up beyond Science Fiction. He is also learning how to cook for when he is on his own. And lately, he has had a fleeting thought about a comic strip idea which is based upon something that he did for the soon to be available publication, THIS, a creation of WC students Tina Dayhoff and Tanya Angell Allen.

When asked about Washington College, he said that it is possible to get a good education but the tuition is too high for the facilities and the departments that we have. And the recruitment pattern is deplorable. We recruit money instead of talent.

After he graduates he plans on doing a lot of praying and he plans on being ostensibly poor. He would eventually want to teach at the college level because he lacks the patience for high school and middle school.

He said that the Art Department is middle in size and the funding is miniscule at best. He added that some of the art done here competes with that of larger schools and that the school needs to give more funding to draw students.

When asked about how he would feel about going in drag, he chuckled and said that he would have to shave his beard.

When asked about Jim, Mindie Kaplan said: "He's Brilliant!!!!!"

And as Jim's final quote: "Fuck Off, I'm Busy!!!!!!!"

Movie Picks by the Bitch and the Bore

The Never Ending Saga Continues due to Lack of News

Due to the decided lack of artsy/entertaining news yet again this week, I felt that it was time that I divulged my favorite movies. This being the second in the ever-popular series of "Rae and George Pick It," I felt that I should write on something that everyone would at least appreciate, if not adore (those of you with taste can avoid his entire section, he has none! -Rae.). So, here are our Ten Favorite Movies (in no particular order).

George's List

1) Baghdad Cafe- a fabulous movie about a friendship between two women from different lifestyles that come together and teach each other what the "magic" of living is all about. (His dog layed on me during the whole damn thing and I still am suffering from whiplash due to lack of plot-R)There is a plot, you just need to be interested in wanting to like this movie.-G)

2) Edward Scissorhands-asymbolic walk though the life of an unfinished man that is thrown into the stereotypical confines of suburbia. The more times I watch this the more times I am convinced that suburbia is evil and that it should be destroyed. It is also perfect for when you are having one of those days and you feel like life could not get any better and you don't want life to get any better. Oh, I have also been compared to Edward on many occasions. (You wish you could be a sweet as this man! Loved the film but this is his cinematic equivalent to Morrissey.-R)

3)The Cook, The Thief, His Wife, and Her Lover -very twisted love story. It contains one of my favorite scenes of all times (Him: the last one.). Those of you without a stomach for violence, I would advise you to stay away. Those of you that do like violence, it is more mental than physical but the physical is definitely there. (Hated it!-R)

4)When Harry Met Sally... - "I can't take it back, it's already out there." Nice motto to live by. The quintessential Male/Female relationship movie. ("Men and women can never be friends..."-R)

5)The Sound of Music-sappy movie with a beautiful ending and an even more beautiful sound track. It is perfect when you have had a bad day and there is absolutely nothing you can do to get out of it. Julie Andrews makes everyone feel better even if you don't want to admit it. (Once again another film that I love that I have been made to hate. Anyone want to guess how many times he has felt down enough to watch this movie? Let's put it this way, I can sing my part, including yodeling, on cue.-R)

6)Beauty and the Beast-my favorite Disney™ film. It gives a "beast" the hope that one day a "beauty" will appear in his/her life. It also helps that same "beast" appreciate the "beauty" that he/she has in his/her life. (Loved the film! When are you going to turn into a Prince?-R)

7)Brighton Beach Memoirs-my favorite play by my favorite playwright, Neil Simon. Very strong women characters and a comedic element that lies under all of the melodrama. (You only like his journal.-R)

8)It's a Wonderful Life-my favorite movie to hate. I don't hate it, it just reminds me of my small town upbringing and the paradox of hating and loving something at the same time. (The paradox you know all too well George Bailey.-R)

9) Whales of August -Bette Davis' last film. I love Bette and everything that she epitomizes. (Indifferent.-R)

10) Hellraiser II -my favorite horror film. Psychological thriller, blood, superstition. Who could ask for anything more? (I hate horror.-R)

Rae's List

1)Crossing Delancey-I want a pickle man! This movie is wonderful. Jewish grandmothers, match makers, uptown vs. downtown, ecclectic people, and a man who is simple, straightforward and honest. I should be so lucky. (Neurotic women on the verge-G)

2)Truly Madly Deeply- British version of Ghost and infinitely better. Any man who goes to hop and tell life stories on a first date is perfect. It's about losing loved ones and going on with life without dead people in the living room watching videos. (Great flick- I also liked the hopping man-G)

3) The Princess Bride- The twisted fairy tale that we all love. The subtle ironies and witticism are beyond compare. Also I think Cary Elwes is amazing looking! (You had to pick the one movie that I forgot, didn't you?-G)

4) Guess Who's Coming To Dinner?- Those who know me will appreciate the timeliness of this film in relation to my birth. It may be outdated but it is a great film to see about interracial dating way back then. By the way, the kids from such a marriage do turn out all right. P.S. I love Katherine Hepburn. (I like what Suzanne Sugarbaker calls this film.-G)

5)Barefoot In The Park- Jane Fonda and Robert Redford in a film about honeymooners who are opposites. It is set in Greenwich Village, the place I want to live. Another classic. (Another great movie. Fabulous characters and plot. You are doing this on purpose-G) (You are right, you stuffed shirt-R)

6)Frankie and Johnny- I am a die hard realist/romantic and so is Frankie. She is a Scorpio and I completely identify. This movie depicts the struggle of relationships. Are they worth it? Will I be hurt again? And thank god the end isn't too sappy. (You keep picking movies that I like too much to make rude and unnecessary comments on simply because you want people to believe that I have bad taste in movies, just like you did with the music thing.-G)

7)That Touch Of Mink- Did I mention I love Carey Grant? He is the most suave in this flick and Doris Day doesn't even annoy me all that much this time. All about the single girl and how they can be taken in by men, back then. (I like older films) (Haven't seen it. Probably would like it since that seems the way we are going in this series.-G)

8)Singles- All about our generation and the dating scene or lack thereof. You will see people you know in this film. Relax and watch your life. (Not all that. I did like it but I think that Slackers is more appropriate.-G)

9)Any Star Wars Film- My father took me to the first one and I was hooked. I love them all. I could spend a Saturday just watching them. Luke was my favorite but I branched to Han Solo. (Ditto-G)

10)Boomerang-I know Eddie Murphy does not have much of a following anymore but this movie is fun. MEN ARE DOGS! You can watch a dog brought to heel in this one. (I agree, men are dogs. WOOF, WOOF, WOOF.-G)

Once again this has been entirely too long for all involved. It is now 1:30 am and there is no way we are going to motivate to do the back work we owe our professors at this hour. Sorry! Those of you who have gotten the impression that I am overly mean/cranky/whatever with George and his choices are being sucked into his trap. I am really not the cranky one, he is. Once again he is sick/depressed and he is still not pleasant to deal with. But then again neither am I.-R.

she rose to one of the top posts in the National Institutes of Health before being named Surgeon General. Among her responsibilities at NIH were coordinating pediatric AIDS research and co-chairing the Advisory Committee on Women's Health Issues.

Though Novello is noted for her diplomacy and nurturing manner, she is just as outspoken as her formidable predecessor, C. Everett Koop, about the country's health problems and she has used her position to attract national media attention to her views on health-related issues.

Guided in her mission by what she calls her motto — "Good science and good sense" — Novello has chosen to concentrate on the health care of minorities, women, and children; injury prevention; and the problems of domestic violence, alcohol abuse among the nation's youth, and smoking women and young people.

She made headlines when last March she and James Todd, the executive vice president of the American Medical Association, attempted to pressure the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company to withdraw its advertising featuring the cartoon character "Joe Camel."

She condemned the ad campaign for targeting youngsters and encouraging them to smoke, citing an AMA study which determined that Joe Camel was as recognizable as Mickey Mouse to children as young as six years of age.

Novello has attacked advertising for alcoholic beverages as well because, she says, "it misleads, misinforms, and unabashedly targets youth."

Novello is the first William James Forum speaker to receive the honorary degree. The Forum was founded in 1963 by Peter Tapke, professor of philosophy and religion at WC, to honor America's quintessential thinker who in his diverse career was an artist, explorer, medical doctor, psychologist, philosopher and theologian.

For three decades the William James Forum has been dedicated to provoking thought and discussion on dozens of issues of value, ranging, for instance, from civil rights and antiwar issues of the 1960s and 1970s, to feminist and human rights, to various wars around the globe, to bioethics.

Do You Think You Know Me?

Below is part of a speech delivered by Peggy Dersch at the Interstate Oratorical Association oratorical contest in 1980. At the time she was a student at Southeast Missouri State University.

This speech was posted on the University of Iowa Bulletin Board system. Peggy accurately identifies the stereotypes often placed on a "rape victim." Furthermore, she demands self-evaluation from the audience, and explains its importance.

It was winter, 1976. A news item concerning the attempted rape of an eight-year-old child was reported on WABC-TV in New York City. Following the news, the station's weather announcer, Tex Antoine, began his report by reminding viewers of what he called an ancient proverb; "Confucius once say: If rape is inevitable, relax and enjoy it!" After enough protest calls, station officials required Antoine to offer a public apology. He said simply, "I regret making the statement." And then he added, "I didn't realize the victim was a child."

The ignorance about rape displayed by Tex Antoine is not uncommon. In Chicago, Illinois, Gallant Greeting Corporation produced and distributed a birthday card. On the front was a disheveled woman with a wide grin across her face. The inscription read, "Birthdays are like rape." The you open the card the message continued. "When it's inevitable — enjoy...enjoy..." There was a space to sign your name, and then the final phrase, "Happy Day!"

Jokes about rape are not difficult to find. But the truth is, rape is no laughing matter. When we consider the fact that every night of the year, in fact every 15 minutes day and night all year long a woman is forcibly raped, we realize that rape is a very serious matter.

But you don't have to share the ignorance of a Tex Antoine or the Gallant Corporation to be guilty of misunderstanding the nature of the crime of rape. As a matter of fact, all of us, everyone in this room, is a victim of a stereotype. We are all prejudiced against the rape victim. I know, and I intend to show you.

Now, let me assure you this is not just another speech on rape. In fact, let me make a few things clear about my intentions before I go any further. First of all, don't get the idea I'm out to accuse anyone of being apathetic or unconcerned. I'm not. Don't expect me to shock you with the latest probability figures showing that everyone in this room will be raped within the next ten days. I'm not. Don't think I'm trying to repulse you with brutal accounts of a victim's experience or horrifying stories of courtroom battles. I'm not.

My purpose is simply this: to make everyone here think more critically about how he views the crime of rape. You see, this is not a speech on rape, but on the attitude we all have toward it — attitudes which are frequently as serious a problem as the act of rape itself.

Rape is an unusual crime. We see the rapist as a criminal, but we tend to see the rape victim that way too. Society attributes at least part of the blame to the victim herself. We see her somehow at fault.

Some of us choose to believe that women secretly want to be raped—that they ask for it. Let me give you an example. In Dane County, Wisconsin, Judge Archie Simonson let a 15-year-old boy off with only probation for raping a 16-year-old girl in the stairwell of their high school. His explanation? "I'm trying to say to women — stop teasing ... Whether women like it or not, they are sex objects." You probably recognize this statement for the ignorance it represents. But even those who reject the notion that the victim invited the attack may still hold the view that she didn't resist hard enough.

"Why didn't she fight back?" we say. "You can't hit a moving target." So common is this myth that even rape victims themselves believe it. I recently read a magazine article about one such victim; her name is Linda Rodgers. She recalled: "Before the rape, I would have been surprised that a victim might feel guilty. Yet I did — not that I had invited the rape, but that I should have been able to prevent it."

Her feelings might be easier to understand when we examine what is currently being taught in criminology courses. For example, here's what one of the most widely used criminology textbooks, Daniel Glaser's Adult Crime and Social Policy, has to say: "To force a woman into intercourse is an impossible task in most cases if the female is conscious and extreme pain is not inflicted." And this text is not unusual. Now, of course, not everybody believes that women want to be raped or that they don't try hard enough to resist an attack. But even though we know that, we may still subconsciously feel that somehow, some way, a woman brings rape on herself.

Social psychologists call this the "just world hypothesis" – a belief that bad things don't happen to good people – or, in other words, good women don't get raped. For example, one rape victim called a Boston Hospital follow-up counselor and explained: "I am having problems with my family. No one wants to have anything to do with me. My grandmother doesn't want me to tell my brother and I want him to know. She says it is a shame on the family. No one is talking with me. They won't even say hello to me. Even my husband is ashamed of me."

Now perhaps many of you at this point are saying to yourselves, "Not me — I don't feel that way." Maybe you're right. But maybe you're wrong. Unless I'm mistaken, everyone in this room is subject to ill-conceived attitudes about rape victims. All of us, even you, are victims of a stereotype. And I think I can prove it to you.

Most of you have never met me before, yet even so you have been developing just in these few minutes an idea of what I'm like, so that by now you have some notion or image of me, Peggy Dersch. Now let me tell you something about myself that you don't know. At the age of 13, I was violently and forcibly raped in the home of a friend.

Already your impressions of me are beginning to change, aren't they? Just in these last few seconds your image of me has been altered by two words — "rape victim."

If you were to meet me again I'm almost sure you'd act differently than you would have ten minutes ago. And if I happened to be wearing shorts or a t-shirt you might even raise an eyebrow or sneer. You see, when a woman is labeled "rape victim," ordinary behavior is reinterpreted in sexual terms. Any attractiveness in dress or figure is held against her.

I have just labeled myself rape victim, and Peggy Dersch the rape victim is different from the Peggy Dersch you knew before, isn't she? I could be wrong. My point may be totally erroneous.

Now please don't misunderstand; I'm not asking you for sympathy and I'm not casting blame or trying to make you feel guilty. And I'm not saying that we haven't done a great deal already to lift the "veil of shame" around the subject of rape. But it's still there. Do you some how look down upon me and others like me, even though you know better? Don't be surprised or ashamed if you do. The attitude is quite common. I ask you to consider how you would act if your sister, or daughter, or wife, or someone else you love were raped. How would you treat her? And how are you going to treat me?

Men's Tennis 8-5

Team Shoots for Nationals

This past week, the Washington College Men's Varsity Tennis Team improved their record to a meaty 8-5, with wins over The University of Rochester, and conference rivals Haverford, and Widener. The matches against Rochester and Haverford were both decided by one match, while the Widener match was a clean sweep for the Shoremen.

The match against Rochester proved to be a crucial match for the netters. Rochester had just come off a big win, upsetting Swathmore , who the Netters had lost to earlier in the season. Rochester had also defeated the University of the South, who were third in their regional rankings. In the win, Trevor Hurd defeated Rochester's Dave Wesley who was ranked twelth in the nation, pre-season. Hurd remains undefeated in Division III paly. This indirect win over the Southern Swamees puts Washington College in a key position as the rankings come out this week. On Tuesday April 20, Nashvillite Deepak Raja recorded his first singles win in the sweep of MAC conference rival,Widener. The win over Haverford was a struggle for the shoremen. With Deepak Raja suspended from the match by choice of Coach Gray, the Netters were down 2-0 before the match even started. The score was 4-1 before the Shoremen turned things around and defeated their opponents 5-4. As the season progresses, The whole team seems to be bringing their plat up a level. Erik Pikus and John Moffat have been playing well, considering all the changes that are made concering the 4,5,and 6 singles positions.

The Shoremen's next important match is versus Skidmore on Sunday. If the Shoremen can chalk up a victory then their chances to repeat with a visit to Nationals would be likely to follow. Come out and support WAC tennis!

Since no damage was visible to the outside of the machines, investigations concluded that either the locks were picked or the perpetrator has a master key to the machines. The lack of damage also resulted in no college personnel being alerted to the thefts.

Haines calls the thefts unusual not only in their 'clean' completion but because in several of the ones opened, the cash drawer only was emptied while the change drawer remained intact. No product was counted as missing.

- Several more bicycles have been reported missing from dorms in the past few weeks. Rode Rick would like to remind all students to secure their bikes, in dorm rooms if possible.
- As book resale season approaches, the Elm would like to remind everyone not to leave expensive textbooks unattended in cubbyholes around campus.

Softball Falters; Looks Forward To Dickinson

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

The Washington softball team has struggled lately, dropping consecutive double headers to Western Maryland and Franklin & Marshall.

On April 14, the first. After that Washington fell behind quickly, losing 9-4. However, Eakin had two hits, including a double, and Myers and Denise Hakanson each had a hit as well.

In the second game, an experienced Franklin & Marshall team blew Washington away

Nikki Goenaga had a sacrifice fly RBI against F&M. The senior also leads the team in letters written to the editor. The sports editors apologize for the poor softball coverage this year.

Shorewomen lost to Western Maryland by scores of 12-0 and 14-3. Washington's Michelle Chin filled in for Diana Holton at pitcher, allowing 10 hits in seven total innings of work for the day. Courtney Myers went two-for-two in the second game with one RBI to lead the offensive attack. Kelly Eakin also had one RBI in the second game.

Against Franklin & Marshall, the Shorewomen took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on a Niki Goenaga sacrifice fly but fell behind 4-1 at the end of the 26-4. Tara Rathal led Washington with two hits, two runs scored and two stolen bases.

However, Coach Lanée Cole believes the softball team is performing much better than last week's games reveal.

"I'm really impressed with the improvement we've made with such a young team," she said. "We've really improved defensively. We're more aggressive at the plate and on the bases.

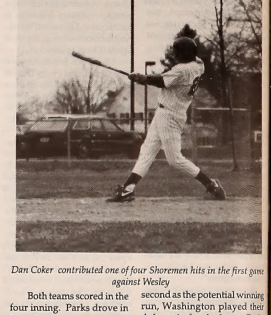
"We're definitely looking for a couple more wins before the year is over," she said.

Baseball Splits With Wesley

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

On Tuesday, the baseball team travelled to Wesley College in Delaware to try and sweep a double header. While the Shoremen lost the first game, they got great pitching and defense in close contests.

In game one, Kevin Roland started for the Shoremen, and took the game into the sixth inning, allowing only two hits in five and one-third innings pitched.



Washington scored first in the third inning. Keith Whiteford walked, and Mike Hanifee singled. With runners on first and second, Andy Parks grounded to the shortstop. Wesley got the force out at second, but an errant throw to third in attempt to pick off Whiteford allowed a run.

However, Wesley tied the score in the bottom half of the third with a single, two stolen bases and a fielding error by the Shoremen.

In the sixth, the home team took a two-run lead over the Shoremen, as Roland walked two men and got one out before being relieved by Doug "Billy" Blair. Wesley bunted the runners into a second and third situation, and a single gave them a 3-1 lead.

In the seventh, Gary Yovanovich drove in a run with a double, but it wasn't enough, and the Shormen left two runners on base at the end of the game. Washington lost, 3-2.

Mike D'Andrea started for Washington in the second game.

Dan Coker contributed one of four Shoremen hits in the first game against Wesley

Both teams scored in the four inning. Parks drove in Rory Conway on a single past the thirdbaseman in the top half of the inning. Wesley tied it in the bottom half with two walks and a single.

The Shoremen made a big defensive play in the fifth. With the bases loaded and one out, Washington played the infield in. The Wesley batter hit a grounder to Parks at first base. Parks threw home for the force out, and Brian Rush turned and picked the runner off third to end the inning.

In the seventh inning, Washington's defense was called upon once again. With a Wesley runner standing on second as the potential winning run, Washington played their defense in for the bunt. Parks once again made an outstanding play by charging in from first, catching an attempted bunt in the air, and doubling off the runner at second.

In the 10th inning, the Shoremen scored the game-winning run on a sacrifice fly by Hanifee to bring home Conway.

D'Andrea pitched seven strong innings, allowing only one run. Blair relieved him in the eighth to pitch three innings of shutout relief for the win. Parks finished his day at the plate at three-for-four with one RBI.

In the face of adversity and competition, athletes have been known to crumble, or to walk away. Or they have come out fighting. The varsity crew is swinging hard this spring and is knocking out some serious competition.

First, on March 27, the men and women smoked Union's crew, with only one loss out of five races at the scrimmage. The novice men also showed some juice with their win by four boat lengths over the other two Union boats at the scrimmage.

The next weekend, April 3, the crew gave two strong performances with wins by the varsity women's eight and by the straight pair. The race, though, was called after these wins when there were foot swells and whitecaps on the course.

For the Easter weekend, there was a notable performance by the lightweight four with a two-length victory over Pittsburgh's four and two Stockton fours.

This past weekend, the Murphy Cup in Philadelphia was the key race of the season thus far. Three Shoremen boats raced, and two won.

The varsity heavyweight men's four kicked in the gas at 1000 meters and held off Penn (a notoriously fast crew) as well as Villanova and Rhode Island to win by three seat lengths—the closest win for the four this year.

James Pitt, John "the Beast" Mulvaney, R.J. Eldridge and Eric Jewitt are poised to enter the Washington College Invitational tomorrow as the favored crew after their strong performance in Philadelphia. Their coxswain, Amy Osbourne, is also due credit for negotiating a fast course and swift current on Saturday as well.

The novice men also came away with a win at the Murphy Cup over Johns Hopkins, Drexel, Rochester and Rhode Island, winning by a full boat length. The novice team—John Shannahan, Aaron Downes, Paul Suplee, Brian Hill and Jim Morrison and coxswain, did a reflection of the heavyweight four's face, by pulling away at the 1000 meter mark.

The varsity women's eight placed a respectable fifth behind four very fast crews fielded by Temple, Ithaca, Rochester and Delaware. They beat Rhode Island, though, by five seconds.

Come support the rowing team at home tomorrow at 9:00 a.m. Almost a dozen schools will be here and there promises to be a fight for the Ross and Truslow Cups.

WC Lax Jilts Generals

Co-Sports Editor

Last Saturday, the USILA fourth-ranked Washington men's lacrosse team pleased the largest home crowd of the season on Parent's Day with a 12-10 victory over the 11th-ranked Washington & Lee Generals. The win improved Washington's record to 9-1 on the season.

The Generals jumped out to a 3-0 lead behind goals from David Lefkowitz, Andy Dutton and Wemi Donogruih in the first 2:17 of the game.

However, the Shoremen came storming back, scoring the last three goals of the period to tie the score. Chris Sanchez and Jason Paige both scored on Harris Murphy assists, and Greg Mouracade closed out the first quarter with an unassisted goal with 1:48 remaining.

In the second period, Greg Lawler gave Washington its first lead at 4-3. However, the Generals scored four unanswered goals to take a 7-4 lead with 5:38 remaining in the half. Sanchez tallied with 30 seconds left for the Shoremen, but Washington still trailed 7-5 at the half.

They quickly tied it up, though, as Mouracade and Jamie Carver scored consecutive goals.

The teams began trading goals at that point. Lefkowitz scored on an assist from John Hunter for W&L at the 8:32 mark. Chris Cote answered 1:12 later to tie the score again at eight. The teams went on a seven minute scoring drought before Lefkowitz again scored with 0:19 left in the third period, but Washington built some momentum, as Murphy scored 10 seconds later to tie the score once more.

Greg Lawler scored three goals against Washington & Lee on Saturday

Lawler opened the fourth period with his second goal of the game. Lefkowitz scored his fourth goal for W&L to retie the score at ten with 7:27 remaining.

However, the Shoremen killed the Generals and the clock, as Lawler scored again at the 6:09 mark, and Cote closed out the scoring with 5:15 remaining to give Washington a 12-10 lead.

Jon Lundberg played a superb game in goal, and Scott Overmed shut down high-scoring Donogruih in the second half.

Washington's next game is tomorrow at Salisbury State.

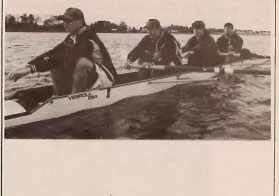
Women's Tennis Splits Matches

Team tops Hopkins and W. Maryland

Lizzy O'Hara
Staff Writer

The Women's Tennis Team split their last four matches; it seems that this group of matches definitely had its ups and downs.

On April eighth, the team played at Eizabethtown. This was not one of their finest matches, but there was a light of hope with the performance of Pam Hendrickson, as she beat her opponent 6-0, 6-2. All of the other members of the team who played did not fare as well. Melissa Harmeyer gave her opponent a run for her money even though she lost by a score of 1-6, 6-4, 7-5. The matches of the number six singles and the number three doubles were defaulted.



Western Maryland College was the next opponent, and the team came out with an overall victory. Once again, Pam Hendrickson stepped out with a 6-0, 6-0 victory over her opponent. The doubles duo of Jen Sloan and Pam Hendrickson did a wonderful job as well with a score of 6-1, 6-1. A good effort in doubles was put through by Kim Prettyman and Vicki Roth even though they did not come out on top.

April 15 was the next match which was against Johns Hopkins here at Washington College. Washington came out on top with a score of 5-4. Everyone on the team showed great effort and the scores proved it. Sloan won with a score of 6-1, 6-2 and Tina Lennon with a score of 6-0, 6-4.

The most recent match was not a good wrap up for the team. It was against Trenton State on April 19 here at Washington College. Pam Hendrickson once again scored the lone victory for the Shore women with a score of 6-1, 6-3.

The end of the season is creeping up on the tennis team, so don't waste time, come out and support them for their last matches of the '93 Spring season!

Newt's Player of the Week

For their efforts in the Men's Varsity four man shell, John "the Beast" Mulvaney, James Pitt, R.J. Eldridge Eric Jewitt, and coxswain Amy Osbourne have been rightly dubbed the Newt's Team of the Week.

Last week, this awesome foursome rowedsome theirsome waysome tosome victorysome.... enoughsome alreadysome...beating Villanova, Rhode Island, and the notoriously fast crew team of Pennsylvania, by three seat lengths. This victory was the closest win that this team has had yet this year. The foursome is poised to enter the Washington College Invitational next Saturday, as the favored crew. (For all you gamblers out there, betting is illegal at Washington College.)

There might have been more directed comedy in the paper, but Bucky cracked under pressure and could not remember any acts of comedy that had occured around him the week before.

As the Spring athletics season comes to a close, the Washington College community should do their best to get out and support all of WAC's fine young atheletes!

Task Force Presents Report to President

Recommendations include censure of the Dean

J. Tarin Towers
Editor-in-Chief

The culmination of two school years of research and brainstorming is currently sitting on President Trout's desk waiting for action. Wednesday, the President's Task Force on the Status of Gay Men and Lesbians at Washington College, headed by Dr. Ed Weissman of the Political Science Department, presented its final advisory report to Trout.

Since the Task Force was formed by the faculty in September of 1991, its efforts have included a sample survey of the sexual behaviors and attitudes of the college's students and the preparation of a list of recommendations to Trout and the college as a whole.

The first recommendation is that the work begun by the task force be continued: "Recommendation 1: A watch or compliance committee be set up to monitor the implementation of recommendations contained in this report and to evaluate compliance with the nondiscrimination clause of the college." The college's nondiscrimination policy now includes sexual orientation as a matter of consideration (see Resolution, page 7).

In light of a number of incidents ranging from graffiti to elaborate pranks carried out by Lambda pledges posing as Elm staff, the Task Force deems fit that such bigoted actions, termed hate crimes against homosexuals, be tracked. "Recommendation 2: The college, in a general upgrading of its social bookkeeping, collect systematic data on hate crimes and other manifestations of homophobia in the Washington College community."

To serve students who recognize themselves as homosexual or who are dealing with the possibility of 'coming out' as homosexual, the Task Force offers: "Recommendation 3: The Health Services encourage the services of a counselor trained in and friendly to the needs of gays and lesbians. An individual has already been recommended for this position."

According to the 1992 survey, the attitudes of the student body grant gays and lesbians a low acceptance rate on the "feeling thermometer." To counteract such ignorance and homophobia, the Task Force projects a need for direct contact with these issues. "Recommendation 4: The college implement a policy of hiring consultants to run seminars on homophobia. These seminars and programs should be directed to different target groups: students, faculty, staff and administration."

The original demand of the Task Force that an AIDS education program is sorely needed at the college has been answered by Keith Erickson's Peer Education Program. "Recommendation 5: The Erickson Committee on AIDS Education continue to be supported and funded and its work continued after Mr. Erickson graduates from the college."

Extension of fringe benefits to long-term same-sex partners is a goal sought by homosexual persons across the nation. "Recommendation 6: The immediate implementation of the Domestic Partners Benefits Program proposed by the Bedell Subcommittee to the Benefits Committee of the college."

In addition to tracking hate crimes, the college is advised to adopt an operational definition of the word 'hate crime.' "Recommendation 7: The college draft a statement on and policy for hate crimes which creates a disciplinary structure stigmatizing hate crimes and providing penalties to which recognize the repugnant nature of these crimes to the community."

"Private religious convictions" and "bias against homosexuality" as evidenced publicly and in committee meetings are not to be tracked.

Hodson Hall Renovation Approved by Trustees

J. Tarin Towers
Editor-in-Chief

The amended plan for the renovation of the Hodson Hall basement was approved by the Board of Visitors and Governors at their April 22 meeting.

"It's been on the books for a long time," said President Charles H. Trout in an Elm interview Wednesday. Trout said he inherited the project from the previous administration, and that part of the architectural work had been completed before his arrival at the college in 1990.

The first phase, the Student Lounge in the location of the former bookstore, was completed in the fall of 1991.

Completion of the project will include a major overhaul of the CoffeeHouse and Snack Bar areas.

Delays in further work were largely attributed by Trout to the original plan's inclusion of a 'hole in the ground' off of the East Wall (facing Kent House). That wall was to be largely glass, opening onto a patio/amphitheater area and providing a playing space for bands as well as letting light into the CoffeeHouse.

Expenses involved in that area of the renovation included 'serious drainage problems,' said Trout, as well as structural difficulties inherent in a glass wall. The 'hole in the ground' added another $600,000 to the project, he said.

The Board Committee for the Hodson Renovation Project headed by Thomas Maher did not want a general capital campaign, because it would be in direct competition for funds with other capital projects, such as the Daly Academic Center.

Raising funds for the basement "turned out to be much harder than anticipated," said Trout, because potential donors cited scholarships and the Daly building as much more moneyworthy than re-doing an existing structure.

As the $1.1 million project started to get bogged down, said Trout, he started to reconsider the validity of 'the hole.' "The cost per square foot was phenomenal," he said. "You could build a molecular biology lab for less dollars per foot."

"Do we really have to dig the hole," he started to ask. The question of letting light into the dim basement almost seemed moot. "It's mostly a night-time facility," he emphasized.

When he suggested the deletion of the amphitheater area at an SGA meeting in the fall, he felt he had enough student support to redraw the plans, which

Brien Responds to Moral Calling

Proposes Temporary Changes in Honor Code

Amanda Burt
Co-News Editor

In an effort to rally both student and faculty support on what he calls "some fundamental values of personhood," Professor Kevin Brien will ask the faculty at next Monday's meeting to vote on some temporary changes to the current Honor Code.

The proposal, which also would have to be approved by the Student Government Association, primarily targets what is referred to as the 'informer clauses' of the Honor Code. These clauses require both students and faculty who witness academic dishonesty to report the offending student.

On page 19 of the Student Handbook, under the "Responsibility of the Students," the code states that each student has "a moral obligation to inform either the professor in the course involved, the Dean of the College, the Dean of Students, or the Chairperson of the Conduct Screening Board of any infraction witnessed by individual students."

Similarly, the code says on the same page that it is the responsibility of faculty members to "refer cases of willful academic dishonesty to the Associate Dean of the College, who will advise the professor on the matter and refer the case to the All-Campus Judiciary for decision." The code does stipulate that a faculty member may also deal privately with the student if the violation appears to be inadvertent. An inadvertent violation might involve a case of faulty documentation.

Brien claims that these 'informer clauses' undermine the Honor Code because they structurally negate both the personhood of students and faculty and pull them into a deep moral conflict. He says that the current code expects students and faculty to override their personal moral values, and that as a result, many end up violating the code.

In a recent interview with the Elm, Brien said that the code

Get your act together

Every day we get older. You ever feel old? I feel old. I looked at the list of peer advisors the other day and realized that first of all, I'm the only third-year PA on the list, and second of all, of the new PAs listed, I only knew nine-tenths of the people.

Have I really been that anti-social this year? I also had no idea who two of the candidates for Senior Class President were.

I am finishing my third year at Washington College and I don't know as many people as I did my first year here. Or at least, that's how it feels. On this tiny campus, it seems every day I see someone else I've never seen before. Of course, often that's just a guy who's normally batted going bare-headed (sometimes literally) into the world. Of course they look different with eyes.

I thought I knew a lot of people here. But I sadly realize that I do not. I've always thought with some anecdotal evidence that the freshmen and the seniors are the two classes who exercise the loudest collective voice on what the character of the campus is from year to year. And next year (gulp!) I will be a senior.

I was a bit dismayed this year by the fact that not a single junior class meeting was held. At least not publicly. I occasionally read in the SGA minutes about some fund drive or other, but I never even saw any of these things being sold.

I sincerely hope that new senior class president Melissa Sullivan takes the needs of her classmates seriously. I have witnessed bickering in this year's senior class over some things that should be trivial but have turned out not to be. For example: I personally will be 21 just in time for classes next year, but many of my friends, also rising seniors, will not be. That means I don't really want the meetings to be held at Andy's ... notwithstanding the fact that holding a meeting in a bar is not exactly the most expedient method of actually getting work done.

Now, this is not just an abject critique of Mike and Whitney. It's a suggestion for next year's leaders to begin listening to their audience as soon as possible.

Take Jamie for example ... his letter at the right exhibits the willingness to listen and serve that got him elected.

And this goes for other organizations as well. What has happened to Hands Out? to Target Tutoring? to the Margaret Horsley Society? Perhaps there's a set of officers out there. Target Tutoring was very active this fall. Hands Out had perhaps a project or two. And MH had ... well ... nothing that I saw. These organizations have fallen prey to a deadly syndrome... that of the powerful leader that leaves.

I am guilty of distance myself this year. My excuse (and I hope it's a good one) is this newspaper. Next year I plan on again immersing myself in other organizations.

But I would hope that leaders currently leaving, if they did not already do so, would encourage an underclassman with potential to run for president and to do as much — or more — than current presidents to make sure the organization continues in more than name.

If I hadn't had the 'JR' on my transcript, I wouldn't have known that the junior class existed except for a single letter suggesting that Nancy Reagan be our graduation keynote speaker. Bwah.

This could happen to you.

Congratulations Scott Ross Koon!

New Executive Board is Here to Serve You

To the Editor:

Having recently taken office, I want to explain further some of my ideas goals and plans for the coming year.

There are two themes with which I plan to start my term in office. I feel strongly that the feeling of cohesion on this campus can be improved. There are a wide variety of very different groups and students and opinions on this campus. I feel that many people can gain a tremendous amount from the stimulation of difference that comes from this interaction within our community. In order to truly integrate our campus, I wish to encourage suggestions and efforts that work towards this goal. A strong approach may be to encourage cosponsoring of events by different clubs and organizations on campus.

Another area where I feel the SGA executive board, as employees of the school and its students, must make a strong effort is in the communication between the student body, the faculty and the administrators. Much of the unrest and anger

Have We All Gone Mental?

To the Editor:

I was wondering, I came to this college in order to get away from all the hassles that a big college has. I am a psychology major and will be a junior in the fall. There will be 34 other psychology majors on campus next year. How is it that all 35 of us are shut out of a required class?

All 35 psych majors are juniors and all of us need to take Biology next year in order to fulfill or major requirements. When I was speaking to Dr. Donald Munson last week after receiving a notice that I was closed out of General Biology, his solution was for me to be put on the waiting list or take it in summer school. Thanks but no thanks! I am here on financial aid and worked two jobs in order to have enough money to go here. I think that this school needs to re-evaluate its priorities.

On Monday, April 19, 1993 myself and a fellow psych major went to Dean Wubbles to see if he could help us in our dilemma. The Dean's response was, and I quote "I've heard the facts and I will write a letter to Don Munson." What good is a letter going to do! The school year is almost up and I need to know now if I am able to take this class.

Dean Wubbles also had this to say: "I know this is an interdepartmental dispute and you (the students) are the victims, but there is not much we can do. We are not going to do anything radical." I think it is time to be radical. This school's attitude needs a face lift. What would happen if this school did something radical? This school would be something better.

CRISIS

Scott Ross Koon

Advertising is the bane of contemporary life. Every day we're involuntarily exposed to messages we don't particularly want to hear, see or smell. It seems odd that we seldom question the rationale behind this data barrage-we just accept it unquestioningly and adapt as best as we can.

And yet, if you really stop and think about it, advertising is a really annoying intrusion into one's brain. How often do you have to flip through page after page of your favorite magazine in a frustrating effort to find the table of contents? Another particularly annoying advertising ploy is that whenever network television gets a really good movie, the first thirty minutes will be free of advertising. And then, as soon as the audience becomes interested-WHAM-there's an ad every five minutes.

Of course, I'm not referring to small businesses. We here at the Elm like small businesses. Really. I'm addressing the senseless abuse of the right of free speech which is committed by large industries every day.

Often I wonder why a given business is advertising anyway. For example, the Edison Electric Institute (which I suppose is some sort of think tank sponsored by producers of electricity) recently ran a full-page color ad in The New Republic which, among other things, stated that cooking in a microwave oven is safer to for the environment than cooking with gas.

That's fine, but really, who cares? The message of this ad is essentially "electricity good." We already knew that. Its a silly waste of time and money for these people to advertise. Chances are, if you've got enough money to buy a magazine, you probably have electric lights to read it with.

Equally silly are defense industry advertisements. Just two pages down from the aforementioned pro-electricity ad is a two-page ad for Boeing which features a Boeing worker perched on top of an AWACS, right underneath of the big black flying saucer thingy. The ad features the slogan "The Price of peace is strength and vigilance." and an address to write to for more information.

Again, why are these people advertising? The average reader of The New Republic has about as much control over the demand for sophisticated military aircraft as I do over the outcome of the next Orioles game. And what happens when I write away to the address? Are they going to send me a coupon for 50 cents off my next purchase of a jumbo-jet?

In situations where the use of a product is limited to a small section of society, trade journals are the venue of preference. Trade journal advertisements are very different from those targeted at the general population, in that they usually assume that the reader possesses a modicum of intelligence.

In some situations, the consumer is already well aware of the need for and usefulness of a given product. This is exactly the case of Pro-Gard Riot Body

Open Forum: Numbers and Homosexual Rights

Allen Marshall is a Freshman who will fortunately be living downtown this summer. His favorite igneous rock is coal slag. If he had to live one day over and over (like that movie) it would be July 5th.

Recently, there has been a lot of bickering over numbers. There is speculation whether or not there were one million people at the March on Washington. Can you believe the Park Service's estimate of 300, 000 marchers or do you go with the police force of DC, who estimated roughly 1.2 million people attending the march. Even if you agree with the Park Service, the march was still the same size as the march Martin Luther King planned for civil rights. Was it any less impressive because they had less than one million marchers?

Allen Marshall

What about the population? Is ten percent of our population gay, lesbian, or bisexual? Is it only 1%? What about the Kline scale, which says that 80% of us are bi and the other 20% is split for gay and straight? Which study do you believe? Why should we play this numbers game? Isn't it all done to make one side look more powerful than it would without all those "official" numbers?

Some people say that this is irrelevant. I merely ask, "What the Fuck Does Any of This Have to do with Two Guys or Two Women Getting Married?!" It's not like who someone else falls in love with is any politician's business. Why is it such a problem that lesbigays would like to have the same rights that heterosexuals have? I certainly do not care if two heterosexuals decide to have sex, so I don't see why there is such ire over people going for those of their own gender. Pardon me for not being able to see how sick it is that two people fall in love. Yes, fall in love, not necessarily fuck, but fall in love. You don't need sex to have love, just as you don't need love to have sex.

I understand your argument: we queers and dykes can't fall in love, we just aren't capable of it. All we ever think about is sex right? Sorry, it doesn't work that way. There are lesbigays who don't engage in sex, but have love relationships with their partners. They can't get married in most states due to the laws of bigots, but they do live with each other. God forbid that a same sex couple should try to start a family. You know it's a ploy to convert children to their sinful lifestyle. If a lesbian tries artificial insemination to have a child, it's in the hopes for a daughter that she can turn against men, of course. (As I'm writing this, I'm hoping that everyone reading it can see the sarcasm, but unfortunately, I know that no one on this campus will.)

This whole numbers game is just a way to try and convince people to ignore the gay rights movement. If lesbigays make up only one percent of our population, then they DO de-

THE BOARD

Last week's Board was designed by Elisa Hale for the Peer Education Program—an organization originally set up to educate Washington College students about AIDS. The questions were:

"Is a sexual experience worth ...Your Health ...Your Life?" and "What STD education programs do you think would be valuable and helpful to the W.C. community?"

*You need to make people realize they're not invulnerable
*Did you know you can get AIDS from talking to gay people. Ignorant Person!
*Gee...Uh...I think it's called Sarcasm.
*If you're going to Attack her—Wrap your Wacker
*Cover me I'm going in
*If you don't know about AIDS by now you're retarded and there is no hope for people like you. If you don't die of aids, you'll die due to some other impairment of your common sense! (crossing the street)
*The fastest growing group to get HIV/AIDS is young adult heterosexuals! This is you! The Gay/Lesbians have learned about safe sex and now are one of the most safe and stable groups in relation to HIV/AIDS. Get past the stereotype (in other words actually educate yourself) and become a responsible adult before it is too late.
* Don't get too happy with your accomplishments—over 95% of all persons in this country infected with HIV are heterosexual or bisexual men!
* Thanks a lot, Homos!
*I think there should be mandatory classes on STD + AIDS education.
*New York = AIDS
A disease far worse than AIDS is out there —it's called ignorance!
free your mind —gays, blacks, jews & women are = to men!

Thank you to everyone who gave us their input, including those comments which were sexist and homophobic—they were great examples of what myths are unfortunately still out there.

This is the bottom line, folks. HIV/AIDS is spreading fast on college campuses across the country. The highest number of new cases are occurring in heterosexuals in their teens and twenties.

Be smart, Be safe, Be understanding.

Remember, AIDS is hard to get if you act responsibly.

Shields, which are advertised in The Police Chief. The ad informs the reader that the product will "Set Yourself Apart from the Crowd." Two models of shield are offered, and "Either shield is the answer for withstanding heavy blows from rocks, clubs and bottles often encountered in mob control situations."

While the main market for this product exists in police departments and correctional facilities, there are many other people who would be interested in this product. Possible expansion markets for Pro Card Riot Body Shields include:

- Grade school teachers
- High school teachers
- Tax collectors
- German tourists
- Rush Limbaugh.

Besides esoteric products, trade journals also feature products which don't often see the light of day, yet which are used by millions of people who would rather not have to use them. In the tasteful phrasing of the ad for Secure® which appeared recently in Progressive Grocer, Secure® is "The product all America is not talking about."

But just because people aren't talking, one mustn't assume that they aren't buying: incontinence isn't exactly the first thing 42 million consumers want to talk about. . . . At $500 million in sales, the incontinence market is already the third fastest growing category in health and beauty. . . . Never before has such a silent market made so much noise at the cash register."

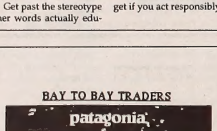
The people responsible for this ad handled a truly delicate subject with taste, but it seems to me there was one unfortunate phrase. The retailer who is concerned about marketing support is informed that Secure® brand incontinence products "Can tailor a program that fits you hands somely."

While skimming through The New Yorker in search of ads for this article, I came across something I have never seen in an American magazine - an ad for South African Airways. It featured a picture of a leopard, a sunset among the baobob trees, and a romantic nighttime view of an ocean liner in front of a Capetown cityscape.

What is missing from this lovely portrait? Could it be civil unrest and decades of oppression? Of course, this ad is not targeting them; its bold-face slogan reads "Experience the wilds of civilized Africa." The implication of this is, of course, that the rest of Africa is uncivilized. In case the reader might miss the significance of this racist tidbit, another nugget of copy informs the reader that South Africa has "A unique mixture of civilization and untamed freedom." This is one campaign which leaves me with no recourse but to ask "Who were the ad wizards who came up with that one?"

For kooky advertisements, its hard to beat National Review. One of the weirdest I've ever seen is for KEX® Anti-Drug Mats. I'm not making this up, this company actually urges National Review readers to "Join the fight against drugs with an ever-changing assortment of KEX® Anti-Drug mats. . . . Our service includes a variety of anti-drug slogans to provide you with a fresh message each time you receive a clean, fresh mat. Our Walk Off mats are constructed to capture large amounts of dirt and grime. . ."

The full-page ad features a full-color photo which includes several different designs of Anti-Drug mats, including a "Say NO to drugs" mat and a "Drug-free zone" mat. This is probably the only full-page ad for floor mats I've ever seen in a national magazine. I bet that they will sell like hotcakes, however I do find a problem with the product itself. If one presents a message, particularly one which is meant to be taken very seriously, then it is best not to present that message in such a manner that people, whether they agree or disagree, will inevitably wipe their feet all over it.



But to find the greatest source of advertising inanity, meaninglessness and charlatanism one needs to look to the nations largest advertisers. None are more nonsensical than those which are targeted at the most poorly informed sector of our society-that is to say, people between the ages of 15 and 25. Nike, for example, recently ran a two page color ad in Esquire for their Air Mowabb shoes.

The ad featured a highway sign which reads "Exit 12a 16 miles 16 miles until what? The next off-ramp? Take it. In fact take off. Go a little crazy, get off the road, hit the woods, jump the streams, and make the next 16 miles mean something."

That's all it says. It says nothing at all about shoes. Oh, sure, there is an entire page opposite the sign devoted to a glossy photo of a shoe with the caption "The Air Mowabb. An outdoor cross-training shoe. Mileage may vary."

I do not now, nor have I ever, owned a pair of Nikes. This ad certainly did nothing to convince me that a pair of $80 Nikes are better than a slightly irregular pair of $20 tennis shoes. It did persuade me that Nike thinks that young people are so stupid that they make their purchases on perceptions of how cool a given product is rather than normal considerations such as price, quality etc. Then again, if Nike sales are any indication, Nike is probably correct in their estimation.

New Security Phones Expected to Decrease Dormitory Crimes

This week the Maintenance Department began installing security phones on Caroline, Queen Anne's, Reid and Minta Martin dormitories. This project was conceived during the fall semester. The SGA proposed the purchase and installation of the phones as an effort to stop the propping of dormitory doors. President Trout supported this proposal and approved the project.

The phones are designed to enhance to enhance dormitory security. Students may now call residents to meet and escort them into the building after the doors have been locked. The resident's campus extension will need to be known in order to make the call. To operate the phone, one must push the ON button, then dial the campus extension. Once the call is completed, push the OFF button. The phones will automatically disconnect after 2 1/2 minutes.

An added feature will allow the caller to contact Security with a push of the red EMERGENCY button. Once the red button has been pushed, Security is automatically dialed. This call will also automatically disconnect in 2 1/2 minutes. The phones should be operational by the week's end.

This system will be evaluated at the end of the 93-94 school year to determine its effectiveness. Students comments and suggestions will be appreciated. If the project is successful, phones may be installed outside other dormitories.

Faculty Adopts New Resolutions on Sexual Equality and Budget

The following resolutions were passed at a faculty assembly April 20 and sent to the President and the Board of Visitors and Governors.

Resolution on Equality

The faculty reaffirms its belief in the equality of all who work and study at Washington College regardless of sexual orientation. The faculty supports all aspects of their equality of those who work at Washington College and believes that all families (homosexual or heterosexual) in the larger Washington College family are equal. The faculty concurs with the policy of equally supporting all domestic partnerships.

Resolution on the Budget

The Faculty of Washington College expresses its dismay at the decision to balance the College budget at the expense of the core elements of the educational process — the material supports of our academic mission and the well being of the faculty and staff.

A strong bond of trust and mutual respect exists among faculty, staff, students, administration and Board. This bond is the backbone of Washington College. We hope that the Board will maintain the commitment made in the early 1980's, and reaffirmed during the Cater administration, to sustain a salary level which is compatible with our standing as a national liberal arts college. The current salary freeze places this in jeopardy. The inexplicable failure to budget for increases in health insurance costs has the same detrimental effect. For the past 20 years, the College has covered 100 percent of the individual employee's health insurance costs. This benefit has been an indispensable recruiting tool and a significant component of overall faculty and staff compensation. Finally, the critical importance of sustaining support for such things as library acquisitions, academic computing, and laboratory supplies hardly requires elaboration. We feel that all of these are elements of the spoken and tacit contract that undergirds the trust we share.

While we appreciate the value of new programs and activities, there is the sense among us that inadequate attention has been paid to their budgetary impact on the core elements of the educational process. In the context of budgetary constraint, it is necessary to set priorities even among desirable activities. Highest among these priorities are the people and programs directly supporting the College's educational mission.

As it now operates, the budgeting process does not facilitate the assessment of priorities, nor does it allow sufficient early involvement of the faculty. We need to strengthen the role of the faculty in setting meaningful priorities well before the administration brings its budget to the Board. Our intent is to eliminate the need for pay freezes, cuts in benefits, and emergency reductions in academic support budgets.

— Say It Now! —

Next week is the last Elm of the school year. If you have something to say, write a letter about it and send it to the Elm via Campus mail or QuickMail, or drop it off in the Elm office in the basement of Reid. The deadline for letters is 6:00pm Wednesday. Don't miss your last opportunity of the year to speak your mind.

Board Holds Final Meeting of School & Fiscal Year

Jamie Baker & Dina Sansing
Staff Writers

The Board of Visitors and Governors met Saturday April 24, 1993 to discuss upcoming plans for the college. Included in the discussions was the intended collaboration between Washington College and Pickering Creek Environmental Center. It is hoped that through this arrangement students will be able to study the Chesapeake Bay Region first-hand in a living laboratory.

The Board also announced a 6 percent rise in freshman applications and a 7 percent rise in freshman acceptance. The Admissions Office plans to be conservative with the amount of financial aid offered to new students to avoid a repeat of this year's cost over-run for financial aid. The Board also discussed plans for Daly Hall, the new building meant to house faculty offices and additional classrooms. The building, which will be located behind William Smith Hall, is still in the planning stages and construction will not begin for at least one year.

Finally, the Board passed the Hodson Hall renovation project; construction is planned to begin directly after Commencement. The plans call for the entire basement of Hodson Hall, with the exception of the newly renovated student lounge, will be gutted. What is now the coffee house will be redone to create a more comfortable inviting atmosphere, much like that of the student lounge. The new snack bar will be cafeteria-style and is meant to fit more of the needs of students. The menu will include more soups, salads and other health foods. While much of the $600,000 needed for the renovation has been raised, construction will probably not be completed until fall break, 1993. The plans for the renovation can be obtained by contacting Reid Raudenbush, Director of Physical Plant or maintenance.

TurboGopher Gives the Internet More Than Just a Pretty Face

Justin Cann
Features Editor

When the semester started, many Washington College students found out that our computer network had been hooked up to the international InterNet. Many were instantly bewildered by the particularly non-Macintosh-like interface of almost every service on the InterNet. Computing Center Director, Paul Bishop, described the InterNet as a "vast gulf of information." Suddenly there were hundreds of academic and other services that only the dedicated netriders could even find (much less use).

It can be amazingly hard to find the sort of resources that you are looking for on the InterNet. Fortunately, the Computing Center is offering an application that makes the Internet easier to navigate.

It's called TurboGopher 1.0.6 b5. It can be copied to your hard drive from the campus server "Info & Updates." Paul Bishop says, "The Gopher software has allowed us to place a Mac-like interface onto internet resources." Washington College, and many other schools and organizations that participate in the InterNet maintain what is known as a Gopher Server.

Gopher Servers provide links to the information that Gopher users all over the world are searching for. For example, our own Gopher Server has links to such things as the Campus Calandar, the Miller Library electronic card catalogues, electronic library card catalogues from around the world, Computing Center manuals for the Washington College network and the Prime Minicomputer, Macintosh Software Archives, (where things like Disinfectant 3.2, an antiviral program, are available from other school's archives) Course Descriptions from the Registrar's Office, the Campus Telephone Directory, USA Today, and WAC Happenings.

The ELM is also planning on publishing electronically on the Washington College Gopher Server next semester, making it the only college newspaper other than Notre Dame's that publishes on the InterNet.

We can also use other schools' Gopher Servers, accessing the links to information that they have collected on their Gopher Servers.

These links exist in the form of Telnet Sessions and FTPable documents, as well as text documents and searching services. These searching services, the wistfully named Archie and Veronica, search FTP sites and Gopher Servers respectively. FTP stands for "File Transfer Protocol." This is the current standard for copying files across the InterNet, from one host to another.

These searching services help to narrow down the vast amounts of files and services on uncountable computers at uncountable sites across the world. Paul Bishop says that about 110 countries currently have access to the InterNet.

Aside from the obvious academic uses of TurboGopher, such as searching libraries, TurboGopher should be another step in the road to the long-envisioned paperless office. Bishops says, "it provides us locally with the ability to distribute Washington College information electronically across the campus, alleviating, somewhat, the flood of paper in our campus mailboxes."

ings led to the next piece of advice. "Recommendation 8: The Provost and Dean of the College, Gene Wubbels, be instructed by the President to cease and desist from all homophobic and other bigoted utterances in relation to his official duties. As well, he shall be instructed to cease and desist from advocating policies in any venue of the college which discriminate against gay and lesbian members of the community, their partners and families. Such instruction and an agreement to comply shall be made public along with an apology to the gay and lesbian community. Finally the President must make it clear that continued employment depends on strict adherence to the nondiscrimination clause of the college."

"The man's a bigot," said Weissman in an Elm interview Wednesday. "He has no business being in a position of authority."

Allegations of Wubbels' homophobia include reports of the Dean's view that homosexuality is immoral.

"He's been known to quote the Bible," said Weissman cryptically, adding "He has a very sexist view of the role of women," a bigotry that follows to other groups as well.

In addressing the report as a whole, Weissman admitted that a major flaw in the report's methodology is the exclusion of bisexuality from its terms.

"When I decided to make the original motion of this task force," he said, "I was so concerned with the major problems at hand that I was not as conclusive as I ought to have been — while to a certain extent, the issues of bisexuals are dealt with in the report, any future work — and there must be lots — must include the issues of bisexuals."

Weissman is hopeful about the future of homosexual persons at Washington College. "I would hope — in fact, I hope — that the major effect of this report will be to allow all members of this community to feel free to be openly whoever they are," he said.

Looking not just at the needs of current and future students, the Task Force Chair stresses the needs of the alumni body. "I think the college has to address its alumni and that the college has ignored the special needs and problems of its Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual alumni," Weissman said.

"I think the first way you can deal with that is for the college to officially apologize for having ignored and discriminated against then for the first 211 years of the college's history," he said.

He related that his own alma mater did just that: "I am an alum of Middlebury College in Vermont, where just such activities have been undertaken," he said. Middlebury apologized to its LesBiGay alumni body and invited them back for a special reunion on the campus grounds.

A LesBiGay Alumni Chapter was voted down by Alumni Council this spring "with the excuse that they do not want any special interest chapters — they didn't want to subdivide."

Weissman ended with this thought: "When all is said and done, homophobia comes not from fear of others but from fear of self, or, those who are down on homosexuals in public tend to have been down on homosexuals in private."

Student Profile: Tina Dayhoff

This weekend, Tina Dayhoff is directing two one-act plays that she has also written. The Freckled Jesus Story, first introduced during last years Playwriting course, and A Shoebox Full of SNNnow, a series of monologues that have been cut from eight to five for this production, is Tina's first real introduction into some of the delights and horrors that are associated with theatre.

Tina, a senior English major, came to WC from New Windsor, MD. She is a Dean's List Student, a member of the Society of Junior Fellows, and a co-editor of THIS, a literary magazine that she calls "a last hurrah for some of the seniors".

After graduation, Tina wants to stay in Chestertown. She wants to find a nice 9-5 job that is less work than she is doing now and she wants to be able to watch sit-coms and not feel guilty about all of the work that she should be doing. And with this goes out a plea for any kind of job with 40 hours or more per week.

Tina would eventually love to go to grad school to study either English Literature or Creative Writing but she has heard too many horror stories about both of the options. She would also like to have a job that she will enjoy and will keep her in touch with the literary world, such as teaching, publishing, etc. Also, since her drama production, she has had a fleeting thought that she would like to work in theatre because she now knows how to use power tools.

Tina considers herself a rather peace-loving individual. In fact, she has a hard time getting angry. This was proven in her Acting class last year when Dale told her to get so angry that she could break a chair with a broom handle. And she couldn't.

She considers as one of her most embarrassing moments when she went home for a weekend and her mother started reading one of the monologues about her and how restrictive she was and when she got to the word pussy, she got a two-hour lecture about sex.

Tina's ideal job would be to be put into a library and told to read all of the books and get paid for it. She also wouldn't mind teaching at a Community College because most of the students really want to be there not because of parental or societal pressures and also because Community Colleges are relatives new and different ideas and teaching techniques are usually allowed because of this newness.

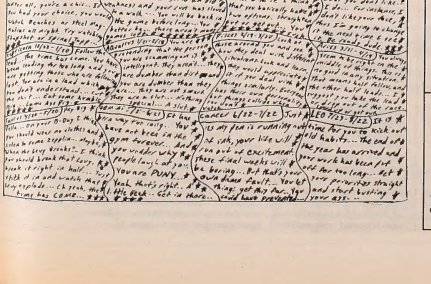
Tina's dream is to get to the point in her writing career as to where she can sit in a house and write most of the day and be aware that she can afford to do this for many years.

Tina's final quote: "Hey Yobbo, hand me a Makita."

Disco Queen No Longer Misses the Seventies

George and Rae asked me to write a piece about "Disco", defined by Webster's as a style of popular music designed for dancing and recorded with complex electronic instrumentation and heavy pulsating rhythmic beat. Two years ago, I transferred from a small college buried in the woods of Annandale, New York, where students took pride in being eccentric. Close to ninety percent of the student body sported bell-bottoms, wide collared shirts, and feathered hair as part of their every day style of dress! In passing any given dormitory hallway, you could hear sounds of liquid guitar mixed with shadings of piano all combined into that funky seventies sound we know term as "Disco". After deciding to leave, I thought I'd actually miss those sounds, as well as all of the strobe lights that shined from student's windows, until I came to find myself in the Washington College Dining Hall where a silver disco ball hangs from the center of the ceiling. I even noticed a few of Washington College's finest guys cultivating the look of longer and wider sideburns than Luke Perry himself(which I must admit suits them well)!

Now many of you might be thinking, "The seventies were the worst, fashion wise and music wise," but think again! How many of you have old embarrassing family photos with your hair slicked in the middle part, sisters in tube tops and brothers in polyester suits? How many of you went to grade school dances and begged the D.J. to play "Celebrate"? Trust me, i am going somewhere with this. Not only are they hysterical childhood flashback stories we tell and joke about, but they are responsible for shaping the music and fashion scene of the nineties!



Remember Chic? They were the biggest most influential group of the seventies. Their 1975 hit, "Good Times" inspired the entire phenomenon of rap music. Their HYPE songs sir Sister Sledge, Diana Ross, Carly Simon, and many more. In fact, they are responsible for pop, acid jazz, and even techno. Virtually all "second British Invasion" bands of the eighties formed out of a desire to recreate a Chic-and-rock fusion sound. We can thank Chic for giving us Duran Duran, Human League, Pet Shop Boys, and others. Madonna also strove at reviving the disco sound when she recorded "Holiday"! The whole new "grunge" look stems from patterns and fabrics once worn on the Disco floors at Studio 54. So once again, the saying is definitely true, "History does repeat itself." Even a little at Washington College.

For those of you styling with platform shoes, wide ties, and middle parts... more power to you! And those of you blaring old Blondie 45's or Kool and the Gang LP's, thanks for keeping the seventy-sound alive in Maryland and making this New Yorker feel at home. Finally, for any of you who feel that you music collection is lacking in the disco department, I recommend purchasing "The Disco Years" Vol. I and II. It's great for laughs and even a party or two. I promise it'll make you remember the days of big-buttoned jukeboxes that featured "Ring My Bell" and "Funky Town". Lastly, let's keep in mind that disco died as an exclusive music format in 1980. Thanks to all of the 90's "hipsters" who retreated to where they came from and helped launch its comeback ... and the beat goes on!

Tina Dayhoff's The Freckled Jesus Story and A Shoebox Full of Snow unite the distinct approaches of the creative writing and the drama departments. This proves a fruitful and unusual, yet sensible alliance. The first piece, a play in two acts, and the second, a series of monologues, seem to spring stylistically more from a poetic and fictional base than from a dramatic one. The result is a series of theatrical works addressing topics frequently ignored—much to society's detriment—in plays. A theatrical approach likewise enhances the rather poetic nature of the scripts.

The production will please those with literary inclinations because of the doggedly and successfully "literary" feel. These seem to be plays that would fare as well in the reading as in the acting, but to see them acted is gratifying, especially because this unique "feel" seems poignantly natural and deserving of theatrical exploration. The plays in some way convey a sense of fascination with words for their own sake. Dayhoff explores writing and the implications it brings with it. She explores emotional and mental issues of writers, and writers' relationships to the world and to the public. Among the exceptional features of Dayhoff's playwriting is her ability to capture natural aspects of speech. In this regard she surpasses, it seems, many professional playwrights, whose works can sound artificially rhetorical when performed.

The Freckled Jesus Story is a play in two parts, of which the reviewer saw, sadly, only the first. This first part centers around the life of a young poet, Ms. Black, who lives, somewhat like Emily Dickinson, in the cloistered seclusion of her apartment. She does not entertain people, and never leaves the building. But things change slightly when Mr. Blenckstone, an editor of a publication to which she has submitted, decides to drop by one day to find out more about the woman whose words inspired him to publish again. What follows is not a soap-opera melodrama of relationships, but Ms. Black's ironic insistence that her relationship with words is paramount. She shuffles about the room's small space, trying to transcend Mr. Blenckstone's presence while explaining the nature of her art and life. Justas she did before the man's arrival, she alternates between poring through countless books and rattling off snatches of poetry.

Although the entire sphere of action unfolds in Ms. Black's apartment, but rather, in the minds of both characters. The poet,

Senior Reading

This Sunday, the O'Neill Literary house is sponsoring yet another senior reading. This year's reading should prove to be very interesting because it could show a preview of this year's Sophie Kerr Prize winner. Adam Brown, Amanda Burt, Justin Cann, Lynn Clifford, Tanya Cunic, Tina Dayhoff, Erin Page, Chris Rummell, Mike Sapp, Roxanne Seubert, Matt Shields, Doug Smith, Susan Wackerbarth, and Cindy Young are those that are slated to make an appearance. Come show your support. The festivities begin at 8:00 p.m. and will take place in the O'Neill Literary House.

Leadership Awards

One hundred and six awards were given out the1993 Student Leadership Recognition Ceremony in Tawes Theatre on Thursday, April 22. Ryan Mahoney had been nominated by the English Department for his outstanding campus citizenship, but because of some presentations that were made out of order, Ryan was never called onto the stage to recieve public recognition. We apologize for this mistake and hope the Ryan realizes we are grateful for his fine character and service to the Washington College campus. Ryan is a positive, upbeat role model and student leader for the entire Washington College community.

Novello's Ten Commandments

On Wednesday, April 28, the William James Forum celebrated its thirtieth aniversary with a very distinguished lecturer, the Surgeon General of the United States, Antonia Novello, M.D., M.P.H. Dr. Novello was awarded the highest honor to be given to any William James Forum speaker, the honary degree, the Doctor of Science. Her lecture, Challenge, Change, and Caring: Watchwords for a HEalthier America, talked about the ten challenges that needed to be overcome in order for a national healthcare policy to actually work. These included education, voluntarism, the providing of mentors, the putting the money where the mouth is, more attention on children, a focus on the AIDS epidemic, a focus on public and private violence, working as a team, communication, and, finally, the blending of what we know with what we can do, without asking for anything in return.

Dr. Antonia C. Novello was appointed the 14th Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service in 1990. She became the first woman ever to hold that position. Guided by her motto- "Good science and good sense"- Novello advises the public on heath matters such as effects of smoking and alcohol consumption, AIDS, iet and nutrition, environmental health hazards, and the importance of immunization and disease prevention.

Though noted for her dipomacy and nuturing manner, Novello is outspoken regarding the country's health problems and she has used her position to attract national media attention to her views on health-related issues. Dr. Novello has chosen to conentrate on te health care of minorities, women, and children; injury prevention; and the problems of domestic violence, alcohol abuse among the nation's youth, and smoking among women and young people.

Dr. Novello made headlines last March when she condemned the R.J.Reynolds Tobacco Company for targeting youngsters with its advertising featuring the cartoon character "Joe Camel". She had attacked advertising for alcoholic beverages as well because, she says, "it misleads, misinforms, and unabashedly targets youth."

A board certified pediatrician, Novello left private practice in 1978 to enter the U.S. Public Health Service, where she rose to deputy director of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development. Among her responsibilities as the National Institutes of Haealth were coordinating pediatric AIDS research and co-chairing the Advisory Committee in Women's Health Issues. She is clinical professor of pediatrics at the Georgetown University School of Medicine.

and gradually, her editor acquaintance as well, uncover larger and larger spheres with their words. Like Ms. Black, the audience soon begins to ignore physical contexts in favor of the realms of the mind.

Unlike any plays or films I have ever seen that focus on a writer character, The Freckled Jesus Story treats the audience with generous and effortless doses of the poet herself, who is a creative dynamo. Generous windows into Ms. Black's artistic world invite us, of course, to closely focus upon this actual verbal material. Incidentally, some of these passages may sound familiar to our audience—placing these is just one of the sneaky challenges this play presents. Other continuous allusions to literary and historical themes add continual spice to the play and all the monologues. In one monologue, some ongoing references to material from a specific course at this college creates some startling fun.

The Freckled Jesus Story raises many questions, and it distinguishes itself in its discipline, leaving space for the audience to form answers, and even questions. An overall theme seems to be that of disparities between the apparent and the real. Among the play's related focuses are questions of originality and possession. For instance, if a poet writes poems that contain parts of other people's poems or novels, has this "second" poet stolen these? Or, could words instead be part of an unowned, universal flow, like air?

The play investigates the nature of isolation, and celibacy. Ms. Black seems entirely uninterested in things that society typically regards as "earthly," despite the Mr. Blenckstone's insistence that she must feel longing for company and for fresh air. Yet she virtually swims amid books all day, folding herself up in words and letting them run through and around her like cool water, and she grasps bundles of books in her arms to sleep with them passionately at night. Can we agree with her when she proclaims that if anything, she is a concubine? Both plays question the limited ways in which people are "allowed" to fulfill roles.

Incidentally, Dayhoff seems to have gained quite a knack for directing. She appears as assured in this capacity as in that of a playwright. Her ideas and suggestions to the actors in this regard are as thorough and thoughtful as any director I have witnessed. The actors, too, all seem to be enjoying this project, and have mastered the somewhat unusual demands of the scripts. The intricacies of the complex language present quite a different challenge from those often presented to actors. The overall tone of the pieces, with their emphasis on intellectual abstractions, is somewhat rare and, one would presume, challenging as well.

A Shoebox Full of Snow, a series of six monologues, uses mental challenges similar to those of Freckled Jesus, but does so with a flow of new, different, equally energetic approaches to other problems. These are, mostly, problems of control and oppression. Dayhoff's monologues take full advantage of their format. She fills them with vivid word-pictures—an ideal tactic when the stage is virtually bare and one character is entirely responsible for maintaining the audience's engagement. She is not content to allow her characters to merely recapitulate experiences they have had, or to rant on some arbitrary topic. Instead, she forces each monologue to become a virtual world, with a great a breadth of focus and innuendo as that of a full play.

The range of ideas and subjects covered in The Freckled Jesus Story and A Shoebox Full of Snow is vast. While the plays cover this ground quite subtly, one realizes finally that the multifaceted purposes of the playwright have been addressed with singular control, innovation, and sophistication. The entire production exerts a great deal of uncanny power. Dayhoff and the actors also know how to drop little bursts of humor in just the right spots.

The Freckled Jesus Story and A Shoebox Full of Snow will be performed in Tawes Theater at 8:00 p.m. on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. The first part of the play stars Lynn Clifford and Timothy Buckheit. The second part stars Cleo Patterson and Timothy Buckhiet. The monologues are performed, in order, by Chris Goldenburg, Richard McKee, Sally Lynne Clifford, Sally Haynesworth, and Thane Glenn.

TV Picks From the Bitch and the Bore

Twenty Ways to Deaden Your Mind During Finals Week

Once again we have taken it upon ourselves to fill this space. This week, we will be watching our all time favorite television programs. Some of the programs that have been chosen are still on the air but some, unfortunately, are no longer on. The shows that are still on the air you are certainly free to watch as you procrastinate all the work that you have left until the end of the semester (like I have) and the programs that have left the airwaves you can kill time reminiscing about. We came across a big problem in making our lists. To George's shock and dismay our lists were very similair(I believe the actual words were, "You Bitch, that is my show!"). To remedy this situation I am going first so as to steal the shows he wants out from under him.-R This is nothing new. You have been doing this for two weeks now. If I had time and energy to respond o these in my usual manner I would but it seems that some professors think that their class is the only class I am taking and they assign outrageous amounts of work. Get a clue!!!-G

1)thirtysomething-Yuppies at their finest. I wish my future looked as bright as theirs, now that the recession is a reality and this way of life no longer exists for the masses. Week after week of people whining about their jobs, families and love lives. Actually it sounds a bit like college. Maybe the future isn't that bleak.

2)Designing Women- Four outspoken Southern women with the best one liners written. I love this show for the strong female characters and the way it takes on feminist issues. I don't like the show as much without Suzanne simply because we do not see the wonderful relationship of Anthony and Suzanne. Any women who believes that men should be ostriolated is wonderful in my book. By the way I have been told on occasion that I am Suzanne(George's way of endearing himself to me).(See my list for further information-G)

3)Cagney and Lacey- Another program with strong female leads. My mother and I would stay up late together to watch this program and marvel at the stupidity of the males. I also like the thought of women having guns and taking down criminals.(Macho women with guns. Sounds like fun to me-G)

4)Parker Lewis Can't Lose-The most amazing cinematography and sound effects on the tube today. Yeah, it is coming back on the air. If my high school had been like this one maybe I would have enjoyed it. The principal is my favorite because of the fits she throws every week and that greasy dude she has working as a spy.(twisted, I like it-G)

5)Moonlighting-Witty banter, sexual innuendo, and great clothing. One of the best shows to ever happen. My favorite episode was the adaption of Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, especially the horse with the sunglasses. Too bad it had to be ruined by warring egos in the end but the show still is worthy of classic status.(I love this show-G)

6)Beverly Hills 90210- Okay, maybe not the best show in television but it's could for an hour of mindless entertainment. Nobody in my high school loooked that good but unfortunately they wore the same clothes and drove the same cars(I am from New Jersey!). My favorite is when they have a very special episode. Yeah! Let's see Brenda cry one more time as Dylan gets drunk and Kelly breaks a nail.(Get out of my Facial!!-G)

7)Murphy Brown- I love a woman with a big mouth who's not afraid to use it. Her secretary problem has become a running joke(my mother loves this show because she has the same problem). My favorite episode is the one where she sent Miles 12 pizzas throughout the night and they weren't at regular intervals so he didn't get any sleep. This is a woman who knows how to work around problems. Also I like Corky's special effects and Frank's pathetic life as a bachelor.(It's okay-G)

8)Anything But Love- Hannah and Marty are the perfect couple or not. Either way they were great together. Ann Magnuson was fabulous as the editor of the magazine at which they worked(she reminds me of J.Heather Lynch). The best line ever uttered on this show was by Marty."Women chose when they have sex, men just take where they can get it."

9)Days of Our Lives- Yes I am plugging my soap. I have been watching this soap for 12 years now and i live it even though it has gone downhill. I will never give up hope that it will reach the glory of those Bo and Hope days. (soaps are stupid!-G)

10)Tiny Toons-I mentioned them before in our music picks but they are too wonderful to ignore. They are hip and far too sarcastic for children to get the whole message. Some of the references in the show are for adults only but kids still enjoy it. Elmyra's quick change into Madonna was classic.

George's List

1)thirtysomething-whiny, individuals experiencing midlife-crisises, divorce, death, cancer, children. Rae compares me to Gary. I don't know why. Maybe because I can never make up my mind, I don't know what I want out of life, I never appreciate what I have, I love literature, etc. My favorite episode is the one in which Gary is having a breakdown concerning his life and Emily Dickinson comes to him in a vision.(I'm tired of my problems, there are big monkeys flying out of their butts and I am glad Gary dies!-R)

2)Designing Women-pushy, southern women with attitudes. gotta love em. Susan is my favorite. She reminds me of Rae. I don't know why, she just does. My favorite episode is when Suzanne glues her mouth shut with SuperGlue™. It gives me hope for the future. (Your future is bleak if that is your big hope. Can't you come up with an original choice?-R)

3)Sesame Street and/or Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood- my perfect day would be to sit around and watch these shows back to back. Top it off with Fred and Burt and Ernie joining me for dinner and I would be in ecstasy. But, I think the worst thing that they did on Sesame Street was to make Snuffaluppagus not imaginary any more. And also, they changed the theme song. No more "Sunny days, sweeping the clouds away, on my way to where the air is sweet(everyone sing along)." (If you get any sappier I will steal your security pillow and puke all over it.-R)

4)China Beach-Dana Delaney and crew helped me see how war is even more horrible than I thought it was. Great acting. Now being showed on Lifetime™.(This is the most boring show to ever happen-R)

5)Family Ties-I am Steven Keaton and I am destined to having an Alex for a child.(It is only fitting that you have Alex as a child although I think it is more likely that you will have a Mallory in your house.-R)

6)Roseanne-Today's Queen of Comedy. Lately she has had many a other famous guest stars that just blow my mind. First it was Sandra Bernhart and now Tim Curry. Must be nice to have that much drawing power.(I love the bitch to death-R)

7)Anything but Love-Hannah and Marty. I agree with Rae.(It is actually in print. George has agreed with me. And people thought it would never happen.-R)

8)Northern Exposure-Dr. Fleishman and Maggie are prime examples of the love/hate syndrome. The main existence of my being. Either I love you or I hate you and if I do love you, I hate loving you and if I hate you, I love hating you. This show often reminds me of Moonlighting for some strange reason. I also love the other eccentric characters and hopefully I will get to visit Alaska some day.(Get over your damn syndrome. I hope you do make it to Alaska. Then I wouldn't have to hear your incessant whine.-R)

9)Seinfeld-too fabulous of a show to say anything about.(and besides, it's about nothing-R)

10)Fernwood Tonight and/or Late Night With David Letterman-stupid, human jokes for those of you with a dry sense of humor. Both are satirical spoofings of the late night talk show thing. Especially funny if you watch them with other individuals that appreciate stupid jokes that go over other people's heads. (I hate these shows! Martin Mull and David Letterman are the whitest men I have ever seen. Late Night is just plain boring and Fernwood has too many men encased in plaid polyester.-R)

This has been yet another article that has been used as a filler. Hopefully, this will be the last installment of the ever-popular "bitch and bore" series. Thank you for the many responses and letters. They were greatly appreciated and we appreciate your support.

does not allow students or faculty to make a private decision in difficult situations. "What would happen if the violator is the student's best friend? Or lover?" he asked. "The informer clauses of the Honor Code don't recognize the viability of competing values and the range of what a person is."

He said that if the code's current negation of personhood is to be resolved, the informer clauses must be "scuttled" from the current code as well as from any future code that the college might adopt. Brien also stressed the importance of crafting a new Honor Code that integrates and affirms both academic and social personhood. "Academic integrity has significant social implications," he said. "Not to give credit [to sources] is, in a subtle way, to deny the social dimension of our own being. We have to recognize our interconnection with others."

What Brien plans to do at Monday's meeting is to recommend changing the honor code temporarily until a student-drafted code is completed. One of his recommendations is to replace the current paragraph on the "Responsibility of the Student." A part of the proposed change reads, "If a student witnesses someone else cheating, two primary options are available. The first option for a student who witnesses another student cheating is to confront the offending student personally, affirming the value of the Honor Code and asserting that any infraction of it diminishes the entire campus community." The second option is to inform the appropriate authorities of the violation.

Faculty members would also have more than option. Brien recommends that in any case of a first violation of the Honor Code, professors should be able to deal privately with the student. However, in all cases of academic dishonesty, the professor would be required to "report the incident of such a violation in writing to the Dean of the College, who will in turn keep a log of all such incidents." The professor could also choose to "turn the matter of a first offense over to the Associate Dean of the College for disposition."

In addition, Brien will propose to replace the first two paragraphs of the Honor Code, which primarily address the issue of the college's commitment to academic honesty, with three new paragraphs. One reaffirms support for both academic and social honesty, and the second stipulates that the new code would ultimately have to be "presented for approval by both the Student Government Association and the Faculty."

The third paragraph addresses the signing of the Honor Code. Students will have to sign the Honor Pledge as they do now, but the difference will be that they will "submit the signed pledges to representatives of the Student Government Association during Orientation sessions conducted for first year and transfer students."

Instead of making an impersonal pledge, students will have to make personal pledges to SGA representatives. Brien said in his interview that it is important for students to make a real pledge. "The negation of personhood is reinforced by the policy of signing the pledge the way we carry it out now." He indicated that many students do not take the current pledge seriously, and that they feel as if they are being "blackmailed" when they have to sign it before registering for classes in their freshmen year.

Brien will make his proposal to the faculty on Monday without the support of the Ad Hoc Committee on Academic Honesty, an organization which he co-chaired with Bridgette Winchester, who is herself no longer part of the committee, until he resigned several weeks ago. His resignation came after the former SGA leadership recommended that the committee suspend any further study and proposals until a student version of the Honor Code could be drafted. Brien said that he also felt as if he had to resign after the rest of the committee seemed ready to block any discussion of the substance of the proposal that had been suggested.

"The issue of scuttling the informer clauses is so important to me that I had to step down as chair, and go forward with my proposal even without group support," Brien said. He added that he has a deep sense of moral obligation to bring this particular proposal to the attention of the faculty. "My commitment to this has behind it a deeper one to values of personhood. I can't live with myself if I don't try it."

serve the same rights as all other Americans. To say otherwise is just bigotry, not sticking to the status quo. Since African-Americans make up a total (roughly) of twelve percent of the population nationwide, does this mean that they don't deserve the same rights as white Americans? Of course not, everyone deserves to have their civil rights protected.

This new study which states that only 1% of the population is gay is first of all inaccurate because:

a) not all people were asked to take part in this study, it was a small sampling of a small segment of our society, middle class males between 20-30 years of age.

b) as with all studies, it doesn't take into account that people lie, especially in a matter where they can be fired, beaten, discriminated against, etc. if the information was leaked.

This study is used merely as fuel to discredit the lesbigay rights movement, which it should not do. Human rights are human rights, no matter how large a segment of the population may be when they ask for them. Numbers just serve to make things sound official. If they really mattered, then no one but white women would have rights in this country since that group outnumbers any other group.

I do realize that this is a campus where "feminazi" is a term commonly used to describe a woman who seeks equality, just as "dyke" is the accepted term for a lesbian. I can't expect much more than this since there are people on this campus who didn't even sit in a classroom with a black student until they came to this school. (And I always thought I was sheltered.) Also, you can always hear that (in)famous "now, I don't want to sound prejudiced, but..." issuing forth from a student's mouth regularly. Whenever I hear this, I know what is coming next, a prejudiced remark. This is more of a country club than a college. The student body seems more interested in their beemers than in the rights of anyone else.

on our campus comes from misunderstandings. If the SGA could be the vehicle to aid mutual understanding, many problems could be avoided. Next semester the SGA executive board will be available weekly in an informal forum to answer and address questions and aid in the student body's general understanding of all the aspects of our school. We will let you know where and when next fall.

These ideas are a starting point for the coming year. Any additional ideas or thoughts brought to me personally or to the executive board or senate will be greatly appreciated. Many new and creative ideas could easily come up and I want to encourage the voicing of these ideas. I see this as the first step and a theme for a prosperous future year.

A deletion from the familiar CoffeeHouse will be the arcade room. Pinball and video game machines will not appear in the new, improved student center. Pool and ping-pong tables will be niched in the current site of the tv room (in the east 'wing'), and the tv lounge will be situated in the area behind the current bar (in the area of current WCDS staff offices).

The current stage will be removed and a portable, removable stage will be available for performance events in the CoffeeHouse (marked 'multi-purpose room' on the new plans).

* Wallspace between the Snack Bar and the CoffeeHouse will be glass, and freer access between the two areas will be given by doors.

The Snack Bar itself will be completely different, with grills and food preparation areas running down the sides (rather than at the front of the current facility). The free-standing tables (which currently seat about 40 maximum) will be replaced with booths seating 90-100 people.

All of the money for the project, which totals under $600,000, is in hand. Trout expects a $595,000 ceiling and hopes for an expenditure of $575,000.

Washington College is contracting the project itself. "A lot of the work is being done by our own crew," said Trout.

Work will begin May 24, the day after Commencement. "It's not so much a groundbreaking as a wall-knocking-down," Trout quipped.

The proposed completion date is Fall Break 1993; Trout hopes for a faster finish, particularly of the Snack Bar.

"I am delighted at all the support and imagination that the students have put into this project," said Trout. "It's going to make a difference in the life of the college.

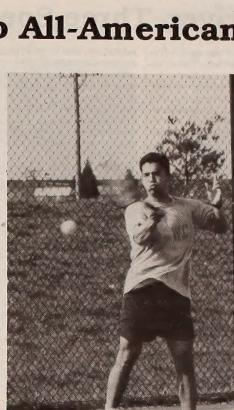
A Chat With Two All-Americans



Doug Hoffberger
Co-Sports Editor

At Washington College, we have many fine athletes competing in an array of sports. Few athletes however, earn the distinction of College All-American. Co-captains Alberto Diaz and Trevor Hurd have certainly earned their All-American honors. Diaz, a senior, who played his high school ball at McDonough in Maryland, currently is ranked 16th in the nation in singles and 11th in the nation for doubles. Diaz, last years most valuable player, also holds a cumulative G.P.A. of 3.1. Trevor Hurd hails from Houston, Texas and was last year's most improved player. Hurd, who seems to always pick bad basketball teams to follow, is ranked 23rd in singles and 11th in doubles nationally.

ELM: When did you both begin to play tennis?
ALBERTO: I started taking lessons when I was 8 years old. I lived in the Dominican Republic and all tennis lessons were given for free. I remember my mom watching me play during my first lesson. I really didn't want to play, but my mom forced it on me. For the first four years of my tennis career, I didn't want to be playing, but I'm nothing but thankful now.
TREVOR: I started playing when I was 8 years old in the backwoods of Mississippi. My first vivid memory of wanting to become a tennis player occured during the famous match between McEnroe and Borg in 1978.
ELM: How has your tennis progressed since you've been at WC?
ALBERTO: When I arrived here as a freshman, I was playing number six singles, and now I'm playing number one, and I feel rather comfortable.
TREVOR: I came here as a sophomore in 1989 and I played number four singles, and currently I'm playing number two singles. From this slight move, it probably doesn't appear as though I've made much progress, but my skills have been taken to a new level over the past three years.
ELM: Over your years at Washington College, what have been the most major changes in the tennis program?
T&A: The firing of Fred Wyman was probably the biggest change in the WAC tennis program. That particular year, our record was good and we were on a roll heading into nationals. Then all of a sudden we get hit with this. It was just so unexpected, and very disappointing.
ELM: Since the Wyman incident, what has happened to the program?
T&A: Tim Gray has happened to the tennis program, that's what. We couldn't have asked for a better replacement for Fred. Tim is probably the best thing that has ever happened to WAC tennis.

He has an aggressive style of coaching that has really helped our doubles game. He's taught us that we can't relax and play defensively, and that we must constantly be on the attack. Sometimes we get the priveledge of playing against Tim, but to tell you the truth, we can't remember ever losing to him.
ELM: How has this year's team compared to teams in the past?
T&A: This year the team may be a little weaker skillwise then teams in the past, but personality wise it's the best team we've ever played on. We all get along, and that's half of playing. We do have strong players, don't get us wrong, it's just that we're not strong enough to compete with the top five teams in Division III. We have produced wins this year at the right time. We have done as well as we possibly could this year considering the tough schedule.
ELM: When did you both become All-Americans?
T&A: We became All-Americans at the end of the '92 season. We were ranked 5th in doubles going into the national tournament, which gave us what is known as an "automatic birth." The only other way to become an All-American, is to reach the quarter-finals in the national tournament. At Nationals last year, we beat the 2nd best team in the nation from Gustavus-Aldolphus. We absolutely rolled over them, 7-5, 6-1, in what was probably one of the best matches we've ever played. We then lost to Ryan McKee, and Chris Noyes of Claremont, who eventually went to win the tournament.

There's also alot of politics involved in becoming an All-American. There is a ranking committee that is made up of six coaches from different Division III schools, and those coaches wouldn't be human if they didn't exhibit biased attitudes to their own players.
ELM: Are you competitive with each other?
T&A: (After a slight chuckle) You're damn right we are. We're always pushing one another to do better. This year we have not been as competitive as we have been in the past, because the line-ups are more or less set in stone for the top three players.
ALBERTO: I feel comfortable playing at the number one spot and Trevor is comfortable at number two. If I lose, Trevor's rankings are screwed and vice versa.
T&A: There is no leeway to let up on opponents playing in the number one and two positions. Especially in doubles, everyone is gunning for a piece of us, because for some teams, it's their only chance to get a bid to Nationals. Also, as captains, we must play hard, because we in a way forecast matches for the younger players. We also talk trash to each other while we play...our game thrives on this chatter. We certainly don't overpower teams, but we still own them. Even at Newt's Midnight Madness, we talk trash to one another.
ELM: What was your greatest moment at WC?
T&A: It had to be our match versus Skansee and Reid during last year's National Doubles Tournament. It was one of the last matches of the team tournament. The win shot us way up in the rankings. It was definitely a turning point in our careers.
ELM: After Washington College, will you continue your tennis careers?
ALBERTO: I think my tennis career, as far as competitive play is concerned, will end. All I wanted to do was to get the most out of my college career, and I've certainly done just that. I may give some tennis lessons, but that will be the extent of it.
TREVOR: I may teach a little on the side, but I'm really interested in becoming a member of the Secret Service. That's right, I'm dropping my racket and picking up a 9mm Beretta. In the fall of '93, I will be entering the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center.
T&A: We both got a taste of what it would be like to play on the professional circuit, and it's something that we have no interest in because tennis has to become your life. It's just practice day after day after day. We've both played satellite tournaments which is in effect the minor league of tennis. This is by far the hardest, most competitive minor league circuit that yields little reward.
ELM: Best of luck goes to the tennis team for the rest of the season and the post-season..
T&A: Thanks Doug.
Elm: You're welcome. Hey, are you guys going out tonight?
T&A: yup!

Alberto Diaz has been sotid at number one all season.

Women's Lacrosse Looks To Next Year

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

The Washington women's lacrosse team wrapped up their season last week with a 20-4 loss to Haverford on Wednesday. While the team finished at 1-10, quite a few positive moments marked this year's Shorewomen team.

"It (the season) was not a disappointment," co-captain Eleanor Shriver said. "Anybody would be disappointed with only win, but winning isn't everything.

"We got along really well," she said. "It was a good group of people, and we had fun regardless of the outcome."

The outcome certainly wasn't very favorable for most of the season. The Shorewomen were outscored 162-73 on the season, with five losses of ten goals or more. However, a few players definitely made their presence known.

Amy McCleary, a senior co-captain, notched 36 goals and four assists. She had a big impact in Washington's only win as she scored six goals and notched two assists in the team's 13-12 win over Swarthmore on March 25.

Renee Guckert, in her first year on the team, was also outstanding, tallying 19 times for the season. Sophomore Kirsten Lucas added 14 goals and four assists, and freshman Allison Naditch showed flashes of strong play, finding the net twice.

With the loss of only two seniors at the end of the season, Coach Diane Guinan will have 15 experienced players returning next year. With 1993 over with, perhaps the 1994 version of the women's lacrosse team could have untapped potential.

"As the season went on, we improved so much," sophomore Jennifer Hagey said. "We came back and played some really great lacrosse games."

Hopefully for Washington, the success will carry over. With Nancy Millhouser returning in goal for two more seasons, and 36 goals coming from underclassmen, next year's chances look promising.

For WC's Shriver, Three Sports Is The Charm

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

With the conclusion of women's lacrosse season, Washington senior Eleanor Shriver concludes a brilliant four-year athletic career.

Shriver's prowess on the athletic field is impressive in itself, as she has been a captain on both the lacrosse and field hockey teams.

However, her feat is even more amazing, as she has played three sports at the college level while maintaining high academic grades and participating in many college activities. She hasn't had much time to relax.

"It (playing three sports) just sort of happened," Shriver said. "It wasn't something that I planned. If I had to do it all over again, I probably wouldn't, but I don't like to quit things."

As a freshman, Shriver only played field hockey. The team was 7-6 in 1989 with Shriver playing occasionally. She planned on playing lacrosse in the spring but could not due to illness.

In her sophomore year, she lettered on a field hockey team that achieved a national rank of 14 and finished 10-3-1, placing second in the MAC Southeast.

"We were really strong sophomore year, and I think the group I'm graduating with has improved," she said. "The sophomore team, I think everybody was together."

In the spring of 1991, Shriver hit the tennis courts for a year, which reflected her versatility as an athlete.

However, she really displayed her athletic ability in her junior year. She returned to the field hockey field for the third year and started every game for the Shorewomen. The team finished at 10-5-1. In the winter, she began swimming and playing club basketball. Playing two sports in the same season, even though one was a club sport, was rather difficult.

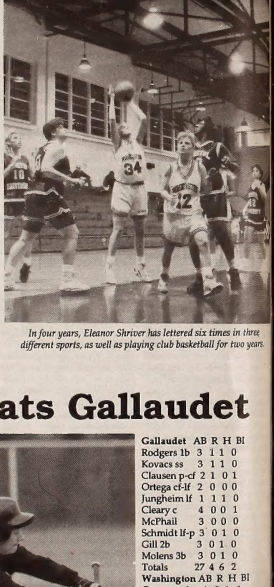
"Sometimes I'd go straight from the pool to the bus for a basketball game," she said.

In the spring, she went back to the lacrosse field and lettered for the Shorewomen.

This year, she has once again played three sports. She received her third letter in field hockey, played basketball for Coach Lanee Cole, and co-captained the lacrosse team. Her career is coming to a close, and Shriver has loved every minute of it.

In hockey, she also set a school record for the most defensive saves in a season with 13, as well as the most defensive saves in a game with four. Additionally, she scored two goals and had two assists in 1992.

"I'm very proud of it, and I think my parents are proud, but I haven't done this for them. I've done it for me," she said. "Twenty-five years down the road, I'll be proud of my education and know that these years got me where I am."



While participating in three sports and maintaining a GPA near 3.0, Shriver also has been a resident assistant, a member of the SGA, a tour guide, and a member of Alpha Chi Omega. The time commitment has been substantial, but she hasn't minded.

"The hardest thing that I face is from other people. They question my reasons, or think I have ulterior reasons," she said. "But it's the individual person. You can't tell somebody to do it. They have to want to do it.

"As long as you have in sight the important things, there shouldn't be anyone questioning my ability to handle them. I don't want to choose. I think I can handle it, and I want to do it."

Hailing from Garrison Forest School in Owings Mills, Maryland, Shriver believes she has made the most of her college years.

"I don't sit and wait for things to come to me," she said. "I think this college has a lot to offer, and I think you need to go out and find them."

In four years, Eleanor Shriver has lettered six times in three different sports, as well as playing club basketball for two years.

Shoremen Baseball Beats Gallaudet

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

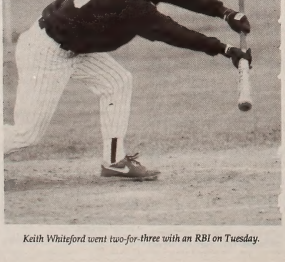
Washington hosted Gallaudet's baseball team on Tuesday. The visitors put on a strong showing, but the Shoremen prevailed by an 8-4 score.

Kevin Roland went the distance for Washington, striking out 12 on his way to his first victory this season. He didn't get much help defensively, though, as the Shoremen made four errors in the game.

"Defensively, we played one of our poorer games," Coach Ed Athey said. "From a positive point of view, I think it gave Roland a lot of confidence to get his first win, and I think he's going to be a pitcher to be reckoned with in the next few years."

The Shoremen started slowly, falling behind 2-0, as Gallaudet scored in the first and third innings.

However, Washington broke into the scoring column in a big way in the fifth when they scored five runs and batted around. Gary Yovanovich walked twice in the inning, and Andy Parks had a two-RBI single to fuel the rally.



The Shoremen blew the game open in the sixth when they added three runs to the lead. Mike Hanifee had a two-RBI single to lead the way, and Washington took a commanding 8-2 lead.

Gallaudet scored twice in the top of the seventh, but Roland held on to earn his first win.

Parks, Keith Whiteford and Dan Coker each had two hits in the win. Rory Coway, Whiteford, Hanifee, Parks and Yovanovich each contributed RBIs to the win.

Barring a cancellation, the Shoremen finished their season yesterday at St. Mary's College. The Gallaudet game moved their season's record to 11-14. Athey sums up the .500 record fairly simply.

"This is one of the best defensive teams we've had at the college, but we just haven't been hitting," he said. "We've had good enough pitching to win, though."

Keith Whiteford went two-for-three with an RBI on Tuesday.

Shorewomen Fall To Sea Gulls

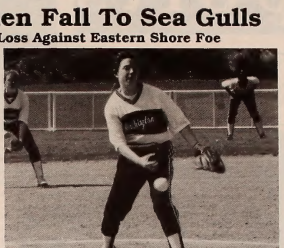
Errors Hurt In 3-1 Loss Against Eastern Shore Foe

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

On Tuesday, the Washington softball team played a tight game against Eastern Shore foe Salisbury, but fell short to the Sea Gulls by a score of 3-1.

Before a wild crowd of 25 faithful fans, the Shorewomen got great pitching from Diana Holton, and a strong offensive output from freshman Michelle Chin to help stay close. Unfortunately, Chin didn't get very much help from other spots in the line up, and the defense didn't support Holton very well in the early innings.

"All three runs were unearned, but we played a lot better than we have been playing," co-captain Tara Rathel said. "We have to get the bats going."



Holton started the game strong, retiring the first two batters she faced in the game. However, two defensive errors and a single loaded the bases for Salisbury. The first run of the game scored on another error, and the Gulls took a 2-0 lead on a Holton wild pitch. Those were the only runs Salisbury's Sonja Akers would need.

However, Akers struggled in the first inning. Leading off, Rathel singled down the right field line and went to second on a wild pitch. On a Chin bunt single, Rathel went to third. The Shorewomen scored their only run of the game in the inning when Rathel and Chin executed a perfect double steal. Akers retired the next three batters in order to end the inning.

Salisbury added their insurance run in the second. Holton struck out the first batter but walked Jennifer Toole and Channon Cianelli. On a Kelly Carey single up the middle, Chin threw the ball past Kelly Eakin at third in an attempt to nail Toole on a force play, and Salisbury's third run scored. Holton retired the last two batters to end the inning.

Unfortunately for Washington, Akers settled down for the Gulls. She struck out the next four batters before Washington threatened again in the third. With one out, Rathel walked, Chin singled, and Denise Hakansen walked to load the bases. However, Akers retired Courtney Myers and Eakin to end the inning.

Both pitchers cruised after the third. In the Salisbury fourth, Niki Goenaga threw out Toole on a steal attempt to thwart a potential rally. In the Gulls' fifth inning, Holton allowed one hit, and the defense made one error, but she escaped from the jam easily. In the sixth and seventh, only two Salisbury hitters reached base.

Diana Holton leads Washington's pitching staff in 1993.

For Washington, Akers retired six of the seven hitters she faced in the fourth and fifth, including three strike outs. Chin was the only hitter to reach with a double. Her third hit raised her average from .237 to .292 in one game.

In the sixth, the Shorewomen got runners to first and third with two outs but failed to score, and Akers mowed them down, in order, in the seventh.

Coach Lanee Cole had mixed feelings about the game.

"Diana (Holton) threw real well. It was a good game. We're still learning, and we've made a lot of progress this year," she said. "But it should have been a 'W'."

Div III No. 1 Team Makes Impression

Last Saturday, the Washington men's lacrosse team took a 17-5 beating at the hands of the Salisbury Sea Gulls.

Salisbury (12-0), ranked first in the USILA Division III lacrosse poll, jumped out to a 7-1 lead in the first period behind three goals from Joe DiNenna, two from Jason Coffman, and one each from Dave Webb and Chris Soper. Chris Cote scored the only goal of the period for Washington at the 7:34 mark.

In the second quarter, the Gulls built their lead, taking a 13-2 score into the locker room at halftime. Salisbury got tallies from six different people in the period. Washington's only goal of the quarter came from Bart Jaeger on an assist from Greg Lawler at the 5:11 mark.

However, the Shoremen settled down in the second half, only being out scored 4-3 for the half. Jason Paige scored twice, and Harris Murphy added one for the half to make the final score 17-5.

The Shoremen will travel to Haverford today for their final MAC match. They will conclude their regular season tomorrow at St. Mary's in a 1:30 p.m. game.

For his efforts in leading the Shoremen to another successful season, Coach Terry Corcoran has been named Newt's Coach of the Week.

As if being a redhead wasn't enough for Coach Corcoran to win this award, he has completely turned the Shoremen around from last year's somewhat disappointing season. Along with the rest of the coaching staff, Corcoran has masterminded key victories against F&M, W&L, and Cortland State. Despite the drubbing versus the vultures of Salisbury State, Corcoran has made sure that the team holds high aspirations for the rest of the season. Currently ranked 5th in the nation with an 8-2 record, the Shoremen are looking to win the MAC conference and take that win all the way to the finals of the national tournament. Go Shoremen!

High Street has a very good softball team!

Hey Billy, sorry you missed the paper again! I'm glad you warmed up in the bullpen for so long, though.

And McCarthy, believe it or not, it's no big deal to win a 'B' softball game.

Look for next week's final issue and Newt's POW for the year. As Hoffberger retires, we'll say good bye in fine fashion.

Baseball Defeats Gallaudet University

For the second week in a row, a women's lacrosse player graces the back page of The Elm. However, in all fairness, we don't want to leave out a super lacrosse player in Amy McCleary. McCleary finishes her fourth year at Washington with a host of athletic successes. A field hockey and lacrosse player, she has certainly been one of the stars at the WAC. She led the team for the second straight year in the lacrosse scoring department with 36 goals. While this year's lacrosse season may have been disappointing, McCleary stood out.

Campus Mourns Loss of Freshman Conan J. Bailey

Freshman Conan J. Bailey was found dead early Thursday morning, apparently of a self-inflicted gunshot wound from a handgun.

At press time, the police report was not available and the "unattended death" is still under investigation.

Bailey was living off campus this semester at the request of his parents. He was last seen on campus the night of Saturday, May 1. He was headed to his residence and never arrived; his landlady said he kept very regular hours and was worried about his absence.

Monday evening Bailey's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Vernon Bailey of Salem, New Jersey, filed a missing persons report with the Chestertown Police Department.

Tuesday his professors were notified and a notice was posted in the faculty lounge to alert professors to his absence.

Thursday, May 6, a delivery man found the body behind Acme grocery store at Kent Plaza Shopping Center, and notified the police.

There is nothing to indicate that alcohol or drugs were involved in the death, and there is no knowledge of a suicide note.

Bailey was involved in creative writing and had strong academic standing.

His parents are looking into establishing some sort of memorial at the O'Neill Literary House.

A memorial service, to be held in his home town, will be announced when investigations are complete.

President Trout issued the following statement to the campus:

> I am deeply saddened to report that one of our students, Conan J. Bailey, was found dead this morning, apparently as the result of a self-inflicted gunshot wound. Conan had been reported missing on Monday evening and the discovery of his body was the result of a search by the Chestertown Police Department and Washington College security officers.
> Conan was a member of our freshman class and the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Vernon Bailey of Salem, New Jersey. He will be greatly missed.
> We will notify the community when funeral arrangements have been made.

Faculty End Year with Epic

J. Tarin Towers
Editor-in-Chief

Beginning with a pile of memos before anyone entered Dunning Lecture Hall, the final faculty meeting of the 1992-93 school year convened on May 3 to discuss issues ranging from affirmative action to academic honesty.

In the interest of saving time and covering as much ground as possible at this last meeting, reports from several offices of the college were issued in advance.

Statements responding to the report of the Task Force on the Status of Gay Men and Lesbians at Washington College were issued by the President and the Dean prior to the meeting and appear in this issue. Professor Robert Day's statement also appears in this issue.

Faced with a 19.2 percent increase in health insurance premiums, President Trout is pushing for college employees to pay only 32 percent of that increase rather than the 50 percent advocated by the board.

Trout announced at the meeting that the Board of Visitors and Governors will reconvene May 23 to revote on the issue. Paychecks put out in the interim will reflect the faculty's choice in anticipation of a favorable vote from the Board.

Dean Wubbels, in his written report thanked the faculty for progress on the Middle States preparation process and encouraged them to keep at it.

Vice-President for Development and College Relations Shawn Lyons reported Annual Fund giving was up to $1,142,317 as of April 29, a 35 percent increase over last year at this time.

The estate of Grace Nickerson has bequested a $30,000 endowment for library acquisitions.

Membership in the 1782 society is up to 279 members, an all-time high, and a total of 310 is expected by the end of the fiscal year.

President Trout made some additional announcements of grants and awards:

- The Charles A. Johnson Junior Faculty Fellow for this year is Lida Baldwin. She will receive a semester off.
- The Research Corporation of America has awarded a $25,270 grant to Rosette Roat for two summers of research in chemistry.
- The National Science Foundation will award between $55 and $57,000 to Rosemary Ford as an NSF-ILI grant.
- CASE's annual alumni magazine awards include a bronze prize in the best news/features article category to Garry Clarke for an article in The Washington College Magazine.

For the Long Range Planning Committee, Dean Wubbels reported that the agreed major emphases for the coming years are:

- growth by the year 2,003 to 1,150 students
- involvement of students in living and learning.

Academic Council motioned the establishment of a Neuroscience Concentration in the Psychology Department; the faculty waived the seven-day rule and passed it unanimously.

Richard Striner, Board of Publications Chair, congratulated Scott Ross Koon as the new editor of the Elm and Kristin Callahan as returning editor of the Pegasus. Mary Jefferson also will be returning as co-editor of the yearbook.

Robert Day, for the Faculty Affairs Committee, proposed an Affirmative Action plan which was discussed at length, amended, and then tabled. (See article page 6)

Faculty Affairs also announced that the position of Faculty Secretary and its selection will be investigated next year as part of an examination of all faculty committees.

Fight Instigator Brought Up on Assault Charges

Criminal charges have been placed against a Rehobeth, Delaware man by detectives of the Kent County Sheriff's Office. William Nelson Coleman, III, 19, of Highway 1, Rehobeth, was charged with five counts of assault and battery (one count for each victim) after his involvement in an off-campus Washington College party at "The Markey Farm" located on Quaker Neck Road south of Chestertown on April 18 at 2:10 a.m.

In that incident, Andrew Carr Wood, 24, a WC student, was airlifted to Shock Trauma in Baltimore and later released from the injuries sustained as a result of an altercation.

Two additional students, Matthew Patrick Mullin, 19, and Robert Jon O'Connor, 18, were treated and released at Kent & Queen Anne's Hospital.

Coleman was charged by detectives after ten written statements and concurrence with Kent County State's Attorney Susanne Hayman were obtained.

The arrest was made at 10:30 a.m. April 28, and Coleman was taken before a District Court Commissioner where he was released on personal recognizance. Coleman is a former resident of Chestertown and is not a student at Washington College.

Two other students injured at the off-campus party who did not require medical treatment are Nancy Elizabeth Whiteman, 20, and Sonja Elizabeth Wilson, 19.

Detectives are pursuing, in cooperation with college officials, the Kent County Alcohol Beverage Inspector and the State's Attorney's Office, strict enforcement of all underage drinking violations.

"Do not go gentle into that good night Rage, rage against the dying of the light"

—Dylan Thomas

When I woke up this morning to a phone call telling me about Conan, a number of things flashed through my head. "Why?" was one of the main ones. And, nice thing to say or not, "Bad timing" was another. No, this phone call also was not a dream. This academic year has seemed to be designed to deliver the maximum stress all the time, and as I write this editorial, I am still in shock.

I was all prepared to write a joyous conclusion to my year as editor-in-chief. It looks as though I'm going to get all my work done, I've got big plans for next year, and hey, I'm going to New York.

And then this happens — a sort of bookend to last semester's hell. I don't know what to say. I don't have any sentiments right now, seeing as how I'm completely numb.

How do I mourn the loss of someone who has, intentionally or not, hurt so many of my friends with his actions? I and they are sad and angry and confused all at the same time. I can't say anything tastefully sympathetic. I just don't have it in me.

Has anyone else noticed how this campus seems to be the central setting for a very bizarre and rather Vim Venders kind of film? Life here tends to be so very odd. Most of the time it's odd in a vaguely disturbing but generally enjoyable manner. People who tell me that Chestertown is boring obviously don't look around them very often. I mean, I get cabin fever myself and I am anxiously awaiting the culture shock ahead of me when I move into my apartment on Washington Square in the Village. But a lot of strange and wonderful things go on in our community — and (occasionally but not as rarely as we'd like) sad and terrible things happen as well.

Things come and go, and my memories of this year include being physically threatened at a Halloween party; being onstage in Tawes Theatre playing a woman being stabbed to death when someone passed out on the floor; driving back from Elkton in hurricane-force winds and rain that caused flooding all over the Shore; the damned Galena cat following us from a car accident to a herd of deer over the course of the year; swallowing things; coming in second at the Nuyoricun Poetry Slam in Philadelphia City while the storm of the century finished coming down outside; and Ed.

These things shaped my life as things shaped yours; there are numerous things I would never mention and that I've managed to squeak by the rumor mill unnoticed — yes, it is possible.

My other regret this issue is that, in the interest of sensitivity, I couldn't run the headline that I've been itching to run since day one. Literally. "Wubbels Wobbels; Trout Flounders." It would have almost even worked this time. Ah, well.

Now I have a few people to thank. STU NEIMAN for getting me my job (yes it all goes back to Stu). Gene Wubbels, for his name. Tanya Allen, for being a great roommate and for being goofy. Big thanks to Heather Lynch, Esther Diamondstone, Bridgette Winchester, Heather Evans, Allen Marshall, Thane Glenn, Dale Daigle, Beverly Wolff, Jeff Vahlbush & Audrey Fessler, Tex Andrews, Sue Tessem, Cleo Patterson, Neal Wise and Roy Crisman for being my favorite people outside of the Elm staff. ObFuck. Jason Truax, Jennifer Reddish, Chris Vaughn and Tim Reardon for doing the Elm thang first semester. Meredith Davies just because. Richard Harwood for lots of things. Hurit Deringer for giving me the job that made this all possible. Matt Shields and Doug Smith for footnotes. Burt for Beef. Martha for the same (but in a different way). Linehan for being Charlie. Justin for being Moonpile. and Brian for being the godsend that he is and the pain in the butt he needed to be.

What Beef?

A Plea for Gender Studies

To the Editor:

I can overlook your occasionally losing Mike Sapp's cartoon or beating a lame topic like the Birthday Ball to the ground, but I'm afraid you went too far in last week's Elm. Obviously I am referring to your claim of having "more beef" than Taco Bell! I know you've been to Taco Bell because I've seen you there. After seeing the new "Big Beef Taco," you must have known what a ludicrous claim you were making. Furthermore, I saw no evidence of beef in the Elm. Now I know you can't be perfect, but there is no way that I will sit by silently while you bad-mouth Taco Bell. I demand an apology!

Dan Kretzer
Senior History Major

To the Editor:

When I first arrived at Washington College, I was hopeful I would find classes that dealt specifically with gender issues. That was four years ago and within that time, although there has been a slight improvement, few courses are offered that deal specifically with gender issues. Those that do are considered Special Topics. Washington College, unfortunately, continues to primarily teach the "dead white male."

After two years of unsuccessfully searching for a gender issues course, I decided to take the matter into my own hands. With the help of Audrey Fessler and the Student Government Association, I was able to create the Gender Studies Reading Group. Members of this organization gathered every other Sunday during the school year to discuss written works dealing with gender issues. These topics ranged from religion to new concepts of masculinity. Additionally, the Gender Studies Group consisted of over thirty members for the 1992-1993 academic year.

I believe that this should signal the administration and the faculty that students are craving courses in gender studies. I implore Washington College to examine other colleges and universities that already have a Gender Studies Major and follow suit.

Finally, I ask my peers to please make their voices and opinions heard on this matter. Please fill out the questionnaire printed in the Elm and return it to me through student mail as soon as possible. I realize that everyone is very busy, but this will only take a moment of your time. We are permitted to choose what classes we take, why not choose what courses should be taught?

Thank you for your help in this matter. I look forward to receiving your responses in student mail.

On Sunday, the New York Times reported that on Saturday President Clinton agreed that the arms embargo against Bosnian Muslims should be lifted, and that American warplanes should be used to bomb Serbian fighters into submission. The plan, as spelled out in the Times, includes no involvement of U.S. ground troops. The duty of protecting civilians from atrocities would continue to be the province of UN troops. The objective of this announcement seems to be to frighten Bosnian Serbs into accepting the Vance-Owen plan.

Yet if the objective is to secure a lasting peace in Bosnia, then the Vance-Owen plan is severely flawed. And even if the Vance-Owen plan were acceptable, air strikes alone are unlikely to be effective in securing Serbian acquiescence.

The option of using air strikes is politically less dangerous than committing ground troops. It is a cliché that the military always fights the last war, yet this seems to be exactly what Clinton is doing. Bosnia is not Kuwait. If we must look to any war as a lesson relevant to military engagement in Bosnia, then the war to look to would be Vietnam. And the real lesson in Vietnam was not to use war as a solution to political problems, but to fight wars in a way which is simultaneously consistent with political objectives and unfettered by domestic pacifist sentimentality.

While some seem to feel that the fact that Bosnian Serb forces are irregulars indicates that they would be easily routed, in actuality the fact that they are irregulars works against air strikes as a viable tactical tool. Motivation is indeed a factor. The Iraqi Army fled from our air power, only to find that the desert is no safe haven from attacks from the sky. In hilly Bosnia, the Serbs would probably hunker down and try to out wait us.

In war, America cannot win the waiting game. When one considers the failure of our bombing attacks in wearing down the Vietnamese, it flies in the face of all logic to assume that it would affect the Bosnian Serbs any differently. If anything, air strikes would probably have the effect of strengthening Serbian resolve.

It is obvious why Clinton has chosen what otherwise appears to be an irrational tactic. According to the most recent Newsweek poll, 60% of Americans oppose sending American ground troops to the Balkans. Yet I would contend that this is exactly what we must do, if peace in the Balkans really is in the American national interest.

The job simply cannot be done without ground troops. Even the Clinton plan acknowledges this. But therein lies the rub: Clinton wants the UN forces to handle this task. But what kind of message is this sending to our allies? That Canadian, French and British troops are expendable, whereas ours are not?

A successful coalition implies an equal assumption of risk. If America is to remain credible as the leader of the Open Forum: Bealtainne, Walpurgisnacht, and May Day

Christabel Garcia-Zamor is an International Studies Major who is also pursuing Biology and Anthropology Minors. She will be studying in London next semester and hopes to do some research there concerning her Thesis on the differences between American and English Paganism.

Allen Marshall is a frequent contributer to the Open Forum. You know all of his italicized info pretty well by now, don't you?

Twelve young men and women dance circling a giant phallic symbol. Ribbons in their hands, these supposedly normal college students ecstatically call upon an older time when men and women erected these sexual symbols in honor of what they believed God was. This was the time when a priest and a priestess joined in a field in order to make the crops grow. They joined together in an act of love to honor the Gods. No evil lurked in wait. No sin was seen in the act of sex. Pure love of life and the creative act were motivation enough. No one thought of how "naughty" they were being by dancing naked before the Gods. They just couldn't help but do so.

Christabel Garcia-Zamor & Allen Marshall

In these ages, recorded since 20,000 before the Common Era, this special day, known to us as May Day, was widely known as Beltane. The Scottish and Gaelic called it Bealtainne, to the Germans it was known as Walpurgisnacht.

May Day is a fire festival of nature which welcomes back the returning Sun. In ancient times, the burning of large bonfires often accompanied this celebration, as did maypole dancing and love making. The bonfires were used for purification, and to represent sexual power. The maypole was used a great phallic symbol and involved the use of a freshly cut oak, birch, elm, or fir to impart fertility to village women, crops, and animals by the tree spirits. The day celebrates a time of sexual rejoicement, renewed fertility, and resurrection.

Looking at the students dancing in back of the Lit House on May Day, one would swear that they knew the history of their ancestors' dancing and festivities. They all wore lilacs and dogwood flowers in their hair and woven into their clothes. Scottish highland music drifted over from a nearby boom-box, and ribbons braided onto the maypole as the men and women circled in opposite directions, alternating positions from top to bottom. There is no one staring at them with open mouths, or any name calling to be heard. They tend to keep an eye on each other as they round the side of the Lithaus, and stay in a group when dancing and celebrating.

I was at the Lit House and there was no outright or even subtle rude behavior, name calling, gawking, or crowding townies. We had a great time nude (women and men). We "May Day," from page 3 played some groovy music, danced around a maypole, had some wonderful wine, spirits and ale, played frisbee, volleyball, and read poetry. I think that this Mayday was the most pagan and true-to-its-roots celebration, ever.

On the other side of the road, the water/mud slide was the center of attention, along with the naked people themselves due to a huge number of spectators. It was defiantly an interesting experience to run and jump naked onto a piece of plastic, zip down 1 1/2 hills , and over the grass of the last 1/ 2 hill, but there was definitely a different vibe about the place. First off, there were barely any girls nude, except the ones who came over from the Lithaus (around 10:30 pm) and there were tons of people just standing around and staring. It felt more like a show circus, especially with all the yelling and too-loud laughter. It just didn't seem the small group of friends, either, there were just tons of staring students and townies, some armed with cameras.

Apparently, the "spectator sport" sense about the hill dorms has recently sparked off a great deal of controversy (which can be read about in the May Day group of the Paperless Community folder of Hobbes Forum, which can be accessed from most any computer at Washington College). Due to harassment by townies and college students alike, individuals had a good time.

What I don't understand is why some individuals would journey so far out of their usual are starting to question the safety of May Day. Some are becoming so concerned that it seems as if they are condemning those who didn't have problems for actually saying they cliques to enter a totally different group (like the Hill Dorm scene) on this particular day. If you don't get along with those sorts of people regularly, why would you choose to meet them in their worst states, noisy, rude, naked and drunk, on May Day? Of course the area in front of the hill dorms is a meatmarket! Key phrase ... "don't go there if you think you would have a problem with it!"

Mayday revelers dance the Maypole on duh, May 1 outside the Lit House. This is a 'before' photo. Much clothing was later shed.

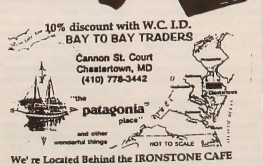
On Saturday afternoon and night, every single security person employed by WC "blanketed" (whatever the hell that means ... how can you blanket a population of 850 with 10 men?) the campus, and President Trout invited the police to come on campus without warrant. I think that the administration did not encourage security to get townies off campus because they felt it was a way to "stop May Day from happening" via intimidation/harassment. How can you get an administration to spend money on containment of an event they do not even condone in the first place?

It is unrealistic to try to stop certain groups of people from celebrating May Day the way they choose. The student community has to realize that taking all their clothes off and walking around is likely to bring comment (I have heard people receive comments even when they had their clothes on!) and that a bit of extra caution must be exercised. By saying that, I am not condoning harassment or saying that we can only buffer ourselves against it as best as we can ... I am implying that it is now time to use those street smarts your mom always bugged you about when you went to that club in the city and walked to your car at 4 am alone. I am sorry to report that Washington College really isn't a guarded and fenced-in country club.

I think everyone can have a good time, but that the place you choose to party tends to be a decisive factor. If people bother you, just don't go there and contact security if they harass you. There are places and people on campus who know how to celebrate safely, but by condemning the whole celebration and those of us who did enjoy it, I think many people are being a little bit naive and unfair.



One anonymous writer to the Pacer Forum wrote, "The Lithaus crowd and their ilk are that way on this as they have been on other issues. The liberal intelligentsia see nothing wrong from their ivory tower as long as they are above the mess. That is why they just continue with their feel good policies and psychobabble while the common people suffer. By the time it gets to them it is too late. It has been that way around the world for years. Lets see if we can't get the Lithaus crowd to wake up to the problems now with May Day..."

Hmmmmm..... who needs to really "wake up?"

This Week: What You Can Do This Summer

Well, here we are! The last issue of the Elm for the 1993 school year. Since most of us are studying for exams, I thought I would skip all the technical ecological facts for this issue, and just give everyone a neat list of environmental projects they can do during the summer.

Christabel Garcia-Zamor

1. Plant a garden. Be it one potted flower or your whole backyard, planting a garden of food and vegetables is fun, good for the environment, healthy, and even spiritually invigorating. Be sure to use organic products to nourish and protect your plants. Try organic composting, too.
2. Purify your body. Start a vegetarian diet or intense exercise routine. Stop smoking. Drink at least 8 glasses of water a day. Pamper your body with your own, at home spa ... vegetable and grain face masks, oiled baths, massage, and meditation!
3. Clean out your room and storage closet! Chances are, you are returning home to discover a lot of things you don't use anymore. Don't throw them out! Recycle by giving them to shelters or consignment shops.
4. Get your car a tune up. Okay. Now your home and your parents will probably give you the money to do this. No more sacrificing of beer money. Just smile and tell them you want to do your part to help save the environment.
5. Plant a tree. If everyone who went to Washington College planted just one tree during the summer, that would yield over 800 new trees! Do your part! Write the Arbor Day foundation or call your local chapter ... they will even give you free trees!
6. Make your home a recycling one. Now that I have lived in the dorms with the recycling bins, it is hard to imagine throwing cans and plastic away, anymore. Help your family set up recycling bins and teach them about the system. Tell your neighbors and friends, too.
7. Stop your junk mail. I know it is really cool to get mail here at school, but there is definitely too much junk that comes to my house! You can stop your junk mail by writing to the Mail Preference Service (c/o Direct Marketing Association, 11 West 42nd St., P.O. Box 3861, New York, NY 10163) send them a list of all the different ways your name are printed on mailing labels. Also contact your local Post Office and see if you can arrange it directly though them.
8. Do something about homelessness. Contact a soup kitchen at a church or shelter near you, and ask for information about volunteering.
9. Teach yourself sign language. (we need global co-operation and understanding before we can progress)
10. Install water aerators and purifiers on the taps from which you drink. You will be shocked by all the waste it extracts!

*One final note ... Due to the fact that I will be going to London next semester, Susan Huntly will be continuing this column on a weekly basis. If you think of a topic that you want covered, or have any questions, be sure to contact her when you arrive back next fall. Have a great summer!

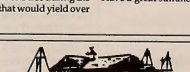
Munson Asked to Serve on Board of Visitors of Fish Disease Laboratory

Donald A. Munson, Joseph H. McLain Professor of Environmental Studies, and Chair of the Department of Biology, has been asked to serve as a member of the Board of Visitors of the Cooperative Oxford Laboratory located on the Tred Avon River in Oxford, Maryland.



The invitation to membership was recently extended by Torrey C. Brown, M.D., the Secretary of the Department of Natural Resources of the State of Maryland.

The laboratory is a joint venture of the Maryland Department of Natural Resources (DNR) and the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS). Its primary focus is in research and monitoring diseases that have caused major declines in Chesapeake Bay oyster stocks, but the laboratory also researches health of finfish, clams, crabs, marine mammals, and sea turtles.

The Board will be asked to review the scientific and educational merits of the Oxford Laboratory, and make recommendations to Secretary Brown. Munson was very happy about the opportunity.

"It is an honor to be asked to be part of a body that is charged with improving the health of Chesapeake Bay fisheries. It is especially fulfilling as the majority of my graduate study was focused toward parasites and diseases of fish," Munson said.

"I have maintained my interest in these areas, and welcome the opportunity to get in more direct contact with such major areas of research and practical interest. I have been an admirer of the Oxford Laboratory since I first visited it about twenty years ago. I eagerly look forward to my association with it."

Affirmative Action Plan Stirs Debate with Faculty

J. Tarin Towers
Editor-in-Chief

The Affirmative Action Plan in the works for so long was presented May 3 at the Faculty Meeting; its first two pages were passed by a 37-32 vote, which was so close that the issue was tabled until next year.

Professor Nate Smith of the History Department asked why the plan did not call for a diverse faculty and administration. Kate Verville, the plan's draftsperson, answered that this is a project of the Faculty Affairs Committee and, should the plan pass, a similar proviso would be passed on the administration.

Smith said he saw the goals of the first part of the report as admirable. "It seems to call for very thorough search proceedings and for encouraging various groups to apply ... and it calls for no bias in the process thereafter."

He said that the report lent itself "to equivocation and purposes that go beyond the goals set in page one," adding, "how can we set goals and not the same time keep from discriminating against the members of any group?"

Smith's criticism of the statement included analysis of the specific groups mentioned. He said that there was no historical bias to women or to Asians, both of whom appear on the proposed list, whereas Jews did not appear on the list and had been the victims of discrimination at Washington College.

"We did not find religious groups on our comparative lists," said Verville.

Professor Thomas Cousineau said he agreed with the gist of the proposed document but that its statement on paper "seems to imply that we haven't been trying [to achieve a diverse faculty]."

Some faculty were felt that the affirmative action policy would be an incredibly positive step. "We are an unknown place in most of Academia," said Steven Cades. "We stand a chance of increasing our applicant pool beyond those solicited by an ad in, say, The Chronicle."

A question about "monitoring effectiveness" was raised by Terry Scout.

Verville said it referred to "monitoring effectiveness of the plan in terms of numbers," not referring to who was hired but to "what the job search was turning out in terms of numbers, based on the applicant pool and compared to the current availability in the field" of certain groups.

"Effectiveness cannot be determined on a search-by-search basis," she said, stating that recording progress over time was one of the goals of this plan.

Tim Maloney was concerned with the validity of the reporting of members of these groups in the first place. "How would I determine if a person is a member of a designated group," he asked, wondering who was going to be responsible for verifying the identifying info.

Verville said that the information would come from the dossier, and President Trout offered that gender is "fairly easily to determine on paper if not by looking at the name then by reading the recommendation letters to see if they used 'he' or 'she;' a Hispanic last name would indicate a possibility that there was some Hispanic background in the candidate.

"This will never be clear cut,' said Sean O'Connor. "There is always a tempering of judgment between the department and the administration.

Smith was concerned about how enforcement of non-specified 'goals' could allow for violation of rights. "We are opening ourselves up to coming in conflict with the footnote ... which says that no one's rights will be discriminated against," he said.

"This [policy] seems to me devious, evasive, cumbersome, and I don't think it's quite honest," he stated. "I'm objecting to the shoddiness as well as to the clumsiness of what's been brought before us."

Verville seemed to be denying that a quota system would be what was in place. "If we are going to worry about numbers at some point," she said, "if we only look at what happens on the day of the hire, we forget ... after an individual has been hired, retention is a factor ... there may be a number of factors that may contribute to the unhappiness of the individual after they have been hired.

"We can't just look at the outset," she said.

Richard DeProspo too was worried not about the current proposal being the hard-line, but about it "having the potential to be used as such."

"This looks like equivocation to me — 'don't worry about it, we're not really going to do anything,'" he said. He expressed fears about future administrators using the proposed plan to enforce a rigid agenda of their own.

While Richard Striner felt that "there should be room for a conscientious decision on this," he too expressed concerns about the wording of the plan.

"It seems that what we're being offered here is a moral trade-off — there are certain goods being offered here and there's a trade-off," Striner said.

Other professors were supportive of the "even playing field" school of thought. Jeff Vahlbusch said that "Ethnicity is in fact a qualification — you can't say 'all things being equal' in this context — we cannot."

Dean Lucille Sansing said that "We've not had a blind application process ... and what we are attempting to doing an Affirmative Action plan is to even the playing field — this doesn't happen naturally."

"Good will is not enough — we need incentives also," said Thomas Cousineau.

Many faculty members expressed distaste at the idea of an extra salary incentive to minority candidates. Dean Wubbie quipped that "We're not tainted by cash," also stating that "The community ... is the necessary feature of success here."

Nate Smith proposed an amendment to the plan which would delete "everything after page two." A vote on the motion was too close to call and a written ballot counted the split as 37-32 in favor of passing the abridged plan to be further revised by Faculty Affairs.

President Trout deemed the vote as too close to settle the matter, which was tabled until the fall.

made a motion that Faculty Affairs review the external review process and that the invitation to the Board to look at recent results of these reviews be suspended until this evaluation be completed.

Nate Smith added an amendment to that motion that no portions of the reports be kept secret from the faculty and that no portions refer to personnel matters (specifically not to judge individual members after a two-day visit). The motion and amendment passed.

Garry Clarke reported for the Board Student Affairs Committee: • Cleopatra's Daughters is seeking chapterhood in Delta Sigma Theta, a service organization.

• A new Federal mandate that sexual assault cases be heard on campus requires that a sexual assault policy be drafted by October 1, which may or may not require revisions to the current policy on sexual harassment.

Dr. Brien, former chair of the Ad-hoc Committee on Academic Honesty, submitted his own revisions to the "informer clauses" which he claims cause moral strife within the student body and the faculty as well. "The honor code is undermining itself," he said, adding that "when faculty is soft on cheating, they help the student inadvertantly to negate their status as a student."

He asked that the faculty approve the changes, which move from requiring students to report their fellow classmates to the professor or dean and requiring professors to take disciplinary action and report violating students; to allowing observers of honor code violation to deal with the matter how they see fit, including personal discussion of the issues rather than obligatory report.

Several faculty members were concerned about the procedure of the proposal; the amendments to the Honor Code came neither from a committee nor from the SGA.

Nate Smith added an amendment to the changes which said that the faculty would recommend the SGA consider the changes to the informer clauses of the honor code. It would then be up to the SGA Senate to approve the amendments, at which time the faculty would officially approve them and the Honor Code would be amended. Brien's motion passed with the addition of Smith's amendment.

Current SGA advisor David Newell suggested that the SGA President, one of two students (along with the editor of the Elm) invited to attend faculty meetings, be allowed to make a brief report monthly to the faculty if (s)he desires.

Dan Premo concluded the meeting with best wishes for two retiring faculty, Dr. André Yon of the French Department and Dr. Davy McCall of Economics.

Council Supports Their Gay Alums

To the Editor:

I have been informed of Ed Weismann's comments (April 30 Elm) concerning the Alumni Council's response to a request to establish a Les BiGay Alumni Chapter.

On behalf of the Alumni Council, I wish to address Professor Weismann's inference that we have denied this request with an "excuse" that we do not want any special interest chapters. The Council recognizes that as our Association grows in number and diversity, it is appropriate to revisit the criteria for alumni chapters, currently defined by our constitution and Bylaws as geographic entities.

At its April '93 meeting, the Council created a task force to review this traditional criteria and consider how to address this and any future requests for amendments. Pending a recommendation by this task force, Les BiGay alumni have been assured the continuing support of the Alumni Council and Office of Alumni Affairs. It is the mission of the Association to support and include ALL alumni in college affairs, and the Council is dedicated to this philosophy.

Bob Day Comes to Wubbels' Defense

To the Editor:

The following statement was read and entered into the record of the May 3 Faculty Meeting.

I have served with Dean Wubbles on the Faculty Affairs Committee for a full year now. During that time we have had over twenty meetings of about two hours each in length. We have discussed — sometimes vigorously — many matters of policy pertaining to the faculty and the college, among them issues of discrimination, equal opportunity, and — more recently — affirmative action. In all these discussions the Dean participated fully, giving his opinions and advice frankly and — as best as I can judge — honestly. I want my colleagues to know that not once did I hear from Dean Wubbles any statement that seemed to me bigoted in any fashion. Nor did I hear statements that reflected any particular religious preference, nor any statement that reflected prejudice toward any group.

Dance Week Ignored By Paper

To the Editor:

I am greatly disheartened by the inability of the Elm to print news that reflects the activities and achievements of students at Washington College and the variety of events in which the college community can partake. I refer specifically to the April 23 Arts & Entertainment section which devoted 45 column inches to reviews of commercial videos because the A&E "reporter" found "a decided lack of artsy/entertaining news yet again this week," (a statement that begins with a grammatical error!)

In celebration of International Dance Week, the dance program sponsored a number of cultural/educational, yes, even entertaining, events throughout the week, including films, workshops, and classes in various styles of dance. Not one word about those events found a place in the Elm. Additionally, the opening of the seniors' art show was April 23 and the Music Department presented a student recital on April 28. A student drama production opened on Thursday, April 29. Surely among the above there was something worthy of print.

Perhaps cultural awareness on this campus will improve when the Elm has the wisdom to choose talent and artistry among its own and the wide choice of cultural activities on this campus instead of singing the praises of Edward Scissorhands & Star Wars "due to (sic) lack of news."

Karen Smith
Athletics Department

Please note that articles on the Student Art Show and on A Shoebox Full of Snow did appear in last week's Elm. Events to be publicized should be brought to the attention of the editorial staff by the Wednesday preceding that Friday's Elm. —Ed.

Trout Responds to Weissman's Accusations

What follows is President Trout's Official statement, in the form of a memo sent to the Task Force on the Status of Gay Men and Lesbians at Washington College.

I decline to accept or even recognize what purports to be the final draft of the "Report of the Task Force on the Status of Gay Men and Lesbians at Washington College," and I will not do so until a) the eighth recommendation is deleted; b) an apology for the ad hominem attack on Dean Wubbels is forthcoming; and c) all members of the Task Force are convened and sign whatever report emerges from that meeting.

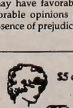
While the Task Force's point that "members of the community have the right to expect [that] those in authority will willingly embrace and accept the non-discrimination policy of the college" is unexceptionable, it is my view that the unsubstantiated allegations you have made against Dean Wubbels constitute an unpardonable breach of professional standards and ethics. It is also my conviction that the Task Force has rushed to judgment in a manner I find dismaying, if not reprehensible: the Task Force has intolerably failed to tolerate the merely tolerant. In my judgment, it has required every member of the community to adhere to uniform private beliefs on this or any other issue. What is required at Washington College is not approval of all beliefs, or all matters of social policy, but tolerance. I expect and receive from my senior staff no less. To insist upon monolithic belief is an impermissible assault upon the fundamental values of this venerable institution and smacks of McCarthyism of the worst sort. You should know that I consider Dean Wubbels to be a man of unimpeachable integrity, tolerance, character, and ability. In all dealings with the Dean, I have found him to be wholly committed to non-discrimination. Washington College is fortunate he is with us, and I support him with every fiber of my being.

Apart from serious concerns about the Task Force's adherence to process and the totally objectionable eighth point in the "final draft," I find much else to commend. I do want to assure you that I look to the day when I can accept the report and in timely fashion consider its implementation.

Some Thoughts on the Accusations of Mr. Weissman

What follows is Dean Gene G. Wubbels official response to the allegations made in the report of the Task Force on the Status of Gay Men and Lesbians at Washington College.

1. It seems clear that Mr. Weissman believes he has me completely figured out. I am characterized by him as a Bible-quoting, religious zealot and a bigot who secretly defames and disparages homosexuals. Mr. Weissman has also let me know directly that he considers me contemptible. He loudly berated me on Monday, April 26, as a bigot, a Nazi, a person like those who persecute Jews, garbage, lower than garbage, one unfit to do my job, and a disgrace to this College. I do not expect to change Mr. Weissman's mind, but I do hope to clarify my past actions and outlook for those less partial than Mr. Weissman.



2. It is false that I have ever quoted the Bible on the subject of homosexual behavior. I am sure of that because I do not know where in the Bible the relevant passages are located or what they say. I don't believe I have ever even repeated the allegation that the Bible has something to say on the subject.

3. I have not to my recollection called homosexual behavior immoral. I have reported in as many as three meetings at Washington College the fact that many of the largest moral communities in the world regard homosexual behavior as immoral.

4. I do not and have not engaged in condemning homosexual behavior. I have attended to the requirements of weighing College policy questions, the recent ones relevant here being the formulation of an affirmative action plan in Faculty Affairs, and the consideration of the Domestic Partners Benefits proposal in Executive Council and in the Academic Affairs Committee of the Board. In both cases I initially questioned whether either constitutes wise social policy. Subsequently, I worked tirelessly on the Affirmative Action Plan that comes before the Faculty today, and at the April meeting of the Board of Visitors and Governors I succeeded in making certain that the Committee on Academic Affairs would, as it did, formally place the Domestic Partners issue on the Board's agenda for subsequent consideration. I oppose the Domestic Partners Benefits plan for several reasons, none of which requires me to assert that homosexual behavior is immoral.

5. Mr. Weissman fails to distinguish approval of homosexual behavior from toleration of it. He wishes general approval, yet all I can give him, what I have very consistently given him, and indeed what the USA everywhere requires in like circumstances is toleration. There are hundreds of behaviors and characteristics of individuals that other persons may have favorable or unfavorable opinions about. The essence of prejudice lies not in holding those opinions - they are inevitable - but in acting on them in an intolerant way. I submit that I have never done that in regard to Mr. Weissman, and I have no intention of doing so in the future, despite the career-threatening provocation and belligerence he has displayed.

6. Mr. Weissman adds the gratuitous insult to his accusations in the Elm that I am bigoted on the subject of women. This also is incorrect.

A&E

Student Profile: Scott Ross Koon

Next year's Elm Editor-in-Chief, Scott Koon is a junior from Columbia, South Carolina. He is a rather uninteresting person. As an Army brat, he lived in West Berlin from 1979 to 1986, where he gained an appreciation of the German language, the German people and the German ideology. He is a political science major, an Elm columnist, a member of the Long Range Strategic Planning Committee and Phi Sigma Alpha.

Scott started acting at the age of 13, and has kept up this interest by participating in three productions at WAC. His main artistic interest is woodcarving. He works primarily with hardwoods and will carve "anything except ducks or other waterfowl." His other hobbies include writing poetry and prose, drawing and reading.

After graduation, Scott hopes to work as either a political consultant or a journalist. His idols are Thomas Paine, Leon Trotsky and Malcolm X. He wants to eventually settle down and start a family, because he contends that "Family values and communism are inseparable."

We all did our own damn student profile this week, because conflict of interest wouldn't let us hog the spot next to the calendar all year.

Editor-in-Chief J. Tarin Towers might be a senior next year. She majors in English and Art and will either write a thesis about fairy tales or do a poetry portfolio. This summer she will be working in an unpaid internship at Rolling Stone in New York, and though the Society of Junior Fellows grant is covering her housing, she plans on eating a lot of plain white bread sandwiches. She might even quit smoking. Tarin is also a member of ODK and various and sundry other organizations of and on. She can be found at the Lit House or the Drama Department as often as in her room, and her interests include feminism, cynicism, coloring books, philosophy, photography, and making fun of innocent bystanders.

Co-News Editor Amanda Burt is glad that the Elm is finally over. It is time she stopped. She cannot go on. She plans to go fall in a ditch somewhere, where it is midnight, and raining (knock knock — hi G.E.). Or maybe it won't be midnight, or raining. Whatever. Amanda will be in Paris next year, and there is little left to tell. She will go on.

Justin "Moonpile" Cann (Features Editor and Long-winded Guy)

One day in the Fall semester of my Sophomore year, in a time I like to refer to as B.W., (Before Work) Pat "Sad" Attenasio came up to me and said something to the effect of "Wanna lay out a newspaper?" I said, having happened across PageMaker 3.0 that summer, "Sure."

Thus the Saga of This Is Not the Elm began, at least for me. We did a few crazy things that I'm not telling anybody about and some that have become WC legend. Then we got our act together, layout-wise and not-pissing-off-so-many-people-wise. We put together the Collegian.

Summer happened. I did archeology and was tan and svelte for the fall of my Junior year. Then WHAM! The Elm editor-in-chief-ship fell into Pat's hands. We has a paper and only a basic clue and I still had Mono. I guess we figured something out. I had many sleepless Wednesday nights completely redesigning the look of the paper and wondering if my spleen might explode spontaneously.

Since then, they haven't been able to get rid of me. Will they in the future? Scott Koon can only hope.

Somewhere in there I managed to write some poetry and graduate. I'd say "Farewell Washington College! Longlive the Elm!" but I'm gonna be around next year.

This is my smoog for the final issue of this year's Elm.

A&E Editor George Arthur Jamison, Jr., a junior, about to be a senior, English Major, can't wait fo the semester to be over. Despite working two jobs and taking five classes, he was the "not-too-effective" president of Hands Out and the Arts & Entertainment Editor of the Elm this past semester. He tends to be a rather melancholic individual that has a lot of trouble staying on top of things. He hopes that one day he can call himself a success, but until that time, he plans on remaining unimpressed with his accomplishments. He loves Morrissey, Edward Scissorhands, and Eeyore and wishes that people did not try to change the fact that he likes being melancholy. After graduation, he plans on grad school or doing the Teach for America thing to help him either delay or help him pay his college loans. His final quote: "What happened? I guess we all made up our minds and we finally found our spines. At times I miss IJ, but growing up is not really a bad thing, is it?"

Sports Editor Matt Murray is a sophomore political science major in his first year at Washington College. This summer he will intern as a sports writer at The Maryland Gazette newspaper, and he will return as Sports Editor of the Elm in September. Besides sports writing, Murray is active in SGA, and he is a brother of Kappa Alpha.

Hi! It's Wistie, not Margaret Wurtz. (Photo Editor) If you're wondering why...mabe you'll find out someday! Anyway, I'm thing a chance. He thinks he's so smart. Sometimes he really gets on my nerves, with his grumpy attitude & holier-than-thou stance on morality.

Start Now! Columnist Christabel Garcia-Zamor is an International Studies major with minors in Anthropology and Biology, and will be a senior next year. She loves dry red wine and Tiger's Eye. Also horseback riding, her psycho cat, "Mexico", and her boy-friend, Tony. She does research into environmental issues and Paganism during much of her free time. She is very happy she is going to London next semester, and hopes her brain doesn't explode from excitement. She likes leather, too, and hopes to acquire a pair of black go-go boots during her trip.

Doug "Dude" Smith of Campus Voices fame is a chump.

Brian Matheson has no time for interests because he is the layout editor. He also doesn't have time to type in a profile of himself.

finishing my junior year as a humanities major...? I am as glad as the rest of you are that its summer again! I get to go home and work, but at least I like what I do. "So, what do you do?" you ask...well I do graphics on the computer. Yeah, I know-its a bit artsy-fartsy, but I like it. In fact I got a promotion for this summer to a full-fledged designer. Pretty Cool! As far as the summer goes....No Fools, No fun! A statement to live by!! Have a good one.

"New World Order," then it needs to be equally at risk. Furthermore, a lack of a U.S. ground presence means that the U.S. will have no tactical control of the conduct of the ground war.

If the Bosnian Serb Parliament rejects the latest peace plan (as is probable), the Clinton administration must rethink its policies. Our objective at this point in time has been acceptance by the Bosnian Serbs of the Vance-Owen plan. This plan allows Serbs to retain control of much of the land conquered during the war.

This plan smacks of appeasement. The international community has bent over backwards to secure a settlement, and each time it has met with a strong rebuff from the Bosnian Serbs. Atrocities are one thing: Clinton has shown an inhuman unwillingness to take action, even when entire villages are put to death. The Serbs are now demonstrating that they hold the U.S. and its allies in utter contempt

The Vance-Owen plan seeks to please all the parties to the Balkan conflict, but it overlooks the need to avoid conflict in the future. It is a nonsensical gerrymander based solely on political and ethnic consideration, without regard to the post-war military security of either Bosnia or Croatia. Certainly, it calls for deployment of tens of thousands of UN troops to secure the peace, but these troops will eventually depart. At that point, Bosnia and Croatia would be defenseless.

It overlooks, for example, one of the primary problems faced by Bosnian Muslims during the war: the abscess of a port. Under the Vance-Owen plan, Bosnia would remain landlocked. During the present war, Bosnian Muslims have had to pay unbelievable duties to the Croatians to secure arms arriving at Croatian ports. Giving the Muslims access to the sea would greatly enhance the stability of a Muslim state in Bosnia.

The involvement of U.S. troops in the war would be politically risky but morally correct. But in order to succeed, we must not start out with air strikes and then gradually escalate. The President must inform the public of the American interest in European peace, and he must advise them that it will not be painless.

Typically, Americans become rather nationalistic in wartime. While many oppose involvement now, successful action in rolling back aggression and ending atrocities would increase support. The media must emphasize the moral imperative to detail atrocities. Yet they must not arouse hopes of a quick and easy victory. A recent Newsweek article depicts the Serbian forces as undisciplined and possessing low morale. This may be the case, but if we are to have any hope of victory we must not underestimate the enemy.

If the U.S. does not roll back Serbian aggression, if it does not act in a unified way to announce to the world that war crimes and territorial aggrandizement by force have no place in the "New World Order," then every nationalist bigot and militant fanatic will have sound reason to believe that they are utterly free to pursue their bloody ambitions at the expense of their neighbors. The American flag stands now and has always stood for the defense of liberty, human rights and justice, not appeasement.

We, as a nation, must rally together in support of a sensible military solution to the shameless Serbian aggression in Bosnia. Some of the lessons learned in Iraq are applicable. We must not act alone, but as the leader of a united front against Serbian atrocities.

Fifty Ways to Really Fail Your Final Exams

50 Fun things to do in a final that does not matter (i.e. you are going to fail the class completely no matter what you get on the final exam)

1. Bring a pillow. Fall asleep (or pretend to) until the last 15 minutes. Wake up, say "oh geez, better get cracking" and do some gibberish work. Turn it in a few minutes early.
2. Get a copy of the exam, run out screaming "Andre, Andre, I've got the secret documents!!"
3. If it is a math/science exam, answer in essay form. If it is long answer/essay form, answer with numbers and symbols. Be creative. Use the integral symbol.
4. Make paper airplanes out of the exam. Aim them at the instructor's left nostril.
5. Talk the entire way through the exam. Read questions aloud, debate your answers with yourself out loud. If asked to stop, yell out, "I'm SOOO sure you can hear me thinking." Then start talking about what a jerk the instructor is.
6. Bring cheerleaders.
7. Walk in, get the exam, sit down. About five minutes into it, loudly say to the instructor, "I don't understand ANY of this. I've been to every lecture all semester long! What's the deal? And who the hell are you? Where's the regular guy?"
8. Bring a Game Boy (or Game Gear, etc...). Play with the volume at max level.
9. On the answer sheet (book, whatever) find a new, interesting way to refuse to answer every question. For example: I refuse to answer this question on the grounds that it conflicts with my religious beliefs. Be creative.
10. Bring pets.
11. Run into the exam room looking about frantically. Breathe a sigh of relief. Go to the instructor, say "They've found me, I have to leave the country" and run off.
12. Fifteen minutes into the exam, stand up, rip up all the papers into very small pieces, throw them into the air and yell out "Merry Christmas." If you're really daring, ask for another copy of the exam. Say you lost the first one. Repeat this process every fifteen minutes.
13. Do the exam with crayons, paint, or fluorescent markers.
14. Come into the exam wearing slippers, a bathrobe, a towel on your head, and nothing else.
15. Come down with a BAD case of Turet's Syndrome during the exam. Be as vulgar as possible.
16. Do the entire exam in another language. If you don't know one, make one up! For math/science exams, try using Roman numerals.
17. Bring things to throw at the instructor when he/she's not looking. Blame it on the person nearest to you.
18. As soon as the instructor hands you the exam, eat it.
19. Walk into the exam with an attitude/rage. Claim you are going to be taping your next video during the exam. Try to get the instructor to let them stay, be persuasive. Tell the instructor to expect a percentage of the profits if they are allowed to stay.
20. Every five minutes, stand up, collect all your things, move to another seat, continue with the exam.
21. Turn in the exam approximately 30 minutes into it. As you walk out, start commenting on how easy it was.
22. Do the entire exam as if it was multiple choice and true/false. If it is a multiple choice exam, spell out interesting things (DCCAB. BABE. etc..).
23. Bring a black marker. Return the exam with all questions and answers completely blacked out.
24. Get the exam. Twenty minutes into it, throw your papers down violently, scream out "Fuck this!" and walk out triumphantly.
25. Arrange a protest before the exam starts (i.e. Threaten the instructor that whether or not everyone's done, they are all leaving after one hour to go drink)
26. Show up completely drunk. (Completely drunk means at some point during the exam, you should start crying for mommy).
27. Every now and then, clap twice rapidly. If the instructor asks why, tell him/her in a very derogatory tone, "the light bulb that goes on above my head when I get an idea is hooked up to a clapper. DUH!"
28. Comment on how sexy the instructor is looking that day.
29. Come to the exam wearing a black cloak. After about 30 minutes, put on a white mask and start yelling "I'm here, the phantom of the opera" until they drag you away.
30. Go to an exam for a class you have no clue about, where you know the class is very small, and the instructor would recognize you if you belonged. Claim that you have been to every lecture. Fight for your right to take the exam.
31. Upon receiving the exam, look it over, while laughing loudly, say "you don't really expect me to waste my time on this drivel? Days of our Lives is on!!!"
32. Bring a water pistol with you. Nuff said.
33. From the moment the exam begins, hum the theme to Jeopardy. Ignore the instructor's requests for you to stop. When they finally get you to leave one way or another, begin whistling the theme to the Bridge on the River Kwai.
34. Start a brawl in the middle of the exam.
35. If the exam is math/science related, make up the longest proofs you could possibly think of. Get pi and imaginary numbers into most equations. If it is a written exam, relate everything to your own life story.
36. Come in wearing a full knight's outfit, complete with sword and shield.
37. Bring a friend to give you a back massage the entire way through the exam. Insist this person is needed, because you have bad circulation.
38. Bring cheat sheets to another class (make sure this is obvious... like history notes for a calculus exam... otherwise you're not just failing, you're getting kicked out too) and staple them to the exam, with the comment "Please use the attached notes for references as you see fit."
39. When you walk in, complain about the heat. Strip.
40. After you get the exam, call the instructor over, point to any question, ask for the answer. Try to work it out of him/her.
41. One word: Wrestlemania.
42. Bring balloons, blow them up, start throwing them around like they do before concerts start.
43. I'll mail it to you after, I accidentally erased it!! (oops..)
44. Play frisbee with a friend at the other side of the room.
45. Bring some large, cumbersome, ugly idol. Put it right next to you. Pray to it often. Consider a small sacrifice.
46. Get deliveries of candy, flowers, balloons, telegrams, etc... sent to you every few minutes throughout the exam.
47. During the exam, take apart everything around you. Desks, chairs, anything you can reach.
48. Complete the exam with everything you write being backwards at a 90 degree angle.
49. Bring a musical instrument with you, play various tunes. If you are asked to stop, say "it helps me think." Bring a copy of the Student Handbook with you, challenging the instructor to find the section on musical instruments during finals. Don't forget to use the phrase "Told you so".
50. Answer the exam with the "Top Ten Reasons Why Professor xxxx Sucks"

WC Has Distorted Priorities

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to make a comment for posterity. While Dr. Shad was a tremendous help in the completion of my thesis, unfortunately I cannot say the same for the rest of Washington College, both faculty and administration. The woeful lack of research material, combined with the increased funding of superficial projects such as the Lifetime Fitness Center, leads me to believe that the priorities of this college are entirely distorted. When the majority of seniors must go off campus to obtain research materials, when there is inadequate funding for academic endeavors, and when there seems to be unlimited funding for college promotion and appearance, there appears to be a gross misunderstanding concerning the true purpose of Washington College. More emphasis, and more money, must be reserved for academic matters, especially our Miller Library. It is time that those in charge realized that the quality we hope for in our school cannot be achieved by superficial means, but rather by rasing our academic standards and increasing our resources.

Therefore, I would like to dedicate my thesis in the hope that Washington College will improve itself in the near future by realizing the error of its current ways.

Computing Center Launches Mac BBS

WC moves one step closer to a 'paperless campus'

Mary Jefferson
Staff Writer

In an effort to continue the rapid expansion of Washington College's computing resources, a new application called PacerForum has been added to the extensive list of computing services.

PacerForum is a bulletin board on the campus computer network. More user friendly than many BBS systems, PacerForum is icon-driven and works in the friendly Macintosh windows environment. Topics ranging from "Classified" to "Paperless Campus" to "Humor" include discussions such as "Pagan Discussion," "National and International News," and many other current lines of conversation appear easily and are open for comment from anyone.

PacerForum is available on the Computing Center fileserver, under "Info and Updates." Users are encouraged to participate in topic discussions, and to create new topics.

The Computing Center is currently experimenting with a limited user package, allowing anyone to log on as a "Guest" and participate in topic discussions. The option of anonymity exists, as long as Guests do not abuse that option. Users are asked to sign their names to their comments to help others in following any conversation and to persuade users to make responsible comments. If enough interest is shown in the application, individual accounts may be available in the fall.

Computing Director Paul Bishop is enthusiastic about the new BBS. "The Academic Technology Committee has approved the purchase of the PacerForum system for use next year," he said.

"I think that academically, PacerForum will prove to be an unparalleled tool for extending classroom discussions beyond the confines of the physical classroom. In technospeak, PacerForum will assist us in defining the initial boundaries for an emerging virtual classroom," said Bishop.

How Not to Lose the Sophie Kerr Prize

Pat Attenasio
WC Alumnus

I won the Sophie Kerr Prize on an empty stomach. Sixteen hours later I would witness my own death after the removal of four impacted wisdom teeth. Normally, the day after receiving Washington College's most prestigious literary award, any piece of my body with the word wisdom in front of it wasn't in any hurry to part with, but those migraines had continued even after Chaucer class had ended. My plan that day was simple: (1) Drive alone to the Doctor, (2) lose the teeth, (3) walk three blocks to the bank with the Kerr check [laughing all the way there of course optional], (4) live happily ever after. Two local shots of sodium pentathol later and off I floated towards the First National. In one hand was the unopened green Demerol pills — very much open. I'd been signing my name for some ten minutes (A-t-t-A-t-t-M-o-u-s-e) when it happened. The medications collided in my stomach with a frontal system of blood, and what followed looked so much like a mob hit, I actually looked around for Raphael and Bruce holding machine guns, sporting fedoras. Blood splashed everywhere — on the tellers, on the floor around me, on the check. As I collapsed to the carpet, blobs of sopping cotton popped from my mouth, scattering around my head like little gauze bullets. Someone then shouted, "Hey, look, that kid's dead!" An ambulance arrived, but by then I was fine. The driver took me home, and upon my arrival, my mother commented, "Is this the kind of behavior we should expect from a Sophie Kerr winner?"

Two local newspapers covered my story the next week (the Kerr thing, not the mob hit). One ran an op-ed headline which read, "A Good Reputation is More Valuable than Money," to which I replied, "A Good Newspaper is More Valuable than the Westfield Leader." The other paper confused me with another front page story. The other piece detailed the life and happy times of a local one-winged parrot named Chuck. Since Chuck possessed just the solo wing, he was capable of flying only in circles. Thus, Chuck spent his days kamikazeing into people's porch windows, mostly those belonging to elderly women. They would pick him off the ground, dust him off, and say, "Tweedle-dee?" to which he delightfully responded, "Tweedle-dum!" Of course our photo captions were destined to be switched, so that now I am forever known to all North New Jerseyites as Chuckie, A Rare Bird Amongst Prize Winners!

The key to the Sophie Kerr is not how to win it, but how not to lose it. The fact of the matter remains that only one person wins the award, while so many other quality writers (usually good friends of the winner) do not. Sophie Kerr is the second to last prize awarded at graduation. You simply cannot lose yourself up for such a fall at the very last moment of your college career if you do not win. You can't plan on winning, you can't already have the money spent, you must somehow be prepared to lose.

Like so many other dopey prospective high-school writers, I first heard those two words — Sophie Kerr — before hearing those other two words — Washington College. Whatever our previous writing experiences amounted to, we insisted on a college with a good writing program, whatever that means. Then you hear those two words and it's yeah, yeah, yeah to the rest of the details, let's talk about the brass ring, Mr. Guidance Counselor. You think this prize, like some ridiculous high school fantasy of catching the winning touchdown pass or nailing the prom queen, will somehow legitimize your brief existence. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Straight out, if you came to Washington College because you think you're gonna win the Sophie Kerr, you've just made the biggest mistake of your young life.

If it's the only money you're after, you should've stayed with your high school job. You'll have much more than twenty-five g's at the end of your four years, and a lot less student loans to pay off. Besides, with the job market in the shape it is now, you'd be better off at your high school job — maybe even being promoted to second asshole from the right after four years. College kids today, after waiving all rights to benefits and full-time hours, usually start out as only fourth or fifth asshole from the right.

I did not think I would win the Sophie Kerr. Simply because I didn't believe I had the politics to win. Which is unfortunately how many writers on this campus think. Did I attend enough of so and so's lecture? Did I stay awake long enough in Beckett today? That sort of paranoia that fuels every one of us to an early grave or breakdown. How I won the prize was very simple: I didn't have time to think about it. I had so much work between the Elm, my classes, and a thesis that just graduating was a more pressing goal, and always in doubt. Which leads me to another point: timing is just as important to this prize as talent. Every year, especially this one with what I feel to be the strongest crop of graduating writers ever at WC, there are at least two or three writers with that "something extra" it takes to win the prize. Some people respond to pressure better than others, while some just are not ready yet. My stuff just wasn't ready yet. Who's to say that the guy who finishes fourth in the voting doesn't go on to a fabulous career while the actual winner never writes again?

Twenty-three thousand dollars is a ridiculous amount of money to award any young, unproven writer. So many people ask me what I am doing with the money, not how my writing's going. And I'm convinced this kind of money can do one of two things to a twenty-two year old — put them in or get them out of debt. I have recently become a convert in the De Prospo Theory on Compassion at WC. Split the prize into three ten-thousand dollar chunks and award them to the top three student writers, not just one. This would alleviate some of the baggage and all of the pressure that inevitably comes with the award. Another idea would be to employ independent and qualified judges outside of the English department. For the strength of any writing program rests within the quality of its writers and their relations to each other and the faculty. These slight changes would do wonders to fix those shortcomings, but this is WC — where our headlines are bigger than your headlines — so don't hold your breath. Until then all you can do as a student is to write! You have to know in your own heart that what you're doing is your best work at that time. This committee can award you a finite pile of dough, but it cannot give you self-confidence or even integrity. These are things you award yourself and are of much greater value.

This past year has not been an easy one. Grad schools have been dissing me (Folks, Iowa and Arizona accept less than three percent of their applicants). The Sophie Kerr Prize is a nice piece of publicity for Washington College, but I needed to find out what it meant for me. It was not the greatest moment in my life — and if it was, then I'll live a pretty sad life. I hope to one day change it from a chapter heading to a mere footnote in my biography. I have spent so much of this past year worrying about things I cannot control. It takes about a year to remove the Sophie Kerr Funk (note no reference to the word curse). I do things again like I always did them — on my own terms and my own time-table. All the money in the world will not make me or anyone else a better writer. And ain't nothing in this world that's easy or cheap. I try to write everyday now, and when I do, I play for keeps. Those wisdom teeth of mine sit in a shot glass atop my Apple, and occasionally I'll rub them for good luck.

My best to whoever wins the Sophie Kerr this year. And to all those who do not. Either way — win or lose — to really win this award is not to lose it. As the great poet Tess Gallagher once said, what they can give you they can also try to take away. She was referring to the gods in the heaven, but I think it works just as well with the English department.

In WC Sports, Year Held Story Of The

Shoremen Teams Laden With Underclassmen Show Marked Improvement

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

As the 1992-93 academic year comes to a close, so does the athletic year of Washington College's many fine teams. Over the past nine months, Shoremen athletics has provided a focal point for the school.

This past year, the key words for Washington coaches were young, inexperienced, potential and improvement. While on the surface it may appear that the Shoremen suffered through a rough year overall, for quite a few teams, it was a strong "rebuilding year."

For Washington College athletics in 1992-93, a strong freshman class gave Athletic Director Geoff Miller and his fourteen sports teams a look into the future. For Washington College, the future looks bright, and the present wasn't so bad either.

Listed below (in alphabetical order) is the review for each of Washington's fourteen sports:

Baseball: For the Shoremen baseball team, 1993 was not exactly what they had hoped for. The team finished below .500 with tough divisional double header losses to Swarthmore and Haverford with splits coming against Ursinus, Johns Hopkins and Widener. However, there were bright spots along the way.

Rory Conway was named to the All-MAC Southwest Team with a .355 batting average and 28 runs scored. Senior Joe Boan was named to the second team, as he pitched 43 1/3 innings with a 4.15 ERA as well as hit .284 with eight doubles.

Mike Hanifee provided senior leadership, hitting .256 with 14 RBIs. Juniors Keith Whitefordand Andy Parks will return next year after they both hit over .300 this season. Whiteford is also expected to anchor the pitching staff.

And as has been the theme for many of the other sports, freshman helped substantially. Doug "Billy" Blair was the man out of the bullpen with a 2-0 record, 24 strikeouts in 24 innings and a 1.81 ERA. Gary Yovanovich hit .290 with eight RBIs in the outfield, and Brian Rush played great defense behind the plate.

Said Coach Ed Athey: "On the basis of all the teams we've had at Washington College, this is one of the best defensive teams here, but unfortunately, we were also one of the poorer hitting teams. We're satisfied with the pitching staff (for next year), but we need bolstering in the hitting."

Men's Basketball: For the basketball team, it was a year of ups and downs. The Shoremen struggled from the outset but won eight of their last twelve games. Senior Peter Basel led the team in scoring with a 15.1 points per game average. Geoff Rupert, Darren Vican and Charles Cummings all averaged in double figures.

Finishing at 13-12, the biggest game for the Shoremen came on February 20 when they beat Widener in double overtime 89-87. The win forced a one-game playoff on February 23, which was lost by Washington 68-51.

The team should have a strong corps of returning players with freshmen Mark Kenah and Edmund Hicks, as well as sophomore Jay Devlin, and juniors Cummings and Rupert.

"I thought this year's team didn't hit the expectations that the coaching staff had for it," Coach Tom Finnegan said. "We never developed the consistency that we needed to become a good team. Although we made a nice run at the end of the season to get ourselves into playoff contention, I thought we should have been more successful than we were."

Men's Crew: The success of the rowing team this year can be seen by watching the Varsity Four of John Mulvaney, Eric Jewitt, R.J. Eldridge, and James Pitt. Former Newt's POW's, the foursome has been a force to be reckoned with on the college circuit this season.

With wins at the Murphy Cup, the Washington Invitational and the MACs, the Varsity Four has been one of the most successful teams on campus.

However, Coach Mike Davenport is one of the only coaches on campus with a lot of graduating seniors. It will be a chore to replace his outstanding crew, which unfortunately gets little recognition.

"This is one of the hardest working teams that I've ever had the pleasure to coach," Davenport said. "And I expect greatness from these guys in our next race.

"(Next year's) going to be a rebuilding year. We're going to lose a lot of people. We have six guys graduating."

Women's Crew: For the women, the strong rowing of the Varsity Eight has spurred the team to another successful season. The team rose to high expectations before struggling at the Murphy Cup, but Coach Glenn Merry can't wait to get to next year. He also has a lot of young faces.

"The women's team has improved immeasurably since the beginning of the year," he said. "We're looking to even better results next year. Only one senior is graduating."

Field Hockey: While the team finished at 6-7, Coach Diane Guinan considered 1992 a very successful season. The field hockey team played a very difficult schedule with tough losses to Dickinson, Catholic, Albright, Swarthmore, Haverford, Johns Hopkins, and Mary Washington. Many of the games could have gone either way, but Guinan believes her team played well.

There were also many individual successes. Eleanor Shriver was named a regional All-American, and Renee Guckert and Marie Mohler both attained MAC All-Star status.

Liz Olivere and Renee Guckert both led the team in goals with six. Mohler, Jill Schultz, Shriver, Kouri Coleman and Amy McCleary all added goals to the Shorewomen's cause. Brigid DeVries was stellar in goal with an .876 save percentage.

"We won three out of our last five games," Guinan said. "We graduate five seniors, but I see some underclassmen with an awful lot of potential. Maybe next year, or maybe the year after, but hopefully each year, they're going to get better. Experience makes all the difference in the world."

Men's Lacrosse: In 1993, the Shoremen stormed to an 11-2 regular season record with the only losses coming to traditional powerhouses Johns Hopkins and Salisbury State.

The team still has an MAC championship game with Gettysburg and a chance to get to the NCAA playoffs. However, the team has already notched big wins against ranked teams in Washington & Lee, Franklin & Marshall, Cortland State, and Bowdoin College.

Jason Paige led the scoring attack with 42 goals. Greg Lawler and Chris Sanchez both notched 31. Harris Murphy was outstanding with 44 assists, and freshman goalie Jon Lundberg earned each of the 11 wins.

"I'm real pleased with how the kids did this year," Coach Terry Corcoran said. "They did a great job. We still have a big game left against Gettysburg and keep our fingers crossed for the playoffs.

"We have an exciting bunch for next year. We're going to lose some senior leadership, and it's important for this year's juniors to step up next year."

Women's Lacrosse: Like field hockey, Coach Guinan feels the lacrosse team should not be judged solely by its win-loss record.

"One thing that's unfortunate is that people only look at the score and the won-loss record," she said. "You play to win, but if, in your preparation, you don't come out on the winning side of the numbers, it doesn't mean you don't come out as winners."

Amy McCleary led the Shorewomen this year with 36 goals. Junior Renee Guckert tallied 19 times, and sophomore Kirsten Lucas added 14 goals. Nancy Millhouser made 156 saves on the season, and the defense was led by senior Eleanor Shriver. Guinan wants not to be fooled by the 1-10 record.

"We played Gettysburg to a four-goal differential and played very well," she said. "We play a very tough schedule. I don't feel bad, and I don't want people to feel sorry for us. We're out there looking for more than just a win."

Soccer: The soccer team epitomized the youth movement in Washington athletics this year. Coach Todd Helbling carried 17 freshman on the roster and only two seniors. While they finished at 5-12-2, the team won four of their last seven matches.

Junior Rory Conway led the team in scoring with seven goals. Shawn Clink, Cliff Howell, and Chris Kleberg each had three. Freshmen Brian Rush, Chad Wheatley, Jonathan Johnson and Chip Helm all added a goal a piece.

Greg Miller and Bill Reigel played well in the goal with Miller stopping 114 shots and Reigel sporting a .884 save percentage. Coach Helbling will return 20 players for 1993.

"We had our ups and downs," freshman sweeper Chip Helm said. "I think we played well at the end of the year. We showed a lot of improvement, and hopefully that improvement will carry over into '93."

Softball: Lanee Cole's 1993 softball team came into the year with an 18-game losing streak to get rid of. In the fourth game of the season, they beat Wesley on their way to a season with three wins. However, she is also looking for a vastly improved group next season.

The team will only graduate three seniors in Lori Hastings, Kiki Coenaga, and Diana Holton. However, leading hitters Denise Hakanson (.500), Tara Rathel (.333), and Michelle Chin (.317) will all return for next year's campaign. The major loss will be Holton, who carried the pitching staff.

"It's one step in the right direction," Cole said. "We got three wins. I was really pleased with our improvement. I'm looking forward to continuing where we left off next year."

Men's Swimming: The men's swim team rolled to a 7-2 regular season record and a seventh place finish in the MACs. With only one senior graduating and a strong recruiting class of five or six coming, the Shoremen will be a force to be reckoned with next year.

Sophomore Dave Cola led the barrage, winning the 500 at MACs—an event he did not lose all year. Sophomores Chris Freisheim, Jason Campbell and Ty McCarthy also swam well during the season providing for a strong nucleus. With the addition of freshmen Scott Steinmuller, Peter Ward and Dave Kraft, the Shoremen improved greatly over the previous year.

"This was a transition year," Freisheim said. "We went from a second-year team to a team that is comparable to the league powerhouses and other competitive schools. (Next year) we should go into every meet with a chance to win, and have a stronger performance in the championship meet."

Women's Swimming: The women's swim team was led by Jen Green, Colleen Roberts and Karen Prendergast. Also a team in transition, the women hope to expand their team next year.

Roberts along with fellow freshmen Jen Dow and Denise Hakanson provided a strong boost to the team. While they only won two meets and finished 10th in the conference championships, the team showed improvement throughout the year.

"We were very excited with the finish even though we didn't win a lot of meets," Coach Kim Lessard said. "We ended up breaking four school records, and four girls place in individual events at MACs. It's a young team that should continue to improve."

Men's Tennis: The tennis team continued its strong tradition at Washington College. Ranked fifth in the nation in the pre-season, the Shoremen fought through a rigorous schedule.

Freshman Mark Kenah started at point guard for Coach Tom Finnegan. Kenah will halp provide the nucleus for the Shoremen for the next three years.

Seniors Trevor Hurd and Alberto Diaz led the team, and both will play in the NCAA tournament.

"We started a little slow, but we just kept on picking up steam as the year went on," Coach Tim Gray said. "Our key match was a 5-4 loss to Swarthmore. That loss may keep (the team) out of nationals.

"I've got some good players coming in. I think we'll be stronger next year than we were this year. That's a particular benefit to the men because they're already a top contender."

Women's Tennis: Although not as strong as the men's team, the women also had a good year, highlighted by Pam Hendrickson's victory in the MAC tournament.

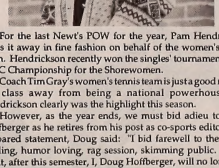
"I was pleased," Gray said. "I think we made the best with what we had. Everybody worked very hard. We weren't the most talented team, but we made up for it with a lot of effort and hard work.

"Hopefully, I'm going to pick up four or five girls in recruiting, so I'm hoping for things to pick up from what they were this year."

Volleyball: Last but not least, the volleyball team also finished the season with a late flourish, winning six of their last nine matches.

Jen Dixon, Julie Dill, Beverly Diaz, Michelle Chin, Miriam Jecelin and Courtney Myers led the team to a 12-20 record which included big wins against Dickinson, Johns Hopkins, King's, Haverford and Scranton.

"After having graduated three seniors from the year before, we knew it was going to be a rebuilding year," Coach Penny Fall said. "Initially, it was. We started three or four freshman every game, and consequently, we started very slowly. We started out 1-7 before we hit our stride. From then on, we played very well."



With so many teams playing with such little experience, most of the fourteen teams hopes to live up to their potential in 1993 and beyond. With each recruiting class getting stronger, especially for sports such as swimming, softball and soccer, each season is sure for improvement. While only four teams will head into post-season competition this spring, there may be many more in the future.

For the last Newt's POW for the year, Pam Hendrickson takes it away in fine fashion on behalf of the women's tennis team. Hendrickson recently won the singles' tournament at the MAC Championship for the Shorewomen.

Coach Tim Gray's women's tennis team is just a good recruiting class away from being a national powerhouse, but Hendrickson clearly was the highlight this season.

However, as the year ends, we must bid adieu to Doug Hoffberger as he retires from his post as co-sports editor. In a prepared statement, Doug said: "I bid farewell to the sports reading, humor loving, rag session, skimming public. That's right, after this semester, I, Doug Hoffberger, will no longer be your co-sports editor. I am handing the reigns completely over to my partner in humor–Matt Murray. I know we've shared great times this semester, but it's time for Berger to move on. We've laughed and we've cried, and to all those people who got cut on, remember it's all in good fun, right Herbie!"

With this shocking news, I, Matt Murray will take full responsibility for the sports section next year. Here's hoping it will be a great year, and if you're looking to write for the sports staff, it's not too early to talk to me (hint: Dave George).

And oh yeah, "Eat s- - -, Myers!"

Foster Finishes Fourty-Fourth With Elm Scepter in Hand

Grand Marshall Ermon Foster, Registrar emeritus prepares to lead academic procession from Dunning lobby.

Ermon Foster led yesterday his 128th and final academic procession as Grand Marshall during the 1993 Fall Convocation ceremony. During the ceremony Foster was presented with a replica of the scepter he has carried as Grand Marshall in honor of his many years of dedicated service to Washington College. This scepter was crafted by Chestertown resident and alumnus Frank Rhoades '83 from the wood of the late Elm tree.

Foster has been part of the Washington College family for 44 years. A former professor of education and psychology, Foster served as Registrar from 1950 until his retirement in 1986. Since retiring, Foster served as a consultant to the Registrar as well as continuing to lead academic processions in commencements and convocations. As Grand Marshall, Foster has place hoods on many dignitaries including President Dwight D. Eisenhower, Maryland Governor J. Millard Tawes, journalist Walter Cronkite, Su-

Cutbacks Force Loss of Jobs

John K. Phoebus
News Editor

Due to budget restrictions several positions have been cut or reshuffled at Washington College for the 1993-94 academic year. Independent of budget influenced changes, several members of the Washington College community have left to pursue other things. The President's Office provided information related to these changes last week.

According to Joe Holt, Executive Assistant to the president, these changes will not result in any diminishment of service to students or alumni. Rather than cutting services the college has chosen to consolidate responsibility among administrative offices in a creative combination of similar jobs. It has accomplished this through attrition and reassignment of responsibility, not through furloughs or draconian cuts, according to Holt. While times will be tighter at WC, Holt points out that last year was the first that a budget freeze hit the school, while other institutions have faced shortages

Loose Cannon Rolls Again

Scott Ross Koon
Editor-in-Chief

Last week an anonymous evangelist of conservatism came to Washington College and left behind a memo entitled "The Excerpt from Required Reading for Pornography 409." The courageous crusader swept in like an avenging angel, a prophet of righteousness selflessly seeking to protect young minds from the wicked propaganda which passes for education nowadays.

Washington College has seen this angel before, of course. To know her is to love her, for she is none other than Sue Huck, ultimate arbiter of morality. And this time, she has struck at a time when she knew she could reach the parents of freshmen. Huck's propaganda was placed in cars parked outside of the dorms as students were moving in.

This time, Huck's attack was somewhat successful. One parent and one board member took the memo at face value and complained. This caused the Dean and Provost to summon the course's instructor, Dr. Richard De Prospo, for a meeting to discuss the course. Huck's contention that "This course degrades and demeans the College" had caused a fracas of the first order.

Or had it? Frankly, who gives a flying Huck what she thinks? The course itself caused no controversy when it was added to the curriculum, and Dr. De Prospo is correct when he says that it is the "best pub-

Washington College welcomes four new faculty members to departments of Economics, French, Math and Psychology.

Edguardo Buscaglia is a new assistant professor for the Economics Department. He is a consultant to the World Bank. Buscaglia comes to us from Stanford University where he was a Visiting Scholar teaching law and economics of technological innovation in Latin America and Eastern Europe. He has a master's degree in Law and a doctoral degree in Economics from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. He was Visiting Fellow at the Cardinal Newman College of the National University of Buenos Aires. He volunteers as a professor of law and economics in the National University of Buenos Aires in his summers. He was research associate in the Jurisprudence and Social Policy Program at the University of California at Berkley. His teaching style is one of interactive approach. He believes in preparing the students to live in the "real world" and said that leaving the fear of exposing points of view in front of a group is an important step.

Amy Smiley joins the Department of Modern Languages as an Assistant Professor. She succeeds Andre Yon, who retired last spring. She was formerly an Assistant Professor of English at the Universite of Paris 6, and an instructor of French at the University of Kansas. Smiley earned her undergraduate degree in Literature from State University of New York, Purchase and then earned a Master's Degree and a Ph.D. in French literature from the University of Paris 7. She will be teaching Elementary and Intermediate French in addition to her French Masterpieces course. Smiley likes to recreate life situations in the classroom for the student to get more out of the language course. Her main literary interests are in the writing of the French Resistance.

In the Mathmatics Department, Samuel B. Smith, son of senior faculty member Nathan Smith, has been appointed to fill a vacancy. Smith graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Bucknell University in 1988 and recently completed his Ph.D. in the area of Algebraic Topology at the University of Minnesota. He taught at the University of Minnesota and was a recitation instructor for two instructional television programs called UNITE and Finite Math.

Cecilia Acocella joins our Psychology Department as an Assistant Professor. She has a bachelor's degree from Hamilton College in New York and she earned her master's and doctoral degrees in experimental psychology from Northeastern. She was a teaching assistant in Northeastern in several areas, including neuroanatomy and psychobiology. Her main research interests are in the field of vision. Acocella has studied aspects of central vision loss with monkeys. Now she is planning to work more with Sensation and Perception and use human subjects. She likes personal interaction in the classroom and is looking forward to working with students on her research.

Also new to the Psychology Department is visiting Assistant Professor Dr. Cynthia Kalodner. She obtained her Ph.D. in 1988 from Penn State University. She has done work in University of Texas at Austin as a counciling center staff psychologist, and was an Assistant professor at Ohio University of Akron for 3 years. Kalodner also had a fellowship at John Hopkins and taught at George Mason Virginia. Her research interests

Positive Aspects of a Divided Campus

Across the country, the high school class of '93 is becoming the college class of '97. Different individuals will undoubtedly react to this new experience in different ways. For some of the Freshmen, I'm certain that the first priority upon arriving at Washington College was to hook up the stereo so as to be able to listen to Inna Gadda Da Vida at maximum volume. For others, the first task was a visit to the bookstore to buy books and get ahead on their reading. Others will go into town for a bout of shopping to buy all the necessities which they forgot to bring with them from thier homes in Rochester, Baltimore and Bryn Mawr. And there are always a large number who unpack their belongings, curl up in a fetal position on their beds and try to become invisible until spring semester.

That's fine. The beauty of Washington College as an institution is that students have the freedom to discover their own idiosyncrasies. This is truer today than ever before, thanks in large part to the college's efforts to promote social heterogeneity. A small student body, liberal policies regarding campus behavior and a wide variety of curricular and extracurricular programs are other factors which make Washington College an excellent place for young people to discover who they are.

As college students grow and develop, they look to their peers for social support. During young adulthood, people determine the values and morals which will guide their conduct for the rest of their lives. This is intrinsically a difficult process, which is not made easier if you're constantly being critiqued by your friends. So inevitably people splinter into little tribes of like-minded individuals. This can be seen in any community throughout the world. At large universities, this is rarely seen as a problem, as it is simply impossible to even meet all the people in your Psych 101 class. But at Washington College the most general complaint is that social cliques fragment the campus in a way which is exclusionary, snobbish and elitist.

At larger schools, individual cliques can pretend that the others simply do not exist, as each clan is large enough to comprise a community unto itself. Here at WC people simply cannot ignore one another for long, which is why cliques are perceived as a problem. While each person strives to surround him or herself with others who will agree on central values, everyone is constantly forced to be in contact with others who vehemently disagree.

This is exactly why Washington College is such an excellent place for young people to sort out their place in the world. Here it is possible not only to learn who you are, but also who you are not.

We all can find uncommon ground upon which to disagree: what is truly useful about cliques in a small social setting is that they actually promote unity through division. We are united through our divisions because they provide the context for achieving the intellectual goals of a liberal arts eduaction. We are all here to learn, not only from our professors and textbooks, but also from each other. Washington College would be much less lively if there were not both freaks and Greeks. It is only by respecting our differences that we can maintain a fertile ground for ideas without intellectual inbreeding.

DIRT: Coffee and Cigarettes: A Brief History of the Last Three Years

J. Tarin Towers
Editor Emeritus

When I came to Washington College in the fall of 1990, I didn't smoke. President Charles H. Trout's first semester was my first semester, and since then no less than three Deans have presided, as well as four SGA Presidents, five Elm editors, four Pegasus editors (yes, the yearbook is on its way), and two directors of Student Activities.

During my stay, the Casey Academic Center opened, Security moved from the Spanish House to off-campus, the Elm was cut down, and the Johnson Lifetime Fitness Center was built.

Kent House my freshman year was an all male, largely freshman dorm. Caroline second and third floors were co-ed special interest halls (creative arts, where I lived, and humanities, respectively). The CoffeeHouse served beer and food and was packed with people on many a weekend. The bookstore was in the basement of Hodson Hall, where the study lounge now sits.

Student Affairs and the Language Lab were in Smith Hall, the writing lab was in the basement there, and so were the mail boxes, which we shared. Behind Bill Smith was a huge parking lot, replaced by the brick'n'grass mall you now see. The athletic field parking lot did not exist, and neither did the phone hookups in every room, the computing classroom, or the Lit House Press annex.

Three years and countless cigarettes later, some folks would have you think WC is a largely stagnant place. I disagree. For starters, Hands Out, Hillel, the Rugby Club, Terra Firma, Gender Relations Awareness Alliance, SANE/Freeze, WAC Happenings, the Dale Adams Heritage Exchange, and GALA all started my first two years here and have left their indelible mark on the campus. Others, such as YAWP, have come and gone, and some, such as the Dutch Dumschott Society, have simply gone. And then there are the Sigs...

People believe whatever they want. Washington College is either too liberal or too conservative for some tastes. When I was about five years old, I read this book called "Nothing Ever Happens on My Block." My freshman year, I ran across it again and was struck by the similarities to WC.

The narrator, a little kid, complains the whole way through how boring his town is, while missing a parade, a bank robbery, and the subsequent crash of an armored car.

Freshman year, our SGA President shot himself in the foot, literally, which eventually got me an internship at Rolling Stone Magazine. My predecessor at the Elm shook things up by starting an independent newspaper called This Is Not The Elm to cover Neimangate, since the 1990 Elm was queasy at the prospect. Pat Attenasio and the rest of us also covered "Lacrossgate," which involved a college van and several cases of beer. [A similar van later exploded in Baltimore.]

My second year was Beyond the Shadow of A Trout an interesting one. The Elm, which this newspaper was named for, was removed. Dutch Elm Disease destroyed the tree taken circa 1930 from Mount Vernon (that's George Washington's Estate, for those of you watching at home) and planted in the middle of the campus lawn. The New Twig — er, Tulip Poplar — was planted near Washington Avenue.

We've had fires on campus, thefts of major equipment, and sadly, two student deaths. Eugene McCarthy, John Barth, Jorie Graham, Bob Woodward, Antonia Novello, Bob Woodward, Marian Wright Edelman, and Carl Rowan have all spoken on campus, to name a few. Musical ensembles from the Julliard String Quartet to Quink have visited, as have the Connells, Black Sheep, Disappear Fear and Uprising. And campus bands such as the Incorrigibles, the Brainchillins, Guns'n Houghter and the Sacred Cows over the years have rocked our various worlds.

Even if it takes a cup of dining hall coffee and a pack of Camel Filters to open your eyes, try it. It's worth it. I don't want anyone on this campus to look back on their four years here and realize that the best times they had on campus were the ones they couldn't remember the next morning. Washington College is its own little world. But while you're living in it, pay attention. You might be surprised at what you miss ... not only after you leave, but while you're here.

Does it appear to you that there has been a lot of illicit activities (like drinking and sex and drugs and murder) in the first few days here at WC?

Danica Heath
Freshman
There has been quite a bit of drinking so far, but I'm sure that's because it's so early and the freshmen are actually able to drink. WOAH! As for sex and drugs, I haven't seen or had any yet. Now, murder...I swear I know nothing!

P. J. Mullin
Senior
Why yes, people lying half passed-out in the parking lots at 3:00 in the morning is a bad sign.

Lauren Levine
Freshman
There does seem to be quite a lot of drinking, but that's to be expected.

Here? At WC? Oh, I really don't think so.

Open Forum: Summer Pruning of WC Staff

Pat Geissel

That time is here at last and our hallowed halls have thrown open the doors to welcome us into the fold of higher education once again. The more astute among our incumbent student body will notice the number of changes about our campus from the previous year. Before I ramble on, my enterprising readers should take this opportunity to try and put their respective finger on just what is missing this year.

Who can help but miss the rampant construction that has deprived us of our beloved snack bar? No foaming capuccino in the wee hours before class; our students must rely on the skeleton crew assembled in the CAC to redeem their coupons. Our sophomores most certainly should notice the loss of their fellows, a large number of whom did not make it through their first year. (Freshman, beware – let this be a lesson to you.)

The one change that most of you have undoubtedly overlooked is the cutback in college staff workers. Over the summer, five employees of the college were laid-off. This action was a direct result of the tragedy many of us remember from last year.

It started with rumors whispered about the edges of campus. First, building, then rising, and eventually erupting in a series of exposés emblazoned across the front pages of this very newspaper. Our college was going bankrupt! President Trout tried to allay our fears, but even he had to face the overwhelming evidence. Near the end of the year, each of us, or more often our parents, received a small, sedate but proud memo from the President's Office declaring that steps were being taken to save our mighty institution. To no one's great surprise, these steps included another rise in the cost of tuition. Another of these steps involved the trimming of the budget, and specifically the payroll.

A total of five employees were dismissed. In addition, a number of positions vacated through attrition were left unfilled. The new Office of Student Activities and Campus Recreation is another result of these cost cutting measures. What we have here is a re-distribution of labor among a smaller group of laborers.

If you remained blissfully ignorant of these changes, let us hope that there is no reason to become alarmed now. Can we trust that our campus will continue to function as effectively as before with a smaller work force? Will I be able to visit the Business Office to complain a bill and have to face the fate of having my lymph nodes extracted through my nostrils by an overworked secretary? Will there still be all of those cool guitar shows that I have never seen but still hope to? What about the Hypnotist? Only time will tell if our college can respond adequately to the needs of its student body.

We've Got It Easy

Rachel Fink
Staff Writer

Each year hundreds of college student across the nation make the big jump from dorm life to off-campus housing. In some cases, students simply want a place away from the hustle and commotion of campus life, but for others having a house off campus means non-stop parties, and that means problems for the permanent residents of the community. Regardless of the reasons for the move, the off-campus student becomes not only a member of the college community, but also part of the larger community of the city or town.

The Baltimore County Council is now trying to eliminate housing problems for its residents. Councilman Douglas Riley has proposed legislation that will place more responsibility on the owners of houses rented to college students, making it easier to get a boarding house permit required for the renting of property to anyone. There is one catch: the government will require information, not only on the house, but its occupants. The bills, which will affect communities surrounding Towson State University, the University of Maryland, Baltimore County and Essex Community College, are an effort by the county council to gain more control over which groups of students are allowed to migrate from campus housing into the community.

Here in Chestertown regulations are much simpler, not only for students but also for property owners. The city code defines a "family" as "a group of not more than four (4) persons living together by joint agreement and occupying a single housekeeping unit with single culinary facilities on a nonprofit, cost-sharing basis." This description applies to most students living off-campus. In order to rent to college students, a property owner has to complete no special paperwork or special permits. This not only keeps housing costs down, but expands the choices available to college students seeking to move out of dorms. One off-campus senior, Mike Tarrant, likes this arrangement and says that living off-campus "just has a different feel...people are much more respectful of your rights."

We do have to be sorry here in Chestertown. Relations between the college community and town residents are usually good. It is in our best interest to maintain amicable relations, not only for off-campus students but also for the rest of us. Remember — good fences don't always make good neighbors.

Honor Code of Yesteryear

Early WC Administrators Ran a Tight Ship

Freshmen and transfer students who have just arrived at Washington College may be surprised by the premissiveness which pervades dorm life here. Generally speaking, students here have it relatively easy: we are free to come and go as we please, we can have guests of whatever sex we choose whenever we choose, and we can drink as much as we want to.

It hasn't always been this way. In the early 19th century students had to abide by rules which seem draconian by modern standards. So the next time your RA threatens to fine you, just be glad that you don't have to follow the same rules which governed student conduct in the early days of Washington College.

Rule 1st. The roll shall be called morning and afternoon fifteen minutes after the ringing of the bell, and every student shall answer to his name under the penalty of twelve and a half cents or such other punishment as the Professor in his discretion may think proper to inflict. unless he shall give satisfactory excuse for his absence.

Rule 2nd. Immediately after the calling of the roll in morning there shall be prayers: during which time every student shall demean himself reverently and devoutly under such penalty not exceeding five dollars, as the Professor in his discretion may think proper to impose.

Rule 3rd. During the hours of recitation and study, it shall be the duty of every student to attend to his business, nor shall he trifle away his time in any way whatsoever under a penalty of twelve and a half cents, or such punishment at the Professor in his discretion may think proper to inflict.

Rule 4th. It shall be the duty of every student to be prepared for recitation in the course of his class under a penalty not exceeding fifty cents for the first offense - for the second private and for the third public admonition. The habitual neglect of this rule shall expose to suspension and finally expulsion.

Rule 5th. The Professor shall class the students in such manner as he shall think proper, and it shall be the duty of each class in turn to commit to memory, whether their own composition or that of the others, and on Saturday morning, declaim or speak, in order to improve in elocution; but each piece shall be previously submitted to the inspection of the Teacher.

Rule 6th. At the expiration of every quarter, the several classes shall be publicly examined in their respective studies. If any student shall absent himself in order to avoid such examination, or shall refuse to be examined, he shall be fined in the sum not exceeding two dollars or shall be publicly admonished as the case may be.

Rule 7th. During the school hours, every student shall abstain from talking loud, or making any noise, whether within or without the college, whereby the business thereof may be interrupted or in any way hindered; under a penalty not exceeding fifty cents or such other punishment as the Professor in his discretion may think proper to inflict.

Rule8th. Any student who shall be guilty of immoral conduct, such as quarreling, cursing, swearing, or immodest conversation, shall for the first offense be fined a sum not exceeding two dollars (in the discretion of the Professor), for the second shall be privately admonished, for the third publicly - and if he continues to disregard the authority of the College, he shall be suspended from its benefits and privileges, and may be finally expelled.

Rule 9th. No student shall in any way or manner injure the buildings of the College, or its appurtenances, under a penalty of double damages. In all such cases and damages shall be estimated by the Visitors or under their direction, and such penalty shall be paid to the Professor within seven days after proper notification shall have been given of said evaluation.

Rule 10th. Every student shall demean himself toward his teacher in a decent and respectful manner, under penalty not exceeding five dollars in the discretion of the Professor, and a repetition of this disrespect in language or conduct, shall subject the party offending to suspension or expulsion as the nature of the case may require.

Rule 11th. All fines that may arise under any of the preceding rules shall be paid to the Professor at the expiration of the quarter during which they were incurred. Excepting those that may arise under the 9th rule.

Rule 12th. If a student shall violate any of the rules of the College and shall refuse to submit himself to the punishment imposed thereby; he shall immediately be reported to the President of the Board of Visitors and Governors, who shall forthwith call a special meeting of the Board in order to take such offense into consideration.

Rule 13th. As cases may occur that are not expressly provided for by the Rules of the college, upon all such occasions, the Visitors and Governors shall proceed according to their best discretion, and may punish a student by fine, or otherwise according to the circumstances of the offense.

Hodson Hall Renovation Project Underway

Amy Peterson
Staff Writer

The renovations to turn the old Deli in the basement of Hodson Hall into a combination Student Center/Coffeehouse have finally commenced, after changes in the original plans.

Originally, the renovation project included an underground terrace in one corner of the former Coffeehouse. Unfortunately, due to structural problems and difficulty in rainwater drainage, the plans were unfeasible. Dennis Berry, Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation, said the new plans for the Coffeehouse are set for a grand opening when students return second semester. According to Reid Raudenbush, Director of Buildings and Grounds, renovations will cost no more than the budgeted $575,000 .

January may seem long for students to wait for a central meeting place, but the planned Coffeehouse is well worth it. Berry said it will include pool tables, air hockey and foozeball tables, along with bikes that students can check out for a day of campus use. The new Coffeehouse will also have room for concerts, and less formal studying than the study lounge. Activities currently held in the study lounge will move into the new Coffeehouse, leaving the lounge as a "home to commuter students", creating a "living room for the campus" says Berry.

The new Coffeehouse includes room for a future radio station. Because the Coffeehouse and Lounge will be staffed and run by students, possible uses for the area are limited only by the energy and imagination of WC's students. Another plus this year is the Comedy Club. There is no cover charge, to encourage students to just drop by without having to worry about whether they remembered their wallets.

In the meantime, students looking for a change from the food in the DIning Hall can find it at the Casey Academic Center from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday to Friday. The Interim Deli serves sandwiches, microwave foods, drinks, muffins and yogurt. Coupons for the Deli will be accepted. One complaint is the lack of vegetarian options, according to student vegetarian Amy Elliot. They also tend to run out of sandwiches and drinks before they close.

Don't Rock the Vote, Baby

MTV Executives Learn the New Rules of "Social Responsibility"

Scott Ross Koon
Editor-in-Chief

With last year's "Rock the Vote" program, MTV consciously entered the political arena. The corporate management of MTV must be feeling pangs of guilt at the fact that MTV's mindless and often decadent programming has stunted the intellectual growth of so many in our generation. "Rock the Vote" and other "socially responsible" programming marks a transparent attempt to convince young America that MTV is not just another scumbag entertainment corporation.

MTV's feeble attempts to report news may actually exacerbate the problem of the MTV generation's lack of interestin politics. MTV presents to the viewers a world where Madonna gets 100 times the coverage then received by the President of the United States. Obviously, MTV is supposed to be music television and not CNN, but the fact that MTV offers news at all will cause many viewers to neglect to read newspapers or even watch more in-depth television programs, as they have already been kept abreast of world happenings, albeit by Kurt Loder. For many, MTV News is their only news source, which is laughable.

The question is not "should young people vote," but rather "Do we really want someone who watches 5 hours of MTV a day to vote?" People who know more about Boo-ya Tribe than Bosnia and who may support massive NEA grants to underwrite Queensreich's next East Coast tour should not have a hand in determining the policies of the world's largest economic and military power.

If MTV is successful over the long run in it's efforts to "Rock the Vote," 18-24 yearolds will become a politically powerful part of the electorate which every politician will have to reckon with. Politicians will be forced to address the interests and whims of the MTV generation. Many politicians will learn to speak MTV-speak and think MTV-think. If that happens, MTV will be able to substantially determine the American political agenda.

MTV also seeks to have a voice in America's moral agenda. MTV recently addressed the moral issues of today in "Seven Deadly Sins," a show which featured such eminent moral authorities such as Queen Latifa, Aerosmith, Ice-T, Ozzy Osbourne and Kirstie Ally. They could have sought out a Tibetan hermit to learn the meaning of life, but instead they sought out an aging rock and roller named Ozzy. Rumor has it that Ozzy is just now finishing up his doctoral dissertation on the fundamental ontology of Heidegger.

What will press conferences look like 20 years from now when more Americans get their news from MTV News than from any other source...

Sen. Lardbottom (R-Okla.): Yes, Mr. Loder?

Kurt Loder (MTV News): What's your position on AIDS research?

Sen. Lardbottom: As chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I've worked closely with Elton John and Naughty by Nature to hammer out a national public health policy.

We've also got both of the Nelson Brothers conducting genetic research at the CDC, and we're very optimistic that they'll find a cure.

Loder: A follow up - What about the nation's drug policy?

Lardbottom: We're treating this as a public health issue. The NIH just approved a 50 million dollar grant to Keith Richard to conduct research to find out exactly how much heroin someone can inject and still keep on breathing. Yes, Ms. Fuentes.

Daisy Fuentes (CNN): There are persistent rumors that you're down with O.P.P.

Lardbottom: I am not now, nor have I ever been, down with O.P.P. Squishy?

Squishy Squash (Guitar Player Magazine): You know, like, that track on Congressional Recording, like, that one you did with Barny Frank and Sam Nunn?

Lardbottom: Yes?

Thomas: And, like, you know, like the part just before the drum solo where you're going off, like, playing lead guitar?

Lardbottom: Yes?

Squishy: Well, like, what kind of pick did you use?

Is this what we want our society to come to? We must be ever vigilant to protect America from the insidious MTV menace. MTV should stick to music videos, and leave important issues to journalists who are going to be able to give each topic the depth of attention it merits. Should they continue to interview Megadeath and Faith No More? Absolutely, but they should ask them questions about music, not politics.

People have long since given up caring about Sinead O'Connor's political opinions. Perhaps in some more perfect world of the future we won't have to listen to them.

The most significant change in the '93 reshuffle is the resignation of Shawn Lyons, former Vice President for Development, to accept a position as Director of Development for a Kentucky based education lobbyist group. The chief role of Vice President for Development is to initiate and supervise the solicitation of donations for the college. Gene Hessey, Senior Vice President for Management and Finance, will chair a small search committee consisting of Gene Wubbles, Dean and Provost of the college, Professor Garry Clarke, and members of the Board of Visitors and Governors L, Cliff Schroeder, and Joyce Huber Cafritz. The committee, with President Trout participating, will begin a search in October to fill this post. In the meantime, the Development, College relations, and Alumni offices will continre their respective work.

Other changes have taken place throughout the college community. These are:

Student Activities

Dennis Berry has assumed the role of Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation, taking over the position vacated by Teri Turmel last semester in combination with his position as rec sports director. Last year, Berry determined that around 80% of the campus had participated in some form of Rec Sport activitiy. He hopes to achieve similar levels of participation in social events planned for the semester. His new office is located in the basement of Hodson Hall amid all of the rubble from the former Coffee House/Miss Dee's.

Development

In addition to the resignation of Lyons, Tom O' Handley, Assistant Director of Development, resigned to accept a position in development at a Boston theater company; he is replaced by Robert Bull who has considerable experience in organizing volunteers which will be applied to the WC phonathon. Kathleen O'Donnell was promoted from Assistant to Associate Director of Development. Patsy Will, formerly of the Registrar's Office, will assume secretarial duties in Development.

Athletics

Diane Guinan resigned as Head Coach of the field hockey and women's lacrosse team to pursue her doctorate in sports psychology. She served nine years as coach and is succeeded by Sarah Feyerherm, former Director of Sports Information. Feyerherm's responsibilities will distriuted among Athletics and COllege Relations. Jon Ferber resigned as Head Trainer and is succeeded by Mark Laursen, former assitant trainer at UMBC. In addition to personnel changes, most sports lost the equivalent stipend of one assistant coach.

Thirty Grimey Freshmen Muck in Tidal Wetlands

John K. Phoebus
News Editor

Mud mucking doesn't sound like a traditional part of Freshman orientation, but this year 30 freshmen got their feet wet and their clothes dirty as part of a pre-orientation excursion to Port Isabel, VA, a small island in the Chesapeake Bay. The group of Freshmen volunteered to come back on Sunday, August 23, four days before the rest of their class to attend this program. The mud mucking was organized by the Chesapeake Bay Foundation (CBF) and the Student Affairs Office of Washington College.

The Fresmen were joined by their RAs Salwa Nahdi and Ken Pipkin, peer advisors Steve Fuchs and Melanie Ruane, and faculty advisors David Russell and Beverly Wolff. They participated in a wide variety of Bay oriented activities: camping, canoeing, marsh hiking, crabbing, dredging, fishing and recycling. The group spent two nights on the island under the instruction of two CBF guides.

Not only did this group join together in this adventure, but excepting their professors and peer advisors, they will live together in Wicomico with RAs Ken Pipkin and Salwa Nahdi. It is the hope of Dean of Students Maureen K. McIntire that "pre-orientation" programs, based on the success of this fall's will continue in the future, possibly with participation by even more incoming students. Says Pipkin, "the trip was educational as well as fun...the mud mucking was the most fun — if you can survive that, you can survive anything." For exactly what mud mucking is...go ask a seasoned Chesapeake Bay-savvy freshman in Wicomico.

Major Changes in Store for Student Activities

Marianne Culbertson
Staff Writer

Upon resigning her position as Director of Student Activities last year, Terri Turmel indicated she did not know whether or not she would be replaced. This fall, in a cost-saving move, her post was merged with that of Dennis Berry, director of Rec Sports. Berry now assumes the title of Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation.

While little change is in store for the successful Rec Sports program, Berry plans to take Student Activities in a radically different direction. "What we're trying to offer is a student-run program," says Berry. "Selection of activities and entertainment will be conducted by student employees working closely with the social chairs. I'm not going to be the booking agent." Berry plans to emphasize student leadership programs and to change one such program, B.U.I.L.D., into a one-day seminar.

By merging Student Activities with the Rec Sports program, the college will eliminate one salaried position and save money. Although this change might reduce the quality of service to the student body, student employees are optimistic that they will be able to pick up the torch. Students Michelle Crosier and P.J. Mullin will be responsible for planning this semester's events.

Crosier and Mullin have already begun to deal with some of the pressures of a reduced budget. In the past, comedians have been paid upwards of five hundred dollars to appear at the Comedy Club in the Coffeehouse. However, in two weeks, Crosier and Mullin managed to book the same comedians as in previous years for less money. In an additional change, students will no longer have to pay to attend the Comedy Club.

Crosier and Mullin have also arranged to augment the Film Series by showing two popular movies every Tuesday night. The Film Series will continue to be shown in Norman James Theater, but all other events will be held in the Hynson Study Lounge due to the renovation of the Coffee House and Snack Bar.

Berry and his student employees welcome suggestions for future activities. Any organization that desires to hire a band may audit the demo tapes of groups available to play at Washington College. Berry, Crosier, and Mullin are also looking forward to working with the SGA Social Chairs in planning events and sharing information.

J. Carter Brown Speaks at Convocation

Alex Baez
A&E Editor

J. Carter Brown, director of the National Gallery of Art from 1969 to 1992, addressed Washington College Thursday as an honored guest at this year's convocation. The College presented him with an honorary degree of Doctor of Fine Arts, celebrating his contributions to visual arts and especially, his long and world-renowned tenture as director of the National Gallery. He is the recipient of numerous international awards and the object of much national recognition.

As an enterprising director, Brown brought comprehensive and valuable changes to the National Gallery. He guided its transformation from a medium-sized, fairly austere collection of European masterworks to a collection increased by 20,000 artworks, a highly attended setting for European and American works dating from the impressionist period to the late 20th century.

Brown oversaw the design and construction of the East Building, securing the services of celebrated architect I.M. Pei. The East Building created a dynamic new space and an ideal setting for modern works and temporary exhibits as well as a major educational resource. It won national acclaim as an architectural achievement and an artwork in its own right.

Grand-scale traveling exhibitions installed in the East Building were one of the hallmarks of Brown's career as director. Brown negotiated two to three such extravaganzas each year. Among these were the mammoth Tutankhamen exhibit of the 1980's and the more recent "Circa 1492" and "Treasure Houses of Britain" shows. While producing these exhibits, the National Gallery became noteworthy by setting a high standard for museum catalogs and installations.

The East Building also allowed the National Gallery to offer, for the first time, a regular series of films, lectures, courses, and teacher workshops open to the public. In addition, the Building became the home for a research center for art historical scholarly work and fellowships for study.

Brown secured tremendous gifts, both monetary and artistic, to the Gallery, including more than 1,000 works of 19th and 20th century art. His background in both business administration and art history afforded him the administrative acumen to run the large, complex operations of the Smithsonian's biggest art museum and the artistic knowledge to maintain rapport with the people with which he dealt.

Brown is the trustee at many prominent institutions and serves as chairman of the U.S. Commission of Fine Arts, the Leadership Council of the National Cultural Alliance. He is also chairman of a new fine-arts cable channel, the Ovation network, to be airing for the first time this fall.

I've never liked cranberries either as a juice or a sauce, and as a band, the Cranberries are equally unappealing. This Irish foursome's debut album, Everybody else is doing it, so why can't we? has some bright spots, but it is by and large dark and plodding. Lead singer Delores O'Riordan's breathy but strong vocals are dragged down by redundant melodies such as "Not Sorry" and "How." The band does manage to hit with a striking and enchanting power in the previously released single "Dreams." Only here do songwriters O'Riordan and guitarist Noel Hogan tear themselves away from their brooding theme of loves had and lost. The Cranberries' current single "Linger", with its cutting lyrics against a tear-jerker background of violins, is apparently sending them high on the American college and mainstream charts long after their appearance in Britain in 1991, but it is nonetheless laughingly reminiscent of the Sundays and Shellyan Orphan.

Regardless, the album could have done with some trimming. Twelve tracks is a bit long to sat listening to O'Riordan's aimless vocal meandering, especially when it is broken only by her instead O'Connerish caterwauling such as in "I Will Always." It is not that this is a bad band necessarily, it is just lifeless and unexceptional. There's the answer to the album's querying title: there's no reason why they can't do what everyone else is doing, but it's all been done before and better.

licized course in the history of Washington College."

According to Dr. De Prospo, the controversy started with a phone call from Dr. Huck. She started by congenially enquiring about the nature of the course, and identified herself only after five minutes of conversation. Among other things, she asked what the most controversial part of the course was. Dr. De Prospo, ignorant of Dr. Huck's mission to cleanse academia of anything which might be construed as prurient or politically correct, naively identified the most offensive section of the syllabus: pages 288-291 of Bret Easton Ellis's American Pycho.

This section would offend anyone who wasn't a raving psychopath. Huck immediately bought the book, photocopied that section, and distributed it along with the memo. The memo itself is not only sensationalistic, it also deliberately misrepresents the course and subtly slanders Dr. De Prospo.

The memo mentions only two books: American Pycho and Madonna's Sex. She does not mention Naked Lunch, Lolita or The Second Sex. She only mentions that Dr. De Prospo would make available his "private reserve" of Sex and "similar material." Huck's purpose in so doing is simple: to distort and pervert the truth and thereby grind her personal axe.

Dr. De Prospo offered the course after overwhelming student interest which accompanied the lecture on pornography he presented to the Gender Relations Awareness Alliance last spring. His interest in pornography lies in the fact that it is a topic which an instructor cannot advocate. "I'm interesting in teaching a course which has no content," De Prospo said in the first session of the seminar. "Pornography, in order to be pornography, must be titillating. In order to do its job it must disappear as a genre."

Of course, Dr. Huck, with her Ph.D. in Geography, is obviously better qualified to determine which are courses offered at Washington College than a mere department head like Dr. De Prospo. Whether she understands the rationale behind a course offering is unimportant: for her the only real question is whether something conforms to her personal prejudices.

And, of course, there is a lot of money in being narrow-minded. Conservative publications are quite willing to publish anything which is critical of the "politically correct academic establishment." Dr. Huck also recently circulated an article which is soon to appear in Conservative Review. In the article she derides the Modern Language Association for offering seminars such as "Feminist Responses to Racism and Xenophobia."

Dr. Huck mentions Dr. De Prospo' course in the article, and also asked him in their telephone conversation if he had attended the MLA convention in question. Obviously, she's looking for more material to publish in some magazine which doesn't care about piddling little issues of accuracy or quoting out of context.

Ironically, De Prospo is also critical of the same bourgeois feminists Dr. Huck loves to complain about. Of course, Dr. Huck gets paid only if she is critical of feminism, whereas Dr. De Prospo is paid whether he is critical of feminists or not.

Dr. Huck also mistakenly announced in the memo that AMS 491 is required for American Studies Majors. While the course does fulfill the requirement that American Studies majors take an American Studies seminar, Dr. De Prospo is offering another, non-controversial option next semester which also fulfills the requirement. "I absolutely promise you American Studies majors don't have to take the course," Dr. De Prospo said.

And while no student has to take Pornography in the U.S., nearly forty have volunteered to do so. They are not taking the course because they have to: they are taking the course because Dr. De Prospo is a first rate instructor and because Pornography in the U.S. is an interesting offering for students who often have to take courses with instructors who sometimes use notes for lectures they gave in 1957.

The administration stands by De Prospo: "We defend the right of faculty to select courses they think are appropriate," said Dean and Provost Gene Wubbles. Wubbels also pointed out that any course may be offered up to three times with the approval of the department head, and that Dr. De Prospo "has made a special effort to make sure no student is compelled (to take the course)."

"I don't see it as a matter of free speech," one student said, "so much as a matter of letting one person push around the entire class." According to De Prospo, the Board of Visitors and Governors is considering the issue of whether the course should be taught at all. The real shame is that the only ones to suffer if the course is axed are students who are truly interested in serious study with an excellent teacher.

Field Hockey Falls to Salisbury

After a week of pre-season practices, the Sho'Women Field Hockey team scrimmaged the Salisbury State Gulls on State's home field at 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday, September 1. The Sho'Women , under the new leadership of Coach Sarah Feyerherm, fell to the Gulls by a score of 4 to 2.

Despite the loss, the scrimmage was a positive beginning for the team. Coach Feyerherm was able to experiment with new fielding formations and utilize all players in many different positions. This first scrimmage was an opportunity for Coach Feyerherm to see these changes, from former Coach Diane Guinan's program, put in effect.

Ten new players, including nine freshmen, joined the team this year, bringing the squad a comfortable number of substitutions. The team boasts three goalies, more than making up for the loss of graduated goalie Brigid DeVries '93. Senior Captain Renee Guckert heads the Sho'Women's vicious attack. The scrimmage's two goals were scored by wings Cory Coleman and Marsha Flynn. All MAC Captain Peggy Bowman leads an aggressive defense with the help of strong returning players.

With the experience gained through the Salisbury State scrimmage, the team looks to the next two days' of practice, Coach Feyerherm and new assistant Coach Samantha Emmitt will take the Sho'Women to meet Goucher College for another scrimmage on Saturday.

Guts and Gatorade

Kate Sullivan
Co-Sports Editor

Regret. Regret that I hadn't stuck to the summer conditioning schedule. Sweat. Sweat covering me through three practices on 95 degree days. I, like my fellow field hockey, soccer and volleyball players, spent the week of August 23rd pushing my body to surpass limits I didn't know I had. We spent morning, afternoon, and evening hitting, kicking and bumping our proverbial balls. We sprinted to end lines, and spiked until our hands were raw. We hauled our tired and sore bodies out of bed to see the beautiful Chestertown sunrises on 6:30 am runs. We pushed ourselves and each other under the guidance of our coaches, and we survived. At the end of the week there was a collective feeling that we all had guts... and that we had cleared the dining hall out of Gatorade.

Optimal Experience

It's the start of another academic year here at Washington College which means it's also the beginning of another sports season.

The field hockey, volleyball and men's soccer teams have been practicing since August 23, trying to prepare for the upcoming year as quickly as possible.

While the three teams combined for a 23-39-2 record last year, each sport is looking to turn things around.

The key word for this year—optimism.

It's the new feeling on campus when it comes to sports teams, and the student body has every reason to be optimistic about the season ahead.

It's a good time for a fresh start as Washington enters a brand new conference with ten other very competitive schools.

With fresh starts of their own, each fall sports team feels a sense of excitement about this fall.

In field hockey, first-year head coach Sarah Feyerherm hopes to jump start the program.

It was only three years ago when the team achieved a national ranking in Division III of 14, but the program has since dropped off a little bit.

Sports Commentary

While the team lost a lot of seniors, Feyerherm hopes to return Washington field hockey to the top of the conference.

There's also a sense of optimism in the men's soccer program.

Coach Todd Helbling is in his third year at the helm. While it's been a rocky start with only six wins in two years, the team is looking to having its first winning season in 14 years.

A talented freshman class of eight should supplement the already strong corps of sophomores.

In volleyball, Coach Penny Fall hopes her team will start of the 1993 season as they finished in 1992.

After a tough beginning last year, the Shorewomen finished on a winning streak. With almost all of their key players back, they hope to start off on a roll.

It's hard not to notice the sense of optimism prevalent around campus, especially when it comes to Washington's three sports teams.

Every pre-season is optimistic when every team is 0-0, but this pre-season found optimism oozing all over the place.

However, for all of the doomsayers out there, former Detroit Pistons coach Chuck Daly once noted, "a pessimist is an optimist with experience."

While Daly may be right, Washington's fall sports haven't had much experience being optimistic, so here's hoping November won't bring pessimistic news.

On The Move

WC Switches Sports Conferences

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

It may not be as dramatic a move as Penn State's venture into the Big Ten or the University of Arkansas' switch to the Southeastern Conference.

However, as Washington College begins play in the Division III Centennial Conference this year, the competition between teams will be tougher and it will be the end of Washington's long-standing relationship with the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Washington has been a member of the MAC since 1946 and has been an active participant since the conference reorganized in 1958.

Although going to a new conference will break a 46-year tradition, the school's administration didn't think twice about making the switch.

"You're known by the company you keep and we're keeping good company," Washington College President Charles Trout said. "They (members of Centennial Conference) are superb schools academically and also have strong athletic reputations."

The charter members of the Centennial Conference are Washington, Dickinson, Ursinus, Franklin and Marshall, Western Maryland, Muhlenberg, Swarthmore, Haverford, Johns Hopkins, Bryn Mawr and Gettysburg.

Last year, the MAC had 26 teams, and Trout feels the smaller 11-team conference will boost the athletic program.

"It gives us a focus," Trout said. "When you have 11 schools instead of 26, it's more manageable and you're competing against the same schools. It's also not so large a league that we can't schedule other games."

Trout first heard about the possibility of a new league in the Fall of 1991 when there were rumors about eight schools breaking away from the MAC to form a conference which would showcase football.

Trout and Athletic Director Geoff Miller looked at the possible change as an opportunity for Washington to become stronger in athletics.

"What's coming to the Centennial Conference from the MAC are the strongest programs," Miller said. "We've got our hands full, and I think you'd have to say we're taking a step up."

In March of 1992, Washington was notified, along with Haverford and Bryn Mawr, of its inclusion into the conference.

The athletic department is particularly excited about the opportunities the conference brings for its women's athletic teams.

"I think for women's athletics it puts us into a regular season environment that probably puts us in some pretty fast company," Miller said. "You've got field hockey, women's basketball, volleyball and women's swimming which will all be very strong."

Rory Conway and the rest of Washington's athletes are preparing to take on rivals such as Swarthmore in the new Centennial Conference.

Besides the tougher competition, there aren't many adjustments for the college to make athletically.

However, there won't be post-season play except in the cases of swimming and tennis which is a change from the MAC.

One adjustment to make will be in the financial department.

Annual dues for the Middle Atlantic Conference was $2500 per year. The new dues for the Centennial Conference will be $11,000 each year.

The increase also include the addition of women's basketball as an intercollegiate sport at Washington.

Trout hopes the new conference will also help place the school in a more positive light through promotion of the athletic program.

"It think we're going to get more press than we did in the MAC," Trout said. "These schools that are a part of it are among the most highly visible in Division III."

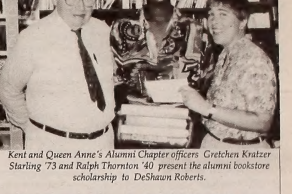
Long Range Planning Committee Releases Preliminary Report

John K. Phoebus
News Editor

In January 1993, Washington College formed the Long Range Planning Committee (LRPC) to critically look at our institution, compare it to other peer colleges and chart a course for WC ten years from now. This week the committee, chaired by Dean and Provost Gene Wubbles, released its preliminary report: A Plan for the Third Century: Extending Tradition Through Innovation. The eighty page document contains the recommendations and end product of the work of the 24 members of the Board of Visitors and Governors, administrators, faculty and students who spent almost eight months on this project.

In a Tuesday interview with the Elm, Wubbles pointed out that the committee "has no authority to decide anything, [merely] to make recommendations to the appropriate committees at the college." What the committee has accomplished is the first truly objective look at WC in recent memory. The document frankly assesses WC's standing in relation to peer institutions. Through this and an examination the college's past and the changes which have shaped our institution, the LRPC offers a plan by which the college can be strengthened over the next ten years.

Central to this plan and early recognized by the committee is "that prudent growth and an emphasis on personal engagement hold great promise as central objectives." Throughout the document, the LRPC holds to these two tenets in asserting its goals for Washington College. The executive summary prefacing the report summarizes these goals and recommendations through which to reach them. The text of this introduction is reprinted in entirety within this issue.



It is important to note that these recommendations were made with full benefit of financial and comparative data. While WC's status may appear somewhat lacking compared to peer institutes, this comparison is necessary to draw the goals and conclusions the LRPC developed.

The major objectives the committee set for WC to achieve within ten years are as follows.

- to increase the student body by 300 students.
- to increase the faculty and staff by at least 20 positions.
- to increase the staff by about 30 positions.
- to increase the endowment fund of the College by at least $50 million.
- to increase the selectivity of our admissions so as to replace the least qualified quarter of the entering class with those at the middle of our spectrum.
- to reduce the annual net attrition of students from 15% to 12% or less.
- to increase the percentage of our graduates from 6% to at least 25% who have had a full-time off-campus study experience of at least one semester.
- to increase the percentage of our graduates who carry on independent study or internship projects for academic credit.
- to strengthen the residential life program by adding five professional staff.
- to build dormitory and dining space for 225 additional students and to renovate the dormitories that have not recently been renovated.
- to build a new student center.
- to build, add to, or renovate five major academic buildings.
- to augment budgets supporting faculty professional activities by at least $300,000 annually, from four to five percent.
- to induce 100% of the students, faculty, and staff to make effective use of [the network].

Alumni Turn Junk into Scholarships

Early tomorrow morning, September 11, "one man's trash becomes another man's treasure becomes a bookstore scholarship" in the event of the Kent and Queen Anne's Alumni Chapter Flea Market. For this annual event, 9 a.m. to noon on the lower campus lawn, alumni rent tables to anyone in town who wants to turn a cluttered closet, garage or attic into cash. There will be books, bicycles, lamps, luggage, typewriters, TVs, clothes shoes, jewelry and plenty of "junk" for rummage sale prices. Students are welcome to shop and browse. The "rent" that our alumni collect for use of these forty or fifty tables goes to support the Kent and Queen Anne's Alumni Chapter Bookstore Scholarship Fund. The alumni scholarship is presented annually to help a Kent or Queen Anne's County student afford textbooks. This year's scholarship was presented to DeShawn, who has the highest GPA of incoming freshmen from QA County, attended Queen Anne's County High School and lives with his family in Church Hill. He plans to study economics and business management at WC and then continue on to law school. Our local alumni are proud to help DeShawn on his way.

Kent and Queen Anne's Alumni Chapter officers Gretchen Kratzer Starling '73 and Ralph Thornton '40 present the alumni bookstore scholarship to DeShawn Roberts.

Trespasser Near Caroline Dorm Police Nab Suspect

John K. Phoebus
News Editor

Over Labor Day weekend, Caroline House of Washington College was the scene of an attempted break-in. Through the cooperation of WC Security and the Chestertown Police Department, the perpetrator was arrested and charged with trespassing. Jerry Roderick, director of Security, complemented the Caroline resident for taking the correct action in quickly reporting the crime to campus security at extension 7810.

5:15 a.m. Monday morning, September 6, a resident of the first floor of Caroline was awake, reading in her room. At this time, she heard a loud noise coming from her window and looked up to see the air conditioner move. Hesitating, she opened the closed blinds to the room and saw someone running away. Security was promptly phoned. Along with the local police department, they responded immediately, canvassing the area behind Reid and Caroline. The local police officer pursued a man running on foot past Kent and Queen Anne's County Hospital to the old Acme parking lot where he was apprehended. The man was arrested and later charged with trespassing.

'93 Security Concerns

J. Tarin Towers
Staff Writer

Jerry Roderick, Director of Washington College Campus Security, is concerned about the incidence of over 50 break-ins to local businesses over the last two-and-a-half months. All of the reported break-ins targeted cash only; computers in the businesses were left untouched.

Campus officials are worried that, now that school is back in session, the perpetrator(s) of these crimes may target college offices or residence halls. Roderick urges all students to lock their room doors and windows (once air conditioning is removed later this month) and not prop doors to residence halls at night to discourage theft and vandalism.

If students are expecting visitors after the dorm doors are locked, they should make available their room extension (which operates in all rooms regardless of whether a phone charge card has been purchased). Guests can use the callboxes located outside of Caroline, Queen Anne, Reid and Minta Martin dorms. No student should prop a locked door at night for any reason. (see related story, page one)

Roderick told the Elm that several students have moved into their rooms without registering or picking up their keys from Security. Students who have not yet registered for classes should do so.

Roderick is concerned that the residence of all students be known in case of emergency. Similarly, some students have moved off-campus without notifying Student Affairs. All off-campus students should give their address and phone number to Diane Larrimore in the Student Affairs Office so that the Deans of Students can reach them in case of an emergency.

Any student who currently has their car parked on grass or in any other non-designated spot must move it or risk it being towed at the owner's expense. Security officers have begun enforcing parking violations with $7.50 tickets.

As a final note, Roderick wants to remind all students, on or off campus, as well as faculty and staff, that 1993-94 parking stickers are required for all vehicles parking on campus on a regular basis. They are available from Security for $10. The Security Office is located at 500 Washington Avenue across from College Heights Plaza.

Long Range Planning Committee Places College in Competitive Situation for the Future

Of all the major American industries, the college education industry is perhaps the strangest animal. In most businesses, slack demand causes prices to drop. This is not true with colleges and universities. In times of slack demand, the real price of a college education rises because real institutional expenses per student rise as enrollment declines.

One would think, then, that real costs would decline as enrollment rises. This is true, but the dynamic of the higher education market is such that there is little downward pressure on prices.

Financial considerations are of paramount importance to many college students. A college's pricing strategy determines who will attend. Several studies indicate that cost is more important a factor for students from middle class families than for those of either lower or upper income groups.

The preliminary report of the LRPC shows an understanding of the logic of this illogical market: "The logic of our market is not that greater institutional resources result in lower prices, although a few exceptions to that rule exist." Colleges charge high prices because they can. Most of the students who attend private liberal arts colleges will attend a private liberal arts regardless of the cost.

All these factors tend to exert upward pressure on the prices colleges can charge. Unlike other industries, colleges are protected from foreign competition because, unlike cars, education is not readily transportable on container ships. Innovation in the industrial sector also does little to bring down the cost of a college education. Assembly line workers can be replaced by robots: college professors cannot.

This has resulted in a real increase in the cost of a college education relative to other goods. A study by the Consortium for Financing Higher Education reveals that the median tuition of thirty-two selective liberal arts colleges increased 196 percent from 1978 to 1989, and increase which does not compare favorably with the 90 percent increase in the consumer price index over the same period of time.

The costs faced by colleges will continue to increase at approximately the same rate in the future. The college is fortunate at this time, in that the governing structure of the college is aware of the demographic and economic phenomena which will dictate the higher education market structure for the next century.

In the long range planning process, the college has taken a decisive step towards positioning itself for the future. Middle class families are already examining the cost of higher education at liberal arts colleges. In the future it is probable that upper-income families will do so as well.

It is possible for a school like Washington College to thrive in such an austere market. To be successful in the twenty-first century, Washington College will need to differentiate itself from other similar schools. The LRPC's preliminary report marks an effort to do just that.

Letters to the Editor

SGA President Welcomes Student Body

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to give you a bit of an idea of who and what the Student Government Association is, and what to expect from this group during the year.

The SGA is made up of the Executive Board, the Senate, the Student Advisory Board (SAB), and the Student Conduct Council (SCC). The executive board positions are held by students elected by the student body each spring. The Senate is comprised of dorm senators, class presidents and off-campus senators. The SAB is involved with student input and recommendations about academic issues, and the SCC is the judicial branch of the SGA.

The SGA has become the vehicle for student voices and opinions to be heard throughout the College. The accomplishments of SGA Administrations in the past show clearly the extent of the influence and abilities of the SGA. I encourage you to explore any thoughts of involving yourself with the SGA that you may have. The full Constitution is printed in the Student Handbook if you are interested in finding out more.

There are a few general themes which the Executive Board will be keeping in mind during the actions of the SGA this year. The first of these is supporting and helping "student involvement." This idea is very broad and has innumerable applications; we want to encourage student involvement in our own College, in your education, within your own peer group, and in our community as a thoughtful participant. The rewards from such interactions can be tremendous and I feel this is a worthy cause to encourage. This theme is so prevailing that it applies to many other ideas we have for the coming year.

As I personally want to encourage your own involvement in the workings of the school, I feel the SGA has a strong duty to keep the student body informed of what we are doing. We will be making strong efforts to keep everyone up to date. The routes of information include your dorm senators, letters through the Elm, and through the Executive Board. I am hoping that this information flow can go both ways; we are the student representatives, and we need to hear what your concerns are.

For anyone interested in running for a senator position, petitions are now available in student affairs and are due by 12 noon on Tuesday, September 14, in Student Affairs.

DIRT: Can Jackson Beat It?

J. Tarin Towers

You know, I'm surprised that Michael Jackson hasn't been publicly accused of a crime before now. Not that I'm going to pass judgment on whether or not I think he's committed any crimes, because I'm not. I simply don't have all the facts — and neither did Newsweek and Time, who made Jackson their number one and number two stories this week, respectively.

By the time child star Drew Barrymore was thirteen years old, she was already in recovery for drug and alcohol abuse. By the time Michael Jackson was thirteen, he was recording his fifth album as lead singer of the Jackson 5.

Ten years later, yet another thirteen-year old child (over one billion served?) is talking about Michael Jackson. But not to his sixth-grade friends. To the police. To use the same cliches the rest of the press is, we always knew that Jackson was Off the Wall. It was in dispute how Bad he was. But Dangerous?

The accuser is the child of a divorce. His custody is the subject of a messy legal battle between rich parents. The father, a dentist and co-writer of Robin Hood: Men in Tights, owes back child support of over $68,000 to the mother, who is married to Mr. Rent-A-Wreck.

The accusee is the child of alleged physical and emotional abuse by his father, the manager of the Jackson 5. The group's first single was released when Michael himself was five years old. He told Oprah Winfrey in February that growing up in front of America was one cause of his ironically publicized withdrawal from public appearances. (Incidentally, his last television interview before this year was fourteen years ago — before his accuser was born).

It adds up that Jackson should be accused of abuse. Many of his best friends are not yet in high school. He routinely holds slumberparties in Neverland. He is the child of abuse himself. And he hasn't been the object of any scandal greater than criticism since his hair caught on fire during the filming of a Pepsi commercial.

America is scandal-hungry. News week claims that America has already cleared Jackson of the charges in its heart, because no one wants to watch his star fall. Time, on the other hand, is convinced that he is falling regardless. Both admit that his scars will rival those left by his years of plastic surgery and skin-lightening treatments.

But what about the child? The child apparently told his shrink that Jackson had gone beyond the sharing-a-bed stage that so many youths are gleeful about. Jackson allegedly began taking baths with the child, french kissing him, and fellating him.

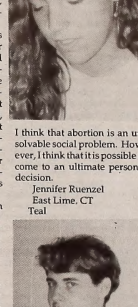
The press corps dismisses the child as the tool of one or other of the greedy parents, and an emotionally-stressed, unreliable witness. Jackson's private investigator insists that the father wanted Jackson to support a $20 million dollar film project, and that extortion would be part of the deal. Jackson's biographer reports that extortion attempts are run-of-the-mill for celebrities with the money — and reputation for weirdness — that Michael has.

But the child is the victim of abuse regardless, even if Jackson hasn't laid one gloved finger on him. This 13-year-old boy has become a symbol at the same time Jackson's significance is changing.

Let me explain the balance first in terms of one of the other richest, weirdest stars on the planet.

Madonna hit the music scene one year after Thriller did. She was a sex symbol and a tomboy, aggressively feminine and hypnotically androgynous at the same time. Since, she has offended almost everyone, including many of her now-ex-fans. The ones who have stopped liking her music claim they still respect her as a businesswoman in the morning.

And that she is. Think back over the last ten years. Every single scandal she has been involved with has been self-inflicted. She has offended feminists, anti-feminists, Christians, atheists, lesbians, homophobes, and, with one book, Sex, both fans of pornography and anti-pornographers.



Pepsi dropped her as a campaigner after her Like A Prayer video. Feminists and fans of Marilyn Monroe failed to see the humor in Material Girl. Parents were appalled when their children came home singing "I'm gonna keep my baby." She's been called a slut since her first video and yet she's been sexually linked to fewer people than some stars have been married to.

With Labor Day come and gone and the end of the summer arriving, it is time for some autumn reflection. Turning away from the cozy confines of New WAC city, away from the cliques, closed-down coffee house, plentiful weekend parking to our beloved land. This is America, Our Country Tis of Thee, leader of the free world and defender of the oppressed(unless they are not set up in the desert for smart bombs and definitely not if they are in the heart of the new dark continent, Europe. As the affairs, of the politic not the body, of Mister Bush and now Mister Clinton, who never met a body he couldn't politic, inaction and indecision are the only bi-partisan qualities). Sure, America is all that is noble and good but it also goes beyond that. I am willing to wager the U.S.A. stands not only for hourly motel rates and Aerosmith but much, much more. What America is, my friends, is Wal-Mart. The perfect mix of 7-11 and K-Mart. It took the hours of the former and the quality of the latter, yet quality is not necessarily the first word that comes to mind when one mentions K-Mart. If it is even the last word one thinks of, it is not in the context that K-Mart has

College Honors Foster, Brown at it's 211th Fall Convocation

J. Tarin Towers
Editor Emeritus

President Charles H. Trout opened Washington College's 211th year by looking beyond the next nine months to a future of fiscal stability. Considering that the 1992-93 fiscal year closed in red ink, Trout preferred to highlight "not just material but spiritual strength."

Long range planning and the upcoming Middle States Re-accreditation process were high on Trout's list of priorities at Fall Convocation last Thursday. He also urged, particularly to the freshmen, the importance of garnering lifelong friendships at WC.

Both Board of Visitors & Governors Chair Louis L. Goldstein '35 and SGA President Jamie Baker stressed the importance of student involvement during their remarks to the assembled crowd, which many think showed the largest student turnout in years.

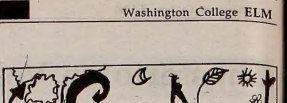
Goldstein, also Maryland's Comptroller, presented involvement as service in the context of President Bill Clinton's youth corps project.

"Expanding the breadth of your experience" was Baker's take on student activism. He encouraged his peers to "take advantage of our diversity" this year in light of the 25 percent minority freshman class, as well as the variety of opportunities available to the entire campus.

Convocation is the commencement of the fall, and accordingly, the honorary doctorate of fine arts was conferred upon J. Carter Brown, Director Emeritus of the National Gallery of Art. Involvement and service certainly run in Brown's family; this "closet Marylander"'s brother is Director of the National Aquarium in Baltimore, and Washington College President Norman James was Brown's first cousin.

As October, National Arts and Humanities Month, approaches, Brown, though retired from the Gallery, is busy overseeing the National Cultural Alliance, which amasses the contributions of over 23,000 organizations to the arts. The Ad Council has accepted the cause of education in the arts as a legitimate one for public service advertisement, and Brown foresees White House involvement next month and in the future.

Education, explained Brown, is as valid in the arts as in any field. He cited Howard Gardener's landmark work which outlined the seven kinds of intelligence. Not only verbal and math skills are part of "smartness," he said, but spatial, kinesthetic, musical, visual and inter- and intrapersonal skills are also valuable.



"We should ask not, 'how intelligent is this child,' but 'how is this child intelligent,'" Brown said, to widespread applause. The arts are a valid avenue toward learning and as part of learning, he continued. "What better way to feel and understand where other people are coming from[...] What better avenue to joy?" he asked.

Brown's accomplishments are widespread and far from over. After 23 years of running the National Gallery, including helping to bring its East Wing to fruition, Brown will now chair a new fine arts cable channel, the Ovation Network.

Finally, after 43 years as part of the Washington College community, Registrar Emeritus Ermon Foster led the academic procession for the last time on September 2. After his first year as a professor of education and psychology, Foster was given the mace and the title of Grand Marshall, "although I never was quite sure why."

Since that time, Foster has served many different presidents and deans, and over 6,000

Marine pollution has become an environmental issue of great interest and concern. One can no longer visit a beach and find it free of garbage. This man-made debris constitutes one of the greatest problems in our bodies of water. We all know how dangerous and ecologically devastating toxic spills are to our marine life, but we don't realize that we contribute to the ecological imbalance with our trash. Plastic is a material that is loved for its durability, light weight and strength, but it is a deadly enemy of our sea animals for the very same reasons we love it. Every year many animals die as a consequence of mindless littering of our oceans. Seabirds, seals, sea lions, otters, whales dolphins, porpoises, turtles and fish die due to plastics pollution.

Animals such as jellyfish can mistake plastic for food and choke on it or starve; they get tangled in those plastic rings that keep six-packs together, or on discarded fishing net, or nylon cords. There are many ways for our creatures to perish because of plastic.

As of 1989 the U.S. has a law prohibiting the disposal of garbage at sea. It is still legal to dispose of some materials but at least plastic is regulated. There are guidelines that regulate what can and can't be disposed according to the distance from the coast. Foreign vessels are restricted from disposing garbage in the 200 mile area that constitutes US economic territory.

There are ways you can help control this problem with garbage:

1. Don't dump your trash on beaches, riversides, lakes or at sea.
2. Whenever possible retrieve garbage you find on water shores or in the water.
3. Find out about beach cleanups in your area and stay involved.
4. Educate! Talk about the problem and tell people it exists. Recruit people to help save our planet.
5. Use biodegradable, readily recyclable or reusable materials when possible.
6. Cut loops from six-pack yokes before throwing them out.
7. Notify the Coast Guard if you see someone littering our waters.

The rumors you may have heard are true: MTV's lip synchronization game show Lip Service has scheduled an audition at Washington College.

The auditions will take place on October 7th at 8 p.m., and budding contestants should contact Dennis Berry for more information and registration.

Auditions will last 2-3 hours, and teams of three or five contestants must have a 3 minute lip synch routine with choreography. Teams of contestants must bring the song for their routines on cassette. A cassette player will be provided.

All teams will be videotaped for review by the show's producers. Approved teams will be contacted and booked to appear shortly thereafter. Chestertown Volunteer Fire Department has Ongoing Relationship with College

Marshall Norton
Staff Writer

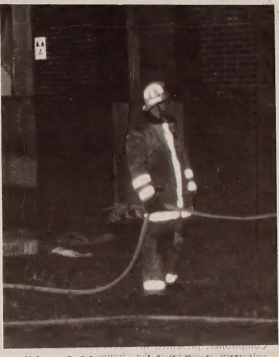
Sirens blaring in the middle of the night have caused consternation and anger for many a Washington College student.

These pranks really annoy most students and the Security Department, but they often don't cause concern at the local fire department. "As you get older, you learn to leave those things alone," said Fire Chief Richard White of the Kent County Volunteer Fire Department. According to Chief White, the Fire Department has never had to answer many false alarms on the Washington College campus.

For sixteen years, White has served on the firefighting force in Chestertown and has been Chief for three years. White heads a force of seventy-five, "six or seven" of whom are either Washington College students or alumni.

Last Tuesday classes began for a new group of recruits, including several from Washington College, who are perhaps trying to realize aspirations dreamt at a young age.

To become a firefighter, the recruits must complete the rigorous 117-hour Firefighting 1 course. The course's three-hour Wednesday night sessions are sponsored by the University of Maryland's Fire Instructor's Institute. Upon completion of that course they may elect to continue with Firefighting 2.



Even with all this classroom instruction, the new recruits must log 24 hours of additional training at the station in Chestertown. The training schedule is entirely up to the volunteer, and there are no restrictions on the amount of time taken. Many of these hours are spent riding with other firefighters as they respond to calls.

"The volunteers from Washington College have always made a great contribution to the force," offered Chief White, "especially in the afternoons when [other volunteers] are working in the day time. The college students can come in during the afternoon when they have a break from classes."

Senior Steve Brown is one of the new recruits this year. "I believe that this will be a very gratifying experience," he said. What interests him in fighting fires? "I like to do things that involve a certain amount of skill-not just a skill that you already have, but one that takes time to learn. And it'll be fun, too."

Paul Mullin has been a volunteer at the Fire Department for the past four years. "When you first start out, a lot of your time is spent sitting around at the station waiting for things to happen." Now, however, Mullin responds to an average of three to five calls a week. "This is something that has always interested me, but I never had the time or ambition for it in high school."

Many young people dream of being an astronaut, a ballerina or a firefighter, but few get the chance to achieve their goal. For Mullin "Being able to do stuff that most people don't have the guts to do is what I enjoy the most."

Mideastern Leaders Unfurl Plans for New Palestinian Autonomy

Paul Briggs
Staff Writer

Consider the irony. One U.S. administration after another has tried to negotiate an end to the Mideast crisis, with varying degrees of failure. The one who made the most progress was probably Jimmy Carter, who negotiated the Camp David Accords between Menachem Begin of Israel and Anwar Sadat of Egypt. Unfortunately, Sadat was later assassinated, which would not seem to bode well for future Mideast peace negotiations.

Recently, however, the Israeli government and the Palestine Liberation Organization have sat down and worked out a secret agreement which brings the whole Palestinian issue closer to a peaceful solution than it has ever been- and they did it all without any help from us.

The agreement calls for an Israeli withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and the West Bank city of Jericho within six months. These locales will be placed under the authority of a Palestinian government headed by Yasir Arafat, pending elections to be held in nine months. The agreement also calls for another agreement within a few years to incorporate the rest of the West Bank, except for Israeli military facilities and Jewish settlements. The plan amounts to an experiment in Palestinian self-rule. In exchange, the PLO will agree to cease all violence against the state of Israel.

Self-rule and independence are two different things. The Palestinian government will handle things like education, road maintenance, health care, etc. Law enforcement will be handled by a joint Israeli-Palestinian patrol of the region. Some of those doing the patrolling, however, will be ex-PLO guerrillas. The full extent of self-rule- whether there will be a Palestinian seat at the U.N., or a Palestinian unit of currency, or any of the other trappings of nationhood- has yet to be determined. It is doubtful, however, that a Palestinian standing army will be permitted.

Incredible as it may seem, there appears to be much less resistance to this plan among the PLO than there is among Israelis. Most of what resistance there is centers around the fact that the plan does not immediately call for Palestinian autonomy in all the occupied territories. This may be due to an awareness among the more radical Palestinians that after forty years of fighting, they are still going nowhere fast.

Resistance to the plan among hard-line Israelis stems partly from religious claims to the land in question. Opposition to the plan is especially strong among those Israelis who, invited by former Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, migrated to Jewish settlements in the West Bank in the hopes that it would one day officially become part of Israel.

Many other more moderate Israelis do have legitimate concerns about the security of Israel under the plan. Considering Arafat's current reasonableness, it is easy for Americans to forget that he was one of Israel's most implacable enemies for most of his career. It was only in 1988 that he publicly renounced terrorism and recognized Israel.

Even if the PLO does renounce violence, individual Palestinians may not. In particular, the military bases and settlements are likely to be flashpoints. If a Palestinian should commit a crime in Israel, or against an Israeli, and then flee to, say, the Gaza Strip, would he be extradited, or stand trial in Gaza? There is a strong possibility that ex-PLO guerrillas will wind up pursuing their former comrades-in-arms for doing exactly what they themselves used to do. It is largely because of questions like these that the experiment in Palestinian self-rule is being confined to the Gaza Strip and Jericho for the time being.

The experiment is not without it's risks. If, within the next few years, it should prove impossible for a Palestinian government to coexist peacefully with Israel, it will pose a serious dilemma. Israel will then be unable to recapture the territory without an enormous increase in violence, or give up the rest of the West Bank without endangering its security. It might become necessary to impose a blockade on the self-governing region.

The Palestinians also have a considerable stake in the success of the plan. A state or territory consisting only of the Gaza Strip and Jericho wouldn't really be a viable political entity, especially if Israel should impose an economic blockade. In other words, the very risks inherent in the plan will ensure that both sides do their best to make sure it succeeds.

But haven't we heard all this before? How many failed rounds of Middle East peace negotiations have there been over the years? Why should this be any different?

As stated at the beginning of this piece, this time talks were carried out in secret, without help from the U.S. or any other third party. While the U.S. has played an important role in the region in the past, one must ask why the United States should once have been involved in the talks to begin with. We, after all, had very little to gain by it, other than some oil and a lower risk of terrorism. And weren't the Israeli and Palestinian negotiators full-grown adults, capable of negotiating without superpowers holding their hands?

There is, in fact, a purpose to third party mediation. When one is negotiating with a badly hated adversary, a third party may propose compromises which both sides agree would be sensible, but which neither side (keeping their constituencies in mind) would wish to be seen proposing. The fact that both Rabin's government and Arafat feel comfortable proposing compromises suggests an increase in moderation on both sides. That, in itself, is reason for hope.

SGA Elections

Dorm Senators Elected Wednesday

John K. Phoebus
News Editor

The Student Government Association will hold Senate elections next Wednesday, September 14, in the Casey Academic Center. Petitions are available in the Office of Student Affairs (2nd floor CAC) and are due there Tuesday.

The Senate is the representative body of the SGA. Each dormitory and off campus residents have representatives which meet as the SGA every Tuesday at 9 p.m. Senators represent from 12-45 undergraduates each. Along with senators, class presidents serve as voting members of the SGA. Freshman class officer elections will be held the following week.

"The SGA supports student interests, student activities and represents the student body in all aspects of the college," said SGA President Jamie Baker. The SGA also plans many social activities and funds over 50 campus organizations. Senators may serve on committees within in the SGA which address various functions of the student government. Pertinent issues are addressed each week which often stem from the input of senators and their constituents.

SGA senators can join various committees within the senate. Committees deal with activities such as budgeting funds, public relations, planning social events, and various ad hoc issues before the SGA.

SGA Vice president Max Walton feels interested students should become involved for the same reason he did: "It gives the opportunity to affect the academic and social life of the campus and shape it the way you want. [The SGA is interested] in the person who wouldn't normally run for office, but is willing to devote their time and effort." The SGA at Washington College is powerful and well respected.

By becoming a member of the SGA one can become involved in the decisions regarding issues which have lasting and meaningful effect on the Washington College community. Petitions require fifteen signatures and are due next Tuesday at noon.

Republicans Not Fascist, just Misunderstood

Tara Kidwell
Distribution Manager

How far right do you go before you hit fascist? As a student on this campus I find myself questioning how why I am labeled as fascist merely because I say that I am Republican. Maybe I hang out with a liberal faction of people who do not know I am conservative? It is almost like coming out of the closet; I suppose we all have a closet to come out of then.

This leads me to question why people link certain stereotypes to certain ideals. Republican does not equal Rush Limbaugh. What does it mean to say that one is a Republican? There are those who would say that it means Ancienne Régime, out moded ideas which repress, or even fascist. I would have to say that these words label me and any other conservative anywhere. We all know that Kirkegaard said to label me is to negate me. To stereotype is to profess ignorance which in my volume of conservative laws is not a conservative trait. How people choose to mask their own motivations is a completely different subject than ignorance.

I will not bore you with what it is to be conservative, but I will say that everyone has their own views on everything regardless of where they take a political stance. I have been appraised of a new right-wing magazine on campus which contains articles and viewpoints that I would consider fascist propaganda. I would hope that those of you who read this new paper keep in mind that misinformation leads to ignorance and ignorance to problems. Remember as the laws of this country state ignorance is no excuse. I would also like to make a response to the article from last weeks ELM entitled Loose Cannon... Sue Huck, while entitled to her opinion should have used more tact and researched her arguments before circulating damning testimony about pornography. I would suggest that Ms. Huck take a course in Chaucer before condemning Dr. Deprospo's course Pornography a course which does not have any truly pornographic material contained within its bounds. Maybe even pick up a good old copy of Hamlet and reread all about matters of the "country". I have only one thing to say before closing "Tee Hee quod she and clapped the window tho"

Executive Summary of the Long Range Planning Committee's Preliminary Report

What follows is the text from the Executive Summary of the Long Range Planning Committee's preliminary report, released this week. This introduction outlines the objectives the committee recommends the college set as goals toward strengthening the institution over the next ten years. The complete report of the committee is available on closed reserve at the circulation desk of Miller Library. Copies have been sent to faculty, staff, and members of the Board of Visitors and Governors.

Executive Summary

During the past ten years, Washington College has emerged as a greatly strengthened institution. It has expanded its financial base, greatly enhanced its physical plant, increased the qualifications, diversity, and number of its students, and added several attractive academic and extracurricular programs.

The College remains strongly committed to its traditional mission of education in the liberal arts. In this endeavor, the College enjoys and seeks to build upon its great historical heritage. The nine "colonial colleges" have become research or comprehensive universities, although each retains a liberal arts college at its core. As the tenth existing college to be founded in America and the first to be founded after the Revolutionary War, Washington College is the oldest of the institutions classified as a liberal arts college.

Impetus for the founding of the College was provided by George Washington, and the College is proud to share with such institutions as the University of Leiden, Simon Bolivar University, the University of Virginia, and the University of Pennsylvania, the prestigious distinction of having been started by one of the founding fathers of the country. Indeed, George Washington contributed to the founding of the College a substantial sum of money, his name, and his service on the Board of Visitors and Governors. The founding president of the College, William Smith, was also an illustrious colonial. He was the provost of the University of Pennsylvania before being assigned as rector of the Episcopal parish in Chestertown, and he founded St. John's College after he founded Washington College.

The College was the first of the ten oldest colleges in the country to become coeducational (in 1891). This exemplifies the pioneering spirit of the College and its long-standing commitment to equality of opportunity.

Three Challenges

Balance. The College subscribes to the view enunciated in one of the classic defenses of the liberal arts, Newman's The Idea of a University, that the absence in a college of primary fields of pure knowledge leads to distortion of all knowledge transmitted in that institution. The faculty of Washington College represent 21 formal fields of study. This is minimum coverage of the liberal arts and sciences, and one of the smallest arrays of any college of our type. In approximately half of those fields, however, our size and resources limit the College to very small numbers of faculty. Consequently, those academic programs teeter on the edge of viability. In order to achieve a proper balance and strength in those programs and in the College as a whole, we need to expand the staffing and the reach of those programs.

Connection. It is connection to life, the world, and the great problems of the past and present that makes lessons and students come alive, and that gives value on learning. The College offers traditional curricula based on adequate physical and bibliographic resources. But we should give greater effort to articulating why these courses should be studied, why they are designed as they are, what emphases we employ to achieve particular purposes, whether student experience in them is interesting, and whether the learning is valuable in later life. We should focus also on encouraging and providing for the spirit of personal investigation that so energizes both students and faculty. We believe that the study of these issues will lead to continual reform of our curricula and enrichment of student learning at the College.

Community. Ernest Boyer, head of the Carnegie Commission, attaches highest priority to the creation of community in institutions of higher education. We are a residential college strongly committed to the integration of living and learning. But we believe that we have a great way to go and a great opportunity for national distinction in building a strong learning community out of increasingly diverse threads. We must devise structures and mechanisms that encourage more productive, civilized, and responsible living on our campus, and stronger commitments to service, personal integrity, and excellence.

A Strategy for the Future

The College sees two strongly complementary emphases that together comprise a strategy for addressing our three challenges. These are:

- growth in the size of the College
- personal involvement in learning

Growth. Washington College ranks in the 10th percentile in size and the 40th percentile in overall quality among coeducational national liberal arts colleges (140 colleges of whom 120 are coeducational). Only three of the 60 coeducational national liberal arts colleges ranked in the top half of the U.S. News and World Report survey have enrollments smaller than ours, and their endowment resources are two or three times ours. The College is hard pressed to compete under these circumstances. Growth by 300 students would move the College from the 10th percentile in size to the 35th percentile. This would enable program growth, additions of selected new programs, and economies of scale sufficient to make the College more competitive across the full spectrum of its programs.

Involvement. It is elementary that knowledge requires a knower. Attempts to transmit knowledge that do not respect and provide for the personal dimension are meaningless and superficial. Washington College has long prided itself on its personal character. We wish to build upon and amplify that strength. We wish especially to do this in increasing the service, quality, and attractiveness of the undersubscribed programs of the College, but attention to this principle of quality will strengthen all of our programs. In programmatic terms, emphasis on involvement means that programs will expand student opportunities for academic year and summer research, internship experiences, off-campus and foreign study, hands-on experience, contact with original sources, and intensive interactions with living/learning communities.

Goals of the Plan

We have identified a number of general goals that logically connect to the characteristics and potentialities of the College:

- to strengthen all the academic programs by making them more accessible, attractive, lean, connected to contexts, and infused with opportunities for active learning, investigation, and formation of learning communities.
- to increase the flow of students through our underutilized major programs.
- to improve the physical and bibliographic resources for learning.
- to enhance the residential experience of Washington College students and to relate residential life more coherently to academic life.
- to increase the number, diversity, and qualifications of our matriculants.
- to decrease the rate of attrition of our students.
- to improve the articulation of the value of our educational experiences.

Objectives and Concomitants of the Plan

We have identified several objectives and concomitants of the implementation of this plan over the coming decade:

- to increase the student body by 300 students.
- to increase the faculty by at least 20 positions.
- to increase the staff by about 30 positions.
- to increase the endowment fund of the College by at least $50 million.
- to increase the selectivity of our admissions so as to replace the least qualified quarter of the entering class with those at the middle of our spectrum.
- to reduce the annual net attrition of students from 15% to 12% or less.
- to increase the percentage of our graduates from 6% to at least 25% who have had a full-time off-campus study experience of at least one semester.
- to increase the percentage of our graduates who carry on independent study or internship projects for academic credit.
- to strengthen the residential life program by adding five professional staff.
- to build dormitory and dining space for 225 additional students and to renovate the dormitories that have not recently been renovated.
- to build a new student center.
- to build, add to, or renovate five major academic buildings.
- to augment budgets supporting faculty professional activities by at least $300,000 annually.
- to increase the library percentage of Educational and General expenditures from four to five percent.
- to induce 100% of the students, faculty, and staff to make effective use of networked computing.

Conclusions

The proposed plan relies on expansion at 3% per year of our number of matriculants as the engine of change. Our admissions situation, however, requires additional resources beyond those currently available in order to initiate the plan. The College will have to invest a total of $150,000 during the first two years for a thoroughgoing consultation on admissions, image, and marketing. We will also have to monitor our performance in admissions and financial aid very closely and be ready to provide necessary reinforcements quickly. The plan also will require for its success a significant general fund campaign. If the enrollment targets are met, the current fund budget will move rapidly into a surplus that will accelerate through the duration of the plan.

The presidency of Daniel Gibson at Washington College focused on growth of the College in the new era following World War II and the opening of the Chesapeake Bay Bridge. Joseph McLain was clearly a builder of the faculty, even as the College moved into financial difficulty in the later years of his presidency. Douglass Cater resolved the financial problems of that era and made impressive improvements in the physical plant of the College. The time is right in the era of the presidency of Charles Trout to invest substantially in the academic program of the College. This investment is appropriate because it has been long awaited, it is visibly missing, and the College needs it to be competitive. The foundation and the structures of a superb college are here, and the faculty leadership to flesh out and expand the academic program is evident.

We now ask those who were enabled and enriched by the College to come to its aid. We ask you to make a further investment in its future and in your own future. Washington College is forever, and each of us continues to be lit by its light.

And she's been in control of every move, perhaps even when Sean Penn, her ex-husband, was allegedly beating her up. She was the victim then — not of scandalous accusations but of scandalous abuse. And she came out of it all, if not looking good, at least being looked at.

Jackson, on the other hand, is not a good PR man for himself. He's been on the music scene for 30 years now, but he may be more famous for altering his physical appearance and keeping a pet chimp named Bubbles than for any single song. Like Madonna, his image is as widespread as his name, but he has much less control over it. In the same Oprah interview, he claimed he had no idea until recently that people thought he was batshit.

While Madonna is the symbol of control — sexual, monetary, and media — Jackson is the symbol of reclusion. He only looks happy in his videos and with children. His fantasy movie role is Peter Pan. He has an amusement park and a movie theatre on his ranch, Neverland. He not only doesn't want to grow up, he wants to be the proverbial Toys 'R' Us Kid. And most of America, until recently, was willing to let him buy the toys he didn't have time to play with as a child, and to share them with other kids.

Now, as Jackson slips in the public eye from man-child to child-handler, his accuser is rising into the public eye to give physical presence to a nameless symbol America has feared for the last twenty years — the child who grows up too fast.

Whether or not Michael's guilt or innocence is ever resolved, his 13-year-old antagonist will stand for all the children who shouldn't be old enough to know the word fellatio. Some routinely engage in it with other children they're "going with." Some are victims of incest or other sexual abuse. Most are just more media-ready than their — our — parents are willing to admit.

If the child is solely a victim of Jackson, it is a crying shame that he had to be exposed to sex as an unwilling participant. If the child solely a victim of the will of one or both of his parents, the same is true.

But as long as Americans demand a scandal, someone will produce it, whether it's a misguided celebrity who's lost touch with reality, a greedy leech of an easy target, or Madonna. Let's just hope that they pick on someone their own size. Not children, no matter what their age.

quality to spare and can share some with another store. Anyway, one of these Wal-Mart stores that I have always read about, and for some strange reason I thought had something had to do with H. Ross Perot, came to my town, and it was just amazing. It was like Smiley's on acid, if you will.

A friend and thrifty consumer alerted me to the fact that one of these stores had arrived, located on the outskirts of town, the area that I imagined was where recluses would have lived or where the whole house and hooch parlor would've been located in less savory times. My friend told me that he was mystified at the fact that whenever he was driving on the highway he could see this parking lot filled up with cars at all hours. We were intrigued. The only places we knew that were open all night was the aforementioned 7-11 and Denny's and so we drove out there at around one or two in the morning.

What I saw there, the sense of awe and wonder that I felt, id difficult to put into words. I would compare it to what Columbus must have felt when gazing upon the New World (I'm talking about when he was struck with the enormity of his amazing discovery and not those other thoughts, which must have been along the lines of "Boy o' boy, how can I exterminate all the indigenous population and culture and still get a holiday named after me in the country that is home to Wal-Mart" (I'm paraphrasing, of course, and he would've said it in Spanish of Portuguese, I can never remember.)).

Mixed with the feeling of disbelief was an ineffable eeriness. Many cars were in the parking lot but no where near maximum capacity, this must be an off-hour we thought, the real crowd probably doesn't show until the bars close. The shopping carts were strewn all over the lot, giving the impression that a tornado had just hit. Or perhaps, it was the place that we all dreamed about, the lot where shopping carts go to die. There was also a man sitting outside, in the dark, guarding the display lawn furniture, guarding from what I do not know. You have to wonder what reformatory he was out of and how did he get to stay past lock-out.

Inside was more than anyone can hope for in a store. It sold everything, satisfied every need. If you just had to have an outboard motor now or the midnight run for underwear, Wal-Mart is you place. Need a toy for your kid or just some new plates. Cosmetics. Compact Discs. Rugs. I remember stories my grandfather used to tell me about nights when he was my age and he would wake up and have a mighty strong hankering for a throw rug but there was nothing that he could do about it. He would have to lay in bed and sweat it out until morning. It is a comforting notion, knowing that when I go to bed and I wake up screaming in need of a filing cabinet or a new, but not too high quality of suit, I will not be left wanting. Perhaps, even more important is the security that I am afforded, that if I ever have children, they will be able to sleep soundly and wake me up in the middle of the night and demand a pet salamander. And I will be able to look down at him, muss my little Fidel's hair and say "What color?"

That's all in the future and sure, my friend and I didn't buy anything and it seemed like the majority of the people in the store were teenagers getting rowdy in the toy section, but somewhere, maybe on aisle twelve where all of the VCR's are, there is a principle involved. Mrs. D's may be shut down but you can't take away my Wal-Mart. And that is what America is, through and through. You can print E Pluribus Unum and In God We Trust on all of the money you want but it will never mean as much as Open Twenty-Four Hours A Day, Seven Days A Week (Including Weekends and Holidays). Drive Safely.

Washington College Presents its Traveling Art Exhibit of the Year

Alex Baez
A & E Editor

This collection of weavings from the Middle East, North Africa, North America, and Central Asia will be the only exhibit presented by Washington College's Art Exhibits Committee this year, and it is a suitably lavish display. The exhibit includes flat woven works from pastoral, semi-nomadic, and village peoples whose traditional way of life is now threatened by array of interrelated modern pressures. The exhibit, while featuring a disappearing art form, also spotlights a textile form that has historically received scant attention compared that given pile textiles. The works here are also of special interest because flat weaves, unlike pile weaves, are designed and produced almost exclusively by women.

It is useful to have some familiarity with the history, construction, and purposes of both pile and flat weavings before studying the pieces Pile-woven pieces have been the prized textile for Westerners as long as trade with the East has taken place. Early Western infatuation with pile weaves is attested to in the works of such 17th-century painters as Vermeer, who depicted them in lush constrast to simple domestic scenes. Certainly, flat weaves were often made to serve more humble and utilitarian purposes than those filled by pile works, and flat weaves may thus have been less attractive to Western collectors. However, when interest in Caucasian rugs increased in the late twentieth century, the Western market inevitably moved into flat weaves. This Western market increased dramatically in the 1960's and 70's, although the best flat weaves have never been considered as valuable as pile rugs.

Structurally, the pile woven textile has fibers that stand up, knotted onto the warp and woof. The pile rug was typically designed by men for factory production, and often executed by little girls because their small fingers were better fit to tie the small knots necessary. On the other hand, flat weaves consist entirely of the interweaving of warp and woof and were made by individual women on portable looms. Often, insensitive to the important distinctions between pile and flat weaves, collectors make the mistake of treating them interchangeably. Compared to pile rugs, flat weaves are delicate and are inappropriate to lay on trafficked floors, where they may begin to disintegrate.

The representative sample of flat weaves in this exhibit helps illustrate the purposes for which flat weaves were made. The exhibit includes both rugs and other textile items. The rugs, called kilims, take the form of tent rugs, prayer rugs, offering rugs and tent dividers. Other forms of the flat weave include saddle and food bags, animal trappings, and traditional garments. For people who moved regularly, flat weaves were practical because they could be made on small, portable looms, and the weaves themselves were lighter and less cumbersome than pile rugs. The best and most elaborate work was invariably produced for women's dowries.

None of the weaves' designs, which are often complex, were planned in any formal way; this makes their disciplined intricacy and individuality all the more remarkable. The patterns display both consistency and occasional variation. These variations may be attributed partially to the conditions in which a textile was made. The work would be carried on over a series of moves from one campsite to another, and occasionally, a viewer can see where one session of weaving broke off and where a new one began. This is signaled by a sudden break in fabric color or design.

Parts of the designs are often based on the forms of animals or plants. Bat-and insect-like figures and stylized forms of trees hide amid geometrical or semi-geometrical designs. The stylized natural forms became increasingly abstracted as tribal structures broke down from one generation to the next; as the women weavers began to forget what the designs meant, these designs became viewed, and reproduced, as though mere abstractions.

Traditionally, vegetable dyes determined the colors in these textiles. Although somewhat limited, the palettes provided by vegetable matter were capable of producing rich designs, and works that are wholly vegetable-dyed exhibit purity and harmony of color. However, at the end of the 19th century, commercial analine dyes appeared for the first time, altering and arguably reducing the quality of the work. Some of the chemical dyes faded and were bad for the wool. Aside from these telltale clues, a person who is familiar with textiles can easily discern a commercial dye in a piece; the color appears somehow jarring and out of place.

Historically, flat woven textiles have assumed a position secondary to pile weavings in the international eye. This rich exhibit confirms that flat weaves are also infinitely worthy of collection, admiration, and study.

Textiles from Vanishing Cultures, is on display at the Gibson Fine Arts Center through October 13, Thursdays through Sundays from one to five p..m..

Manhattan Murder Mystery

Melissa Moorehead
Staff Writer

Unless you've been marooned on some tropical island, you've heard about the Woody Allen scandal. We were all shocked and horrified to find out that Woody Allen had an affair with his 18-year-old adopted daughter. But so what? Should this really have any effect on how we view him or his works? I think not. In fact, I would say that with his new movie, Manhattan Murder Mystery, Woody Allen has put the events of last year behind him.

For one thing, he has replaced long time leading lady Mia Farrow with old chum Diane Keaton. The choice of Keaton is particularly important considering that Allen and Keaton have not worked together since the '70s. Remember Annie Hall? Interestingly enough, Allen explained in a Rolling Stone interview that he had originally intended Annie Hall to be a murder mystery. So he picked up where he left off, right? Not exactly; it is about 15 years later, but Allen and Keaton still have great chemistry on screen as the characters, the "Liptons".

Larry and Carol's mundane life is interrupted when newly met neighbor, Mrs. House, dies of a heart attack. Did I mention that Mrs. House appeared to be in perfect health and that she had a stairmaster in her bedroom? Carol becomes suspicious when Mr. House seems a little too cheerful the day after his wife's demise. Her suspicions are confirmed when she finds an urn hidden in the kitchen. You see, Mrs. House was supposed to be buried, not cremated. "It's harder to find out the cause of death that way," explains writer friend Ted, played by Alan Alda. Of Carol and Ted go, playing amateur detectives trying to find evidence that Mr. House murdered his wife. Larry thinks the whole thing is ludicrous and tells Carol to save some of her craziness for menopause. Feeling a little dejected, Carol spends more and more time with Ted, who is recently divorced and very attracted to Carol. Meanwhile lonely Larry is tempted by Marcia, played buy vampish Anjelica Houston. So we have the mixed, complicated relationships that are so characteristic of Allen's movies. This time things are different: Carol and Larry might be tempted to cheat, but...

Here I leave you to discover the rest of this developing plot. I assure you, the story won't leave you disappointed. Keep in mind, if we knew half of the life stories behind some of our favorite authors and poets, we would probably never read them again. Allen is truly a talented writer, director and star. To wrap up this movie review, I will leave you with this last judgement call: it is absolutely no mystery why this movie is a hit!

Smashing Pumpkins' "Siamese Dream Is Simply Dreamy

Rachel Demma
Staff Writer

Smashing Pumpkins is one of the more recent bands to blow out of the Windy City, but don't be too quick to throw them in with other Chicago-based bands like Big Black, Ministry and Jesus Lizard. All are fine producers of noise, but Smashing Pumpkins is not of these other bands' ilk. Having been introduced two years ago with their debut album "Gish," and sporadically popping up again with a single and an EP, the band is once more in the limelight after touring with the Red Hot Chili Peppers and Pearl Jam and releasing their latest album, "Siamese Dream."

The currently released single, "Disarm," is but a small taste of all that this album delivers. Each song on "Siamese Dream" is its own little self-contained circular maze. Billy Corgan's voice and lyrics twist through emotional, brooding melodies, climb upwards to exhilirating releases of sound, and then downshift once more to subdued crooning over James Iha's guitar. Songs such as "Spaceboy" and "Lana" are so lulling at first that they almost mislead until they rise into jarring, yet still somehow melodic, cacaphonies.

"Cherub Rock," the first single released off the album, is met, if not surpassed, by "Mayonnaise" in its grating tunefulness and relentless bass. "Mayonnaise," like one or two other songs on the album, hearkens back to the early Dinosaur Jr. singles with its wistful, winding melody over the top of heavy, no-nonsense guitars.

"Siamese Dream" has it all. Bittersweet and haunting melodies are intertwined with plenty of aggressive and gritty guitar playing. Smashing Pumpkins weaves these two elements together so artfully that one is never quite sure where the songs are leading—but you can be sure they'll get you there.

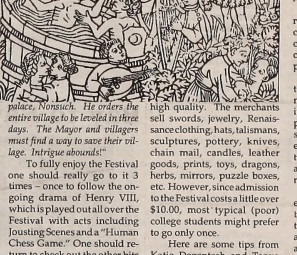
Come Ye All!

Maryland's Renaissance Festival:



Tanya Allen
Staff Writer

Sick of living in 1993? Feel a need to get off campus? Interested in peering unabashedly at men in tights and women whose bosoms are purposefully close to falling out of their peasant blouses? Then pick a weekend day any time between now and October 17 and check out the Maryland Renaissance Festival!

The Festival is one of several held across the country each summer in places such as New York and California. The Maryland Festival grounds are set up as "the village of Revel Grove," where "His lordship, Mayor Bribeworthy has declared a festival to honor the visit of His Most Glorious Majesty, Henry VIII, King of England, who this day tours with his royal court. Four spectacular Jousts will be performed by Revel Grove's new Jousting Troupe, Heroes and Villains.

The year is 1537. " One year ago, the King married his third wife, Lady Jane Seymour. Now the entire realm awaits the imminent birth of the Royal Heir. The Queen is fond of this village, and believes a visit would bring good luck to her baby.

But, lo! Baron Thomas Cromwell has other plans for the town. The powerful courtier has decided that Revel Grove would be the perfect site for the King's new palace, Nonsuch. He orders the entire village to be leveled in three days. The Mayor and villagers must find a way to save their village. Intrigue abounds!"

To fully enjoy the Festival one should really go to it 3 times – once to follow the ongoing drama of Henry VIII, which is played out all over the Festival with acts including Jousting Scenes and a "Human Chess Game." One should return to check out the other bits of musical and dramatic entertainment. Especially recommended are "Shakespeare's Skum," which performs comic skits based on the plays of Shakespeare; "Broon," a particularly hilarious juggling comedian; and the "Bawdy Balladeers," who sing about men and wine. Finally, one can go to shop. Most of the merchandise is one-of-a-kind and of high quality. The merchants sell swords, jewelry, Renaissance clothing, hats, talismans, sculptures, pottery, knives, chain mail, candles, leather goods, prints, toys, dragons, herbs, mirrors, puzzle boxes, etc. However, since admission to the Festival costs a little over $10.00, most typical (poor) college students might prefer to go only once.

Here are some tips from Katie Degentesh and Tanya Allen for spending a good day at the Festival: rainy day is actually better than going on a sunny day—fewer people go to the Festival when it's wet, and as Katie says, "...the fake forest feels safer when it rains." "Renaissance Festival." Turn right and within a few minutes you'll be in a different country and a different time period!

New Party Rules

In a meeting with the Resident Assistants on Wednesday, September 8, Dennis Berry, Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation, along with the Deans of Student Affairs, unveiled the new procedure for registering parties on campus.

The impetus behind this new policy change was to encourage more parties to be officially registered so as to enable college officials to assist in the planning and security at parties.

The RAs were inititally targeted to receive this information because all parties held in dormitories must be approved by them. Fraternity and sorority leaders as well as leaders of other college organizations will also meet with Berry and the Deans regarding the registration of parties.

Parties which are registered enable the college to better plan the security arrangements for the evening. Student liability also decreases if the college is aware of social plans than if parties are not registered.

Jerry Roderick, Director of Campus Security, informed the RAs that extra security guards would be provided on weekends and would assist in the control of these events. However, if Security does not know about a party, it is more difficult for them to plan the necessary man-power for the evening. Roderick also emphasized that students should work with, not against, Security as they are likely to be more understanding than the local police.

Washington College prohibits open containers of alcohol from being taken outside of buildings. Chestertown has an open container law prohibiting this as well. Kegs or multi-gallon containers of alcohol are also not permitted on campus. Hard alcohol (beverages other than beer or wine) cannot be served at parties. It has been the opinion of the school that the mixing of beer and hard alcohol, when served at parties in the past, has had detrimental effects on the well-being of students.

The new policy on registering parties asks the sponsor of the party to take on a more active role in coordinating all aspects of the party planning. The sponsor must personally gather the approval of the appropriate Resident Assistant and a Security officer as well as meeting with the Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation to discuss the party.

Registered parties must provide non alcoholic beverages and food in addition to any beer and wine that is to be served. A suitable system of age identification should also be in effect. The sponsor of the event must be present during the extent of the evening's activities. This is to better facilitate communication between security guards who will help to control the event. The Resident Assistant must also agree to be present during the party, and therefore has the right to deny approval to any group.

Non Washington College "guests' must register with the monitor on duty. The monitor, hired through the Campus Security Office, will register guests as individuals enter the event.

Security reports will be closely examined by Berry and the Deans. If reports are unsatisfactory, they will be reviewed with the party sponsor.

Party registration forms are available from the Office of Student Activities and Campus Recreation, located in the basement of Hodson Hall (under the Dining Hall). The forms must be submitted at least one week prior to the anticipated event. After approval by Berry, the RA(s) and Security, services of needed departments may then be arranged.

States Berry in a Thursday letter to the RAs, "I am confidant that these "changes' are best described as re-stating existing College policy with clear, understandable parameters for [the RAs]. These procedures will also better serve the clubs and organizations that want to offer social functions with the College's established guidelines." He encourages anyone interested in more specific detail regarding registration to feel free to stop by his offices to discuss these details.

This policy change does not drastically change anything that was not already in place last semester. Rather it is a more clear assertion of the College's alcohol/party policy designed to encourage the registration of parties for the benefit of the entire college community.

White Nights

White Nights, starring Mikhail Baryshnikov and Gregory Hines, tells the story of a Soviet ballet dancer, played by Baryshnikov, who attempts to defect to the West. While flying across Siberia, the dancer's plane unexpectedly is forced to land and the dancer is recaptured by Soviet agents. The agents force him to return to Moscow and appoint a defected American dancer, played by Hines, to keep tabs on Baryshnikov because of the American's proven preference for the Soviet dance world. While Hines pursues his mission, the two dancers work out in the studio together and choreograph works. It is these sequences that make the movie most memorable, and it is through these that much of the story unfolds.

Making History

It's kind of hard to care about Washington's first Centennial Conference games this weekend, isn't it?

You're probably tired of reading about it, and I don't blame you because I'm tired of writing about it (I just don't have anything else to write about since the season hasn't yet gotten under way).

It's not as if anybody really cares if dinky Washington College changes athletic conferences. The only people that might care are the 840 students and their parents, but most of them probably still don't know about the change.

It's not like we're Penn State getting hooked up with Indiana, Michingan and Illinois in the Big Ten, or Florida State leaving the Southeastern Conference in favor of North Carolina and Duke in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

We're only little old Washington College—a school which is only known for a good lacrosse team, a strong writing program, and a celebration we have at the beginning of May.

Sports Commentary

Who really cares if we change conferences, especially when we're joining schools the average person would not recognize by name?

Honestly, can you name all eleven teams in the conference along with their hometowns?

Do you even know Muhlenberg's mascot?

How about Haverford or Bryn Mawr?

And we all know the Dickinson Red Devils are nationally known for their powerful athletic teams.

Will the new Centennial Conference be seen on ESPN? No.

Will it get substantially more coverage than the MAC? Probably not.

Will it have an effect on anyone outside Maryland and Pennsylvania? Nope.

But was the move significant?

YESSSSSSSSS!!!!!!!

We have now entered a league where the schools may not be known for their athletic talent but are extremely prestigious for their academic attributes.

Ask anyone in academic circles anywhere in the country where Dickinson, Johns Hopkins or Swarthmore are, and people will start to listen.

Begin discussing Gettysburg, Franklin & Marshall or Western Maryland, and ears open.

Bryn Mawr, Haverford, Muhlenberg and Ursinus aren't shabby either.

Washington has associated itself with the elite, and even though it may seem limited to athletics, it isn't.

Like it or not, athletics attract attention to a school, and association with programs like the Centennial Conference boasts, only bolsters Washington's reputation.

While the move wasn't tough for the school to make because of all of the advantages I've just mentioned, the switch was also significant, as it ended an era in Washington athletics while it began a new one.

The Middle Atlantic Conference was founded in 1912 and Washington joined in 1946. Washington has been an active member since the conference reorganized in 1958.

For 46 years, Shoremen teams have competed in the MAC and those teams are now a part of history.

And whether you think about it or not, Washington is a college steeped in tradition—a 211-year tradition. At Washington, it is definitely a big deal to make a change of such a magnitude, as a lot of things haven't changed in Chestertown in a long time (take a walk around town and you'll see what I mean).

This weekend, however, Washington College will be making history as Shoremen teams take on Centennial opponents at Muhlenberg, Haverford and here at home.

Come out and be a part of history when the Sho'women field hockey team hosts Gettysburg at 1 p.m. tomorrow.

While it won't be Penn State's first football game in the Big Ten, it promises to be special in its own sort of way.

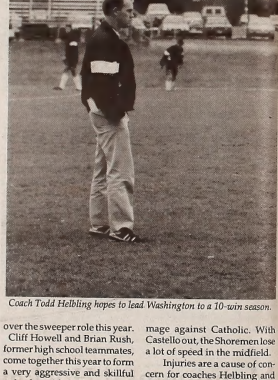
Washington College Soccer: Nineteen Games To Glory

Paul Kenny
Staff Writer

The Washington College soccer program is still in the rebuilding stages with coach Todd Helbling intent on restoring it to its former glory.

According to coach Helbling the number one goal is to make improvements over last season, which saw the Shoremen go 5-12-2. However, the team has reason to be positive going into this season as they ended last year with a 4-2-1 surge over the last seven games.



"I'm very optimistic," head coach Todd Helbling said. "We're still a very young team, but we're going to get better and better as the season progresses."

If you were to take a glance at the '93 roster, you would clearly see that the Shoremen are young compared to their opponents.

Most programs on average would have a handful of juniors and seniors returning with three or four seasons of experience playing together.

In contrast, W.C. has one senior and one junior returning although, there is a strong core of ten sophomores of whom most were starters last season also returning.

There are nine incoming freshmen recruits who all have potential. This years team is not lacking in talent but in experience playing together as a unit.

Coach Todd Helbling hopes to lead Washington to a 10-win season.

"We still have a long way to go yet." --coach Todd Helbling

Senior co-captain Rory Conway, who is in his second season for the Shoremen, will take charge of the field up front in the forward position. Conway was the teams top scorer last year with a seven-goal tally for the season.

Playing alongside Conway will be freshmen Andrew King and Marc Tayloroson. King, who also adds some strength in the air for the Shoremen offense, scored in the first of two 1-1 ties against Catholic in a pre-season scrimmage.

At the other end of the field the Shoremen are looking to be stsong where junior co-captain and goalkeeper Greg Miller will direct a strong defense consisting of four returning sophomores.

Talented midfielder Chip Helm will move back to take over the sweeper role this year.

Cliff Howell and Brian Rush, former high school teammates, come together this year to form a very aggressive and skillful pair of outside backs.

Geoff Bley should be a force in the middle of the defense at stopper.

Freshmen Brian Dorst and Will Merriken will also play defensive roles this year, with sophomore Chris Downs as the reserve goalkeeper.

Sophomore transfer Shawn McMahon will team up with fellow sophomores Yoseph Bekele and Tommy Hiebler to form a talented and smart midfield unit.

They will be backed up by freshmen Jon Kostyal, Jolyon Bowman, Greg Ferri, Jason McDade and sophomores Matt Murray and John Moreland.

Unfortunatly, freshman midfielder Chris Castello will be unable to play for next few week due to a broken leg which he sustained in the first few minutes of a pre-season scrimmage against Catholic. With Castello out, the Shoremen lose a lot of speed in the midfield.

Injuries are a cause of concern for coaches Helbling and assistant coach Jack Shafer. Depth is a weakness for this years team, so as the season progresses and players become more injury-prone, the team will have to depend more and more on the support from the sideline.

An injury to any key player will hurt the teams' overall output.

The Shoremen opened their season last Saturday, September 4, with a 1-0 victory against Lebanon Valley, breaking a three-year home losing streak for the Shoremen.

Sophmore Brian Rush scored on an unassisted goal in the second half.

"We came out with a win against a weaker side, but the guy's did not play anything close to their potential," Helbling said. "We still have a long way to go yet."

Hopefully, this year's team will reach its potential, but only time can tell if they can improve on last years marks and attain their goal of a winning season.

Washington Volleyball Sets Up To Kill Conference Foes

Erika K. Ford
Staff Writer

The Washington College volleyball team is off and spiking this month, looking forward to a successful season.

Several weeks of practicing in 100-degree heat and the high humidity in Cain Gymnasium has only pushed the team harder. The young team is hoping to "earn its wings" and come out leaders in the Centennial Conference this fall.

Co-captains junior Beverly Diaz and sophomore Michelle Chin will lead the 12-player Sho'women team, which was 12-20 last year.

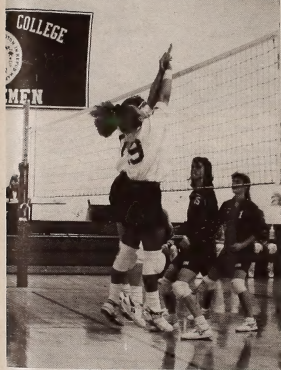
"I think we have a lot of potential," Diaz said. "We play as a whole team, and we work together on the court well."

Penny Fall, volleyball coach at Washington for 18 years, also has high expectations.

"I'm looking forward to a very positive experience this year," Fall said. "A strong nucleus of players has returned, along with four strong freshmen."

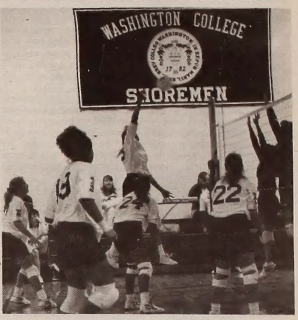
Fall's assistant coach is 1991 Washington graduate Leigh Ann Gay.

With no seniors and three juniors, the volleyball team is young. Laura Heidel, Sabrina Lugibuhl, and Diaz are the juniors on the team.



Sophomore hitter/blocker Jen Dixon, Washington's Most Valuable Player last season, returns for 1993. As a freshman, she led the Middle Atlantic Conference in kills, and was ranked fifth in kills percentage for the MAC.

Sophomores Amanda Barnes, Courtney Myers, and Mariah Geissler return as hitters for this ultimate team game.



"I anticipate a great season," Geissler said. "We're having a good time, and our practices are going well."

Co-captain Chin will act as setter and hitter for the Sho'women.

The four freshmen that will add their skills are Catherine Barrett, Kari Lee, Tina Smith, and Rebecca Stephens. Freshman Edna Roberts will be team manager.

Coach Fall feels that the success or failure of her team depends on three factors.

"Can we stay healthy?" Fall asks. "With 12 players, everyone on this roster is important." Secondly, Fall hopes the young team "can gain the maturation necessary to play together and win."

The coach also commented on the team's difficult schedule this fall.

"We'll be in the tougher Centennial Conference, plus all of our old MAC rivals are still there," she said. "We also have a very demanding tournament schedule each weekend."

The Sho'women's next home game is Tuesday night at 7 p.m. against Dickinson. Hope to see you there cheering them on.

Monumental Hockey Star Comes To Washington College

Catherine Sullivan
Co-Sports Editor

New assistant field hockey and lacrosse Coach, Samantha Emmet, comes to Washington College after a monumental senior year at William Smith College in Geneva, New York.

A four year field hockey and three year lacrosse player Coach Emmet graduated in '93 with a Bachelors in Psychology. During her playing experience at William Smith, the field hockey team made it to the NCAA's each year and won the finals last year, beating the irrefutable champions Trenton State. Coach Emmet distinguished herself as a superior attack player in both field hockey and lacrosse.

As well as being a gifted athlete, Coach Emmet brings experience off the field to her coaching internship. She spent two summers coaching field hockey and lacrosse at the Merestead Sports Camps and one summer as a lacrosse coach at Choate/Rosemary Hall.

When asked why she chose to come to Washington College, Coach Emmet responded; "Washington has a good reputation for academic excellence and athletic support. There is such a diverse group of students on the team who are all nice to work with. They seem to eager to pick up what I can contribute."

In addition to Washington's reputation, it was also a familiar place. A native of Virginia, Coach Emmet attended the Garrison Forest School in Maryland. She'll be taking graduate courses in Psychology, working towards her Masters degree, and assistant coaching. Though she stated emphatically that she doesn't miss college, she did remark that it's nice to be "able to work with intelligent adults who are growing and maturing and who are out there because they love the sport."

Excited about the team and becoming a member of the Washington College family, Coach Emmet looks forward to the rest of the field hockey and lacrosse seasons. She has settled herself in Chestertown and reports that she received a "warm welcome." We in the Sports Department welcome Coach Emmet and hope that she enjoys the mild Chestertown winters.

Field Hockey Looks To Stick It To '93 Opponents

Scott Steinmuller
Staff Writer

With the arrival of Fall imminent, field hockey season is once again upon us.

Yet, beyond that, assumptions should go no further, as the winds of change have not blown idly during the past year. A new leader, a new way, and a new enthusiasm have arisen in Sho'women field hockey.

Sarah Feyerherm, former Washington College Sports Information Director and now head coach of the field hockey team, stands ready to begin the fall campaign, in hopes of improving upon last year's 6-7 record.

Coach Feyerherm, assistant coach Samantha Emmet, and this year's team members have come up with three key goals for the '93 season.

Their ultimate goal is to win the Centennial Conference.

If not reached, their next goal would be to play better than .500.

Finally, their third goal is an all encompassing one in that they are striving to be in constant support of each other, to give 100% in both practice and in games, and to have better communication with each other.

Coach Feyerherm believes the newly formed Centennial Conference will be one of the toughest conferences in field hockey in the nation.

This belief can be substantiated by the fact that now Johns Hopkins and Franklin and Marshall, both NCAA qualifiers last year, are scheduled opponents against Washington this season.

In terms of stategy in approaching this new competition, Coach Feyerherm has brought in a new offensive, attacking system in hopes of "overwhelming" the opposing teams. This system differs from more conventional styles of play.

The new system is a 5-3-2 formation with five forwards, three midfielders, and two defensemen (two of the forwards will share defensive responsibility).

Very few schools use this system, so Coach Feyerherm hopes to keep opposing players off guard.

"It puts pressure on the other team," Feyerherm said. "It makes them unsure of roles and of what is supposed to be."

The new system was used for the first time in last Wednesday's scrimmage against Salisbury.

Coach Feyerherm thinks the Sho'women started out a little "baffled" with the new system, probably even more so, because of the aggressiveness of the Salisbury team.

Yet, in the second half, Feyerherm said she saw a completely different team. Washington began playing well within their new system.

The Sho'women actually tallied more goals in the second half than Salisbury, but the final score still favored the Seagulls 4-2.

Co-captain Renee Guckert leads the Sho'woman offense this season.

However, in Saturday's scrimmage against Goucher, the Sho'women playing together for a second time prevailed 1-0.

"We played very hard against a very aggressive Goucher team," Feyerherm said.

To lead the team onto the field in Wednesday's opener against Wesley will be senior co-captains Peggy Bowman and Renee Guckert.

The Sho'women are a young team composed of four senior, one junior, six sophomores and eight freshman. Though they may be inexperienced, Feyerherm likes her team's aggressiveness.

"They would run through a brick wall for the ball," she said.

Key players on attack will be Guckert along with senior Liz Olivere, junior Amy Barrell and sophomores Jill Schulz, Kouri Coleman, and Cindy Matalucci.

Freshman Helen Pitts also will see time up front.

The midfield defense will be maintained by Bowman and senior Maria Jerardi along with freshmen Amy Scarlett and Marcia Flinn.

Freshmen Jen Ruenzel and Nikki Chmura will also provide support on defense.

The deep defense will be bolstered by sophomores Jen Hanifee and Shannon Metcalf along with freshmen Gloria Mast and Elizabeth Barlow.

Finally, in goal, time will be split between sophomore Peggy Busker and freshman Stephanie Self.

Managing the team will be Patrice Stanley.

Coach Feyerherm is looking forward to the '93 season with an enthusiastic outlook.

"I really want the team to enjoy the game," she said. "It might not be the most entertaining game to watch, but it is a lot of fun to play. "I would like each player to come out of the season with a better knowledge of the overall game and to have fun. They have been incredibly enthusiastic about the new system, and I feel they will get alot out of the season."

Come support the Sho'women field hockey team tomorrow against Gettysburg at 1:00 p.m.

Field Hockey, Volleyball, Soccer Ready To Kick Off Centennial Conference Competition This Weekend

This weekend will be the first Centennial Conference games for Washington in school history.

All three of our fall sports teams will be involved with conference foes, as field hockey will host Gettysburg tomorrow at 1 p.m., soccer will travel to the Muhlenberg Tournament and volleyball will be at the Haverford Tournament.

"Our field hockey team plays Gettysburg, always a tough opponent, in what will be the first Cewntennial Conference game in the history of the new all-sports contest," athletic director Geoff Miller said.

"There is another conference field hockey game scheduled for 1 p.m. in Philadelphia, but we're going to start ours at 12:59 p.m. just so we can literally be the first contest."

Miller's only kidding about starting at 12:59 just so Washington can be the first Centennial game in history. However, the new conference is certainly no joke.

This weekend, Gettysburg will be a tough game for the field hockey team, and Muhlenberg is one of the top programs in Division III soccer.

The soccer team will have two games under its belt when it faces Muhlenberg, and field hockey will have played one game.

The new conference is full of tough teams and this weekend is only the beginning.

Fall Out-of-Season Workouts Start

Fall practice for out-of-season sports began this week, and it's a chance for a large number of athletes to get back into the swing of things and condition themselves for their official start in February.

Tennis, Crew, baseball, softball and men's lacrosse are all under way for their short season which typically involves a lot of practicing and a few scrimmages.

Fall practices are not required but can be a big help to returning athletes and are part of the try-out process.

The highlight for this fall scrimmage season will be the lacrosse team's contest with Division I power Maryland to be played here on Kibler Field.

Soccer Breaks Funk

Did you know the men's soccer team's 1-0 victory over Lebanon Valley last Saturday was the Shoremen's first win at Kibler Field in three years?

All five of last year's wins and the only win of 1991 came on the road.

Michelle Chin and Jen Dixon set up for the shot.

O's Stay In Chase; Skins Prevail

The Baltimore Orioles have rolled back into the American League Eastern Division pennant race.

An eight-game winning streak which ended Tuesday night brought the team back to within two games of the first place Toronto Bluejays and New York Yankees.

In the National League East, the Philadelphia Phillies still hold a big lead over the Montreal Expos with an eight and one half game advantage going into Wednesday night's game.

In the western divisions, the Chicago Whitesox lead in the American League by six over Texas and the San Francisco Giants are currently holding off the Atlanta Braves by three and one half.

The baseball highlight for the week was Jim Abbott's no-hitter against the Indians last Saturday, helping New York stay in the pennant chase.

This weekend's National Football League action proved eventful.

On Monday night, the Washington Redskins thrashed the defending Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys 35-16.

In other action:

The Denver Broncos beat the New York Jets 26-20 despite Boomer Esiason's 371 passing yards for New York.

Kansas City pounded the Tampa Bay Bucaneers in Joe Montana's Chiefs debut. Montana threw for 246 yards and three touchdowns.

Green Bay's Sterling Sharpe caught seven passes for 120 yards to lead the Packers to a 36-6 victory over the Los Angeles Rams.

The Dolphins' Dan Marino lofted a one-yard touchdown pass with 35 seconds left in the game to lead Miami over the Indiannapolis Colts, 24-20.

Philadelphia beat the Phoenix Cardinals 23-17 with Baltimore native Vaughn Hebron's 66 rushing yards sparking the Eagles' offense.

The San Francisco 49ers defeated Pittsburgh behind Steve Young's three touchdown passes.

The Raiders crushed the Vikings 24-7 to spoil Jim McMahon's first game in a Minnesota uniform. Jeff Hostetler was 14-15 for 150 yards for Los Angeles.

New York beat the Chicago Bears 26-20 in Dan Reeve's Giants' coaching debut.

Other games had Detroit over Atlanta, 30-13; Cleveland defeating the Bengals 27-14; Buffalo all over the Patriots by a 38-14 score; the Chargers winning against Seattle, 18-12; and a little bit of a surprise in New Orleans' 33-21 win over the Houston Oilers.

In college football, Maryland lost to Virginia 43-29 in local action.

Other big winners on the national college football circuit were: Michigan 41 Washington State 14, Miami 23 Boston College 7, Texas A & M 24 L.S.U. 7, Notre Dame 27 Northwestern 12, Nebraska 76 North Texas 14, Ohio State 34 Rice 7, South Carolina 23 Georgia 21, Penn State 38 Minnesota 20, Clemson 24 U.N.L.V. 14, and West Virginia 48 Eastern Michigan 6.

It was a tough choice for Newt's POW this week.

With only one sport playing a regular season game before Wednesday night's deadline, we had only a few athletes to choose from.

However, once we thought it over, we figured Brian Rush did a pretty good job for the soccer team this weekend, as he hustled all over the field and scored the only goal in a 1-0 victory over Lebanon Valley.

Rush, a sophomore from Seaford, Delaware, normally stays on the defense but saw a great opportunity on Saturday to put the ball in the net.

Oh well... this editor is really tired about now and running out of things to say--much less funny things.

I must say I really miss Dougie Hoffberger in this department as he turned the Newt's POW write-up into a fine art which was dramatic every week. Doug, if you could take the time out to bestow your infinite wisdom upon me, maybe I can get back into the groove!

Honorable Mention for this week goes to Greg Miller who had nine saves last week against Valley...but grand honorable mention honors go to Shawn McMahon and Tom Hiebler (13-0 in Washington's "official game" last Saturday. Wow!).

Faculty React to Long Range Plan

Many Have Great Reservations

Scott Koon
Editor-in-Chief

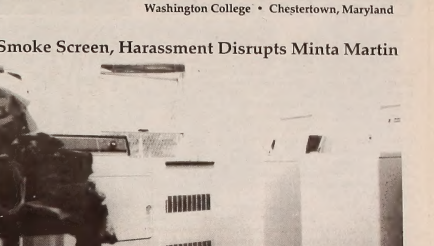
The Faculty meeting of 13 September opened with President Charles H. Trout delivering a brief introduction before opening the floor for committee reports.

Trout set the tone for the meeting by commenting on the objectives of the Long Range Planning Committee's Preliminary Report. He noted that the Report stressed involvement, and that the Report as a whole had many ramifications for Faculty.

One of the ramifications expounded upon by Trout is a result of a proposal to increase the college's retention rate, which now stands at approximately 60%. The retention rate is a measure of how many students graduate within five years.

Trout attributed some of this attrition to academic difficulties, and stated that the Faculty must take early action to assist students who appear to be headed towards stormy waters. "Keep in mind that these are late adolescents," Trout said, "sometimes the student with the greatest bravado is the student greatest in need."

While most participants in the Faculty meeting were better dressed than they normally are for class, there are some analogies which may be drawn between the Faculty meeting and the classroom situation. The floor at this particular meeting was dominated by Trout, Dean Wubbles and about a dozen of the more alert Faculty members. The rest either silently paid attention or pretended to pay attention. Some did not bother with even the merest pretense of interest, being occupied by doodling, reading magazines or attending to their correspondence.



During the committee reports, Dr. Richard Striner, Chair of the Board of Publications, announced that last year's Pegasus would be available in approximately one month.

Dr. Tahir Shad of the Friends of the Library spoke on the need to retrieve severely overdue library books taken out by Faculty members.

Dr. Nancy Tatum, Faculty Representative on the Board of Visitors and Governors, stated that the Board had elected not to alter the controversial new policy on insurance costs which

Smoke Screen, Harassment Disrupts Minta Martin

J. Tarin Towers
Staff Writer

Smoke was detected in the basement hallway of Minta Martin Dormitory Sunday night at approximately 9:10 p.m. Residents of the dorm called Washington College Security, who responded and then called the Chestertown Volunteer Fire Department.

Firefighters on the scene determined that the smoke was coming from a washing machine in the basement laundry room. The drive belt had slipped off of the motor and was melting, which caused the smoke. The machine was disconnected before an actual fire could start.

Students are reminded to use caution when dealing with the laundry machines on campus, and to report and mechanical problems immediately to the Maintainance Department.

Students should also take precautions to prevent their laundry from being stolen. Never leave laundry unattended for long long periods of time.

In other security news, several bicycles ranging in value from $400 to $1,000 have been stolen from campus. Two of these were stolen last weekend, one of which was taken from an unlocked dorm room.

This continues a rash of bike thefts begun last year. Townspolice say that Chestertown proper is experiencing similar problems. Director of Security Jerry Roderick encourages owners to exert extra precautions in securing all bicycles.

Several complaints of obscene phone calls have been reported to security. The on-campus students, all female, have been harassed by a male caller. Anyone who experiences such harassment, or anyone who has received such a call and has not reported it, is encouraged to contact Roderick at ext. 7810.

Security is currently investigating an instance of malicious destruction which took place Wednesday morning at 2 a.m. Five students ran through the hall of fourth floor Minta Martin and ripped decorations from doors and bulletin boards, as well as destroying other personal property. Any leads should be reported to Security. Ω

Casey, Price Retire from Board of Visitors and Governors

John K. Phoebus
News Editor

Betty Brown Casey '47, member of the Board of Visitors and Governors for 20 years, is leaving Washington College's governing body. Casey, wife of the late Eugene B. Casey, is an alumna of the school. The Casey family has made significant contributions to Washington College. Most prominent are the Casey Academic Center and the Eugene B. Casey Swim Center, but the they have also contributed endowment funds and scholarship money to the school. Perhaps more valuable than money is the time and interest that they have devoted to the Washington College community. In the dedication ceremony for the CAC in the Spring of 1991, Betty Casey challenged members of the Washington College community to give time back to their school and community, calling it Casey Time.

Betty Casey is a resident of a Montgomery county and remains president of the Eugene B. Casey Foundation, a non-profit charity organization. Casey herself began work here at WC by establishing a scholarship fund with colleague Mrs. Marvin Mandel in 1975. She has left the Board at WC due to difficulties in attending the meetings of the body. She is succeeded by her step-son, Douglas Casey, who now assumes a position on the Board. Says President Charles H. Trout, "In the last decade, Washington College's physical plant has been essentially rebuilt. Betty Brown Casey has been central to this achievement. She has exhibited astonishing material generosity, but a caring about Washington College which has perhaps been an even greater gift."

Retiring to emeritus status this year is W. James Price. He will be living in Florida while continuing to serve in advisory capacity to the Board. Price is retired Managing Director of Alex, Brown, and Sons, Inc.

Each year, six positions on the Board become open, two Board positions elected by the Board, two gubernatorial positions appointed by the governor of Maryland, and two alumni positions elected by alumni. Reelected to an alumni position is Clare S. Ingersol '71 of Chestertown, and newly elected is RoseMary Hatem Bonsack '55. Coming on as Board selections are former alumni appointment Mark A. Change for the Better?

It will soon be Fall in Chestertown, and the rhythms of nature are subtly beginning to change. The first leaves and seeds have become airborne, spiralling inevitably to the ground like so many laid-back kamikazes. The skies are beginning to shift from blue to gray, and the demon of humidity which has possessed the area all summer is again subject to its annual exorcism.

People are also effected by these annual transformations. It is as if each of us has a tiny organ lodged deep within the cerebellum which causes us to change into our Fall selves. The reptilian part of our brain calls, and we obey. Thou shalt no longer play frisbee: thou shalt now play football. Thou shalt no longer lounge about idly all day; thou shalt do thy homework. Thou shalt not wear white after Labor Day.

At the college, Fall means that students and Faculty return. But the College is not a ghost town over the summer. The college bustles with activity generated by the Summer Conference Program, and increasing numbers of students stay on campus to take part in the new opportunities for undergraduate research at Washington College.

Despite the new summer student academic activity on campus, the college during the summer exists for the Summer Conference Program. Normally, at the end of the summer, the college bids adieu to the last conference and prepares for the avalanche of students.

This year, however, the pattern has been altered. While the college has successfully ended the year's Summer Conferences, it is also losing the prime mover behind the Summer Conference Program. Mary E. Brown, the Associate Director of Summer Conferences, recently resigned. Ms. Brown, an alumna, had occupied her position for six years. She also completed her M.A. in Psychology here this summer.

The college will sorely miss Brown's contribution. During her tenure, the program consistently grossed between $400-600,000 for the college. While this does not cover the overhead costs for the entire summer, it does help improve the college's bottom line.

"I lived and breathed the program for six years," Brown said in a recent interview. "I feel pride in the program's success. Very few people understand the magnitude of the program. You can't stop it. Whether you like it or not, six hundred people will be coming in at a predetermined time, and you have to be ready."

Brown's position will not be refilled. Darrell Jester and Nora Sullivan of WC Dining Services will divide Brown's responsibilities. This is cause for concern. How many more positions and departments can be merged? Time will tell whether the reductions in force will have a lasting impact on the college's ability to serve its constituencies.

So far, it appears that the merger between Student Activities and Campus Recreation has been successful, but does it make sense? There is, of course, an interrelationship between Summer Conferences and Catering, but does it make sense to conduct administrative reorganizations on the basis of nothing more than who quits next. In this austere time, attrition is the most painless way to reduce payroll expenses. We can only hope that changes made today do not harm the college's viability in the future.

Disclaimer: this article is in no way anti-drinking. It is instead opposed to mandatory drinking.

Buried on page eleven of last week's Elm was an anonymous analog of the 'new' party regulations for the Washington College campus. The changes apply to the Resident Assistants (RAs) of the dormitories, who must not only approve all parties but also must be present during said events.

Sponsors 21 years of age listed on the registration form must be present during the party and will serve as liaison to Campus Security.

In addition, the monitoring system designed for the College House last year will now be applied to dorms. Registered events serving alcohol will have a third party hired by Security to check IDs of guests and maintain a responsible atmosphere.

The other rules mentioned are not entirely new: parties must be registered with Student Activities a week ahead of time; no kegs are allowed in residence halls; parties must serve non-alcoholic beverages and food; and no open containers are allowed outside (this is a Chestertown law as well as campus policy).

While the RA conditions are new to campus, that's not to say anything is going change. I know of at least six parties held during orientation weekend by RAs, one with a keg and one with mixed drinks (both prohibited by the alcohol policy). There's nothing wrong with partying when you get to college. But orientation was mandated to be 'dry' by both the Deans of Students when addressing the RAs and the Associate Dean of the College when addressing Peer Advisors.

There is a huge difference between an RA not objecting to drinking on the hall and the RA going on a beer run for students who may never have learned how to drink alcohol responsibly.

I'm not objecting to the fact that there were parties that weekend, simply to the way it was approached, by the administration as well as the RAs. Events organized by Dennis Berry in his new capacity as Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation to be a part of orientation were, alas, miserable failures.

First, there was Thursday night's band in the CAC. Don't get me wrong, the Dick Durham Trio is a fantastic jazz ensemble. But the acoustics in the CAC Gallery are such that people couldn't hear themselves think, much less talk to each other. Needless to say, everyone drank heavily instead.

Friday was left open. Strictly Ballroom was the opener for the film series, and the other suggestion was to go to the gym and work out. Needless to say, everyone drank heavily instead.

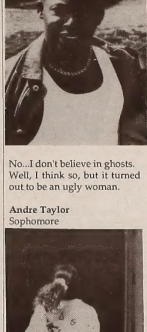
"One of the area's hottest DJs" turned out to be a skinny dork with black socks halfway up to his Bermuda shorts playing aged dance club tracks to about 20 freshmen sitting on the floor of the LFC. Needless to say, everyone drank heavily instead.

Now, I should address the word "everyone" in the above paragraphs. Not everyone at WC drinks. Not all the freshmen drank beyond the verge of praying to the porcelain god. Not all of them had any beer at all. But the visible ones did, right alongside their new upperclassmen buddies bearing IDs and cars.

This sends out an easily decipherable message to the student body, from the student body: in order to get to know people socially, you must drink with them. Sadly, it is not wholly untrue, and worse, it is not harmless either.

My best friend was taken to the hospital my freshman year during a room-to-room because of alcohol poisoning. Other seniors estimate at least 25 others suffered the same fate at least once that year.

Let me stress here that she did not go to Kent & Queen Anne's Hospital because she was at a frat party, or because she drank. It was because she drank to excess. There's a difference between pleasantly buzzed and out of control.



That difference is what caused an ear to be bitten off in a fight that same year; it's what caused the walls of Wicomico basement to be covered in blood and saliva last spring; it's what causes a large percentage of the dropout/failout rate each year.

Drinking can be a social tool; it loosens inhibitions and makes conversation flow easier. But when you're too schnockered to carry on con-

Like most Freshmen, I entered Washington College with great anticipation and uncertainty. Maybe more so for me because this was my first experience of the American educational system. Therefore, we were all in a form like travelers in a foreign country, with an extremely basic level of the language. Fortunately, for us this was a country where the natives were at least friendly and helpful.

I was certainly unaware of the amount of formal procedures that freshmen have to undergo. Thus, the four days of orientation appeared to be a lifetime of endless tasks.

Moreover, there was a dilemma in deciding which events to go to, or to participate in. I concluded that it was pointless going to every event, and so I went to those events that would be most beneficial to me. There were of course some happenings that were worth going along to. One example was the meeting of international students. This was a fantastic opportunity to formally be introduced to some of the old and new international students at Washington College. At the same time we were also introduced to a sample body of the foreign language faculty. This gathering mainly involved international students, however, it was a shame that there were only a few Americans who attended, and so therefore many people missed an opportunity to broaden their horizons and dissolve their ignorance about the fabric of other countries. Further, another opportunity was given to meet the international crowd on the following Sunday (August 29). Again this was another disappointing turnout.

A second example of an event that was worth attending was the talk on "Sex and Beer ... Your freedom ... Your choice ...

Students Shift to Sciences

Marshall Norton
Staff Writer

For many years, the Creative Writing Program has been one of the main academic draws for incoming freshmen to Washington College. With attractions like the O'Neill Literary House and the prestigious Sophie Kerr Prize, Washington College successfully recruits some of the best young writers available. This year, however, the Sciences appear to be increasing in popularity.

"For many years, Creative Writing has been the flagship of the academic program here, " stated Kevin Coveny, Vice President for Admissions and Enrollment Management, "because it is the most visible here." He went on to say that this year a significant portion of the freshman class has already decided to major in one of the sciences.

Out of the 214 freshmen at Washington College, 35 have declared themselves Biology majors. Ten have chosen to follow the Pre-Med program. Nine freshmen are majoring in Mathematics, which is a substantial increase from previous years. Four chose Chemistry as their major. Three freshmen are majoring in Physics, while another two are enrolled in the 3+2 Engineering Program.

That adds up to 63 freshmen, or nearly 30 percent of the class who have chosen to major in the Sciences. As Coveny put it, "Science majors represent a big chunk of the freshman class this year."

Coveny and the rest of the Administration recognize that such programs as the Fine Arts and Modern Languages are under-subscribed in relation to the sciences and Creative Writing, but, Coveny concluded, "You go with your strengths."

Unfortunately, while the Admissions staff succeeds in attracting students with diverse interests to the college, many of the students find that Washington is just not the place for them. Approximately 40% of students do not graduate within five years of beginning college at WC.

They might be interested in a field of study that Washington College does not offer, or they discover that they would feel more comfortable in a less rural, or even larger setting. Whatever the reason, some students find the Washington College experience inadequate.

The administration is aware of this issue, and for that reason Coveny and the other members of the Admissions staff are scheduled to attend a conference next month in Baltimore on that subject. Ω

Your responsibility." The title maybe suggested that this talk would have been more of a lecture by somebody like your father, telling you what not to do, and to report any mishappenings to President Trout. However, this was not the case. Gary Bonas, from the University of Villanova, held the talk, and he was certainly not like my father! He did not preach to us, but merely strengthened our already strong views on sex, HIV and alcohol. Those who did not attend missed one of the best laughs, if not "the best" laugh of orientation.

On the other hand, there were a few disappointments in the orientation days. The ordeal of reading the book Beautiful Swimming by William Warner, was one of them. Most of us have strong criticisms about the book. However, my disappointment was not due to this as much as a lack of indepth concentration about the book. We could have had a formal discussion monitored by a member of the Arena Registration, and as if we had not suffered enough, we were put through the ordeal of purchasing our required books at the bookstore. Both procedures require revision. The registration process could be updated so that each course had a required amount of Freshmen, Sophomores and upperclassmen, so that we could all get "a fair share of the pie," so to speak. Moreover, the purchasing of books could be revised so that depending upon which letter of the alphabet your last name began with, reflected on what day of the week you purchased your books. However, this system would required the support of the professors, so that they would give students whose last name began with "Z" more time to acquire their books.

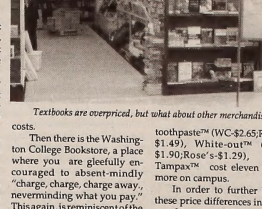
versation, I question how much fun you're really having.

Don't get me wrong. I have been so smashed on a number of occasions that I couldn't remember which side of 213 I lived on. Did I regret getting drunk? No. Many of my best memories of Washington College have involved alcohol. But it was the people, not the alcohol, that made these events memorable.

I'm not going to claim that I've never pounded a beer before a non-alcoholic event just for the buzz. But why is it necessary to serve drinks to have people even show up?



The key to the administration's huff over alcohol is not to ban it, as many colleges have done. College is the best place to learn how to drink responsibly, and honestly, you won't have a raging party if you don't serve alcohol. But pretend you're playing the name game in reverse. I think while you drink. Your best friends probably don't value you for how many cups you can sink. Ω

WC Bookstore Prices Higher Than Local Stores

Richard Kane
Staff Writer

Textbooks are overpriced, but what about other merchandise?

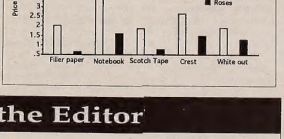
The typical college student is by no means wealthy. In fact, his or her checking account probably suffers a severe drought during the school year. Hence, the need for summer employment. While no student may expect to come out on the plus side at the end of the school year, ends must meet

On campus work-study jobs range in salary from a meager $4.25 to $5.00 per hour. The low salaries added to the limited number of available hours to work clearly illustrates that work-study is designed only to make ends meet

With this being common knowledge, why then is the cost of living on campus significantly higher than living in Chestertown itself? For instance, lunch at a downtown restaurant such as the Old Wharf Inn costs about three to four dollars less than the dining hall. Keep in mind that downtown you've waited on and your choice of food ranges through an entire menu. There are also no gimmicky $25 fines for not clearing your tray. Downtown, they do it for you. But because the meals at the Dining Hall are purchased through meal plans, the prices do not directly effect the student cost of living. It seems insignificant next to the huge tuition and Room & Board costs.

Then there is the Washington College Bookstore, a place where you are gleefully encouraged to absent-mindly "charge, charge, charge away", neverminding what you pay." This again, is reminiscent of the Dining Hall.

Keeping the example of the WC Bookstore, the higher on campus cost of living becomes irritatingly obvious with a little price comparison shopping. To make this comparison, a short walk to the store Rose's in Kent plaza was taken.



At the WC Bookstore 200 sheets of non-recycled filler paper costs $2.00. At Rose's that same 200 sheets (without the WC logo on the first piece) costs $0.64. At WC Bookstore a 200 sheet notebook costs $4.79. At Rose's a 200 sheet notebook of identical quality (minus the WC logo) costs $1.59. Even brand name items differ in price. For instance: a role of scotch tape™ (WC-$1.85; Rose's-$0.78), Crest toothpaste™ (WC-$2.65; Rose's $1.49), White-out™ (WC-$1.90; Rose's-$1.29), even Tampax™ cost eleven cents more on campus.

In order to further bring these price differences into focus, lets create "Campus guy Bob." Let's say "Bob" (who just finished paying some $290 for his books) needs to get a 200 sheet notebook for each of his four classes, two packs of filler paper, a pack of pens , some Crest™ for his teeth, and some envelopes to send letters to dear old mom and dad. At the WC Bookstore, Bob would have spent $32.01. However, at Rose's Bob would only have spent $11.91..

Thus, on campus, Bob would have spent almost three times as much. Shopping off campus would leave Bob with more money, the same quality of stuff, no Washington College logos, and fifty more envelopes. At the WC Bookstore it costs $3.21 more for 50 envelopes than it does for a 100 of them at Rose's.

Throughout an entire school year, or say four years, the money wasted buying things on campus becomes enormous. Consequently, the amount of money saved buying things off campus becomes enormous as well.

After shopping around town, the prices at the Washington College bookstore become insulting. The WC bookstore is assuming a monopoly that isn't really there when you consider that Rose's is but a short walk north on Washington Ave. Ω

To the Editor,

Congratulations for recognizing a story. That pussycat, Hartt Derringer of the Kent County News, decided that this was a non-event.

As one who has been trashed by Jack Anderson, your effort ranks as a "nice try." But you can't always trust Dr. De Prospo. I identified myself at the beginning of our conversation, but he only had ears for "and I'm interested in your course." Later, I gave him my name again.

Dr. De Prospo did not tip me off to the offensive pages. When American Psycho was published, reviewers strongly suggested that it was really bad. Knowing that before ever speaking to Dr. De Prospo, I went to the bookstore to find the mountain of trash reading listed for his course. And please, I did not buy the book! It took a few seconds of page-flipping to find the revolting four pages I reproduced. I also found Dworkin's "Whip Chick," but it didn't compare.

One of my objectives, when interviewing Dr. De Prospo, was to ascertain that he had indeed read all the garbage he was asking his students to buy. I also asked about the MLA meetings because of the raunchy papers and sessions. You were extraordinarily selective in your reporting on that! What's the matter- was the MLA Convention too gross for you? Did it sicken you?

I asked Dr. De Prospo whether students might make a porn video, and he was rather delighted by the idea, saying that he might not stand in the way of "anything that outrageous."

Now, would you favor an AMS 492 seminar, "Making Skin Flicks?" You are probably unable to think of any reason why the college should not offer such a course. And that would be because you have no standards.

The fact that Dr. De Prospo encountered essentially no opposition, when proposing this course, tells us that the college lacks both standards and common sense. There is nothing surprising about students flocking to a smut-wallow for credit, but the number of parents prepared to pay seventeen-five, or whatever, so the kid can study pornography is limited.

Far from being alone in this, I did not encounter a single person, in town or elsewhere, who considered this course to be anything but a) a joke in poor taste, and then b) disgusting.

Yours truly,
Susan Huck

Editor's note: I elected to cover Dr. Huck's anti-pornography tract because it caused complaints from a Board member and a parent, and was therefore newsworthy in the context of this paper's role as an organ of Washington College. Dr. Huck's other recent circulation, an article written for Conservative Review on the topic of a recent Modern Language Association convention, was only relevant insofar as it related to the AMS 491 story.

To the Editor,

Where are the 1992-93 Yearbooks? Does anybody know? They appear to be missing. Just wondering.

Sincerely,
Andrea J. Nolan

Editor's note: Due to difficulties in finding an editor for The Pegasus, the yearbooks for this past academic year were not completed according to schedule. The yearbooks will be available sometime during the month of October.

North Considers Political Career

Arent' There Enough Liars in Congress Already?

Scott Ross Koon
Editor-in-Chief

Most convicted criminals don't get elected to high public office, and most would never consider it. This is not the case with Oliver North, who is trying the waters for a 1994 Senate campaign.

In most places in the country, North wouldn't stand a prayer of winning even the Republican primary. But North is a resident of Virginia. Due to his impeccable conservative credentials, many conservative Virginians might be willing to overlook his Federal convictions.

Indeed, for some, North's criminal record is part of his appeal. Oliver North was willing to risk prison in order to execute what he believed to be an immeasurable service to American interests. North was convicted of obstructing Congress, destroying official documents and accepting an illegal gift. In one of the ultimate ironies of the American political system, this law and order advocate only escaped prison because a judge overturned his convictions because of a legal technicality.

Of the charges against him, the most serious was that of lying to Congress. There are some who are willing to ignore violations of the law when those who break the law do so in the name of America. But the fact remains, Oliver North wasn't some rash kid out on a joy ride: he was a Lieutenant Colonel in the Marines and was old enough to know better.

Law and order candidates such as North typically argue for stiff mandatory sentencing and tighter parole programs. They argue against early good behavior releases for prisoners. Their rationale is that once a criminal has committed his crime, he becomes predisposed to committing more crimes.

Why shouldn't this same standard apply to Lt. Colonel North? He has committed crimes while in the service of the American people once already, why should he be given the opportunity to do so again?

There are some who say that we will never know the whole truth about the Iran-Contra debacle, and that it is impossible to prove that Lt. Colonel North actually lied to Congress. Ultimately, how can we say for certain if someone who says "I don't remember" actually is lying?

Fortunately for all of us, the U.S. government has been working on this problem since World War I. The law enforcement community has employed many a trained psychologist to devise a system for detecting lies during questioning. These standards are well accepted by criminal investigators and are codified in the official investigation manual of the Drug Enforcement Agency.

The DEA manual gives the official guidelines for government agents seeking to find the truth. They offer guidance by rendering examples of typical behavior of people who lie during interrogation.

The DEA manual tells us to be wary of those who "Make statements like 'Not that I remember,' or "To the best of my recollection." The DEA informs us that people making such statements are "qualifying answers in case later confronted with the facts."

North made many such statements during his testimony before Congress. In fact, he often would string several such statements together, as he did when asked by Sen Linman if he had suspected that profits from the sale of Hawk missiles to Iran were being used to fund the Contra rebels in Nicaragua: "I don't believe I did. I mean, I have no recollection of that."

According to the DEA, Lars also "Block the in-depth interview by referring to previous statements he has made. These individuals are afraid to repeat their stories, because they can't always remember what they already said, and don't want to develop inconsistencies in their 'stories.'" North would often do this by saying "You've read my papers, haven't you?"

North is no novice liar: he used every trick in the book. The DEA warns of the "yes sir' liar, who "will try to 'yes sir' you to death." North frequently employed this tactic in his testimony as he played out his self-appointed role of the honorable soldier. He also employed "a device by which the subject tries to tie up the interviewer by arguing about trivial points and fine distinc-

It was a regular day in the Washington College dining hall. The male cafeteria workers were leaning casually against the wall in the conveyer-belt place, ogling all the girls as they daintily disposed of their dinnerware. Some sophomore girl was sitting in the back corner, laughing loudly. People at the surrounding tables were staring at her, debating whether or not they should elect someone to hit her with a large cantaloupe. Cleopatra's Daughters were sitting at another table, also laughing loudly, but at different things. A senior who knew where the secret-switch-that-turns-on-the-disco-ball is turned it on. was adopted last spring.

Registrar Dr. Jack Hamilton reported that the college currently has 812 full-time students, 20 part-time students, 48 continuing education students, 38 graduate students and 28 continuing education graduate students enrolled.

Trout then began to present the LRPC Report by emphasizing that the plan "…is a work in progress. A lot of hard work doesn't ensure that a document is worth the paper that it's written on. A good deal of this, I expect, will be recast."

If approved by the Board, the Preliminary Report is to be submitted to the President. It will then be the subject of a six month feasibility study.

Wubbles then took the floor as the primary person responsible for the draft. He said "I consider myself to be in the position of trying to create a document the Faculty is happy with." Wubbles, an avid golfer, also noted that the drafting of the document had had a detrimental effect on his golf game.

Wubbles emphasized that the plan was by its nature strategic and not tactical. "We are running a deficit, and there's a crucial question of how short term plans relate to the long range," Wubbles said. "This is a plan, but not a specific solution to short term problems."

Wubbles then reaffirmed that the Plan has no authority in and of itself, but that it merely possessed the power to set the agenda for the regular organs of the college.

After the floor was opened to Faculty comment on the Preliminary Report, Dr. Daniel Premo said "I didn't find the language very neutral. The author clearly has an agenda in mind and he describes the senior obligation."

Premo was referring to a passage on page 66 of the Preliminary Report. The passage reads "Only rarely do senior obligation projects see any form of publication that helps the Faculty member, the program, and the College sustain the activity. It is difficult to feature this fuzzy, somewhat sinister, private thing as an asset of our education, and, therefore, it is hard to provide good library, laboratory, studio and other resources for it. If the Obligation were a credited exercise, it might be possible to provide Faculty load credit for it, especially if some thinning in departmental course offerings in the larger majors accompanied the change."

Premo, in responding to this passage, said "I see no demonstration or evidence to show student dissatisfaction with the senior obligation. There is an absence of data." Premo also stated that he was "…concerned about a document with this tone going to the Board." He also said that to offer course credits for the senior obligation "…would be to emasculate it."

Wubbles countered that "We intended to have this session to get Faculty feedback before the Board sees … [the plan.]." Wubbles then emphasized that the plan revealed to the Faculty a lot of information to which they had never before had access. He said he was "… shocked to learn that there's been a tradition of hiding the data from Faculty."

Dr. Richard De Prospo then said "If we want to dissent, we'll have to articulate these problems very very carefully and very precisely because the document is very authoritative."

Professor Robert P. Day then noted that the report "… commands the Board's do a lot of things. We have to enter into a contract to see the plan through, and it's an expensive contract. Are we going to work on it and are we going to say it's too expensive?"

Trout assured Professor Day that "Some of the most conservative board members fiscally feel the college has to grow to survive. … There's an opportunity for trustees to take investment risks."

Dr. Steven Cades then stated that "The plan actually asks little of the Board, with the exception building construction."

The debate the shifted again to the academic aspects of the plan. Dr. Steven Cades noted that "It's true that the number of independent study programs It's difficult to see how diverse divisions produce publishable material. This can happen from time to time, but only with extraordinary students, at least in those divisions where theory is more important than praxis."

Dr. Emile Amt said "Can we take this as a consensus document? Especially in the lean curriculum concept, which I would say is a bombshell."

The discussion then began to revolve around what Trout called "the tendency for majors to cluster." Dr. Robert Anderson said "There's a problem in the very concept of an underutilized department. There are departments which should be service departments. My impression was that the document suggested that there are seven winning majors and nine losing majors." German Instructor Jefford Vahlbusch then remarked "If Bob Anderson feels he's in a losing department, then my department has lost."

Professor Day then suggested that written comments about the plan be solicited from Faculty. Trout then said that Faculty members could consider themselves invited to submit their reactions to the plan in writing.

The discussion then began to range more broadly. Premo reacted to a segment of the plan from page 31 which reads "The College has made real progress on Faculty salaries during the past decade." Premo said "That has not been my experience, nor does it jibe with the data." He then asked, "Is it now the policy of the college to use Hodson Trust funds for student financial aid?" Trout responded in the affirmative.

Premo then went on to state that the plan lacked an acknowledgement of the role in student involvement played by such programs as the Goldstein Program in Public Affairs and the Society of Junior Fellows.

Dr. W. Michael Bailey then stated that the plan sought to accomplish too much at one time. He asserted the plan is unrealistic in attempting to simultaneously increase tuition at a rate 2 percent over the rate of inflation, increase the SAT scores of incoming freshmen, reduce the total number of students on financial aid, decrease the amount of financial aid awarded to each recipient and add three hundred students to the Washington College student body.

The meeting ended with Dr. Sean O'Connor saying that he believes a consensus between the Faculty and Administration. "It will be difficult to come to a common agreement, but I believe that we can over the next three or four months," O'Connor said. "I'm very encouraged by this document, and I'm very encouraged by this discussion." Ω

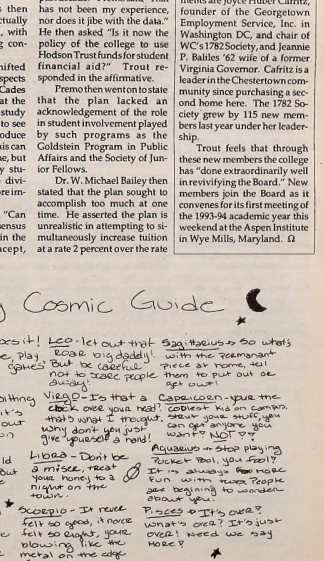
Armata Partners. Griswold is the father of Sarah Griswold '94 and is also on the board of Preservation Maryland Community Foundation and president of the Maryland Historical Society.



Joining the Board this year as new gubernatorial appointments are Joyce Huber Cafritz, founder of the Georgetown Employment Service, Inc. in Washington DC, and chair of WC's 1782 Society, and Jeannie P. Baliles '62 wife of a former Virginia Governor. Cafritz is a leader in the Chestertown community since purchasing a second home here. The 1782 Society grew by 115 new members last year under her leadership.

Trout feels that through these new members the college has "done extraordinarily well in revivifying the Board." New members join the Board as it convenes for its first meeting of the 1993-94 academic year this weekend at the Aspen Institute in Wye Mills, Maryland. Ω

For many, there is the temptation to believe that there was at some point in human history a "golden age." when things were better. This space will be devoted to articles from the past which will serve to educate not only about the history of the college, but also about history itself. The editorial below first appeared in the March 6th, 1926 issue of the Collegian. It could have been written yesterday

The College Nonentity

Harry S. Russell '26
Editor-In-Chief,
Washington Collegian, 1926

The leaders of our various organizations often are impressed with a deplorable condition existing among the students of this college when they are looking for students with initiative and responsibility enough to take charge and to perform duties incidental to curricular and extra-curricular activity. The ability that a large number of students have in evading anything that has the earmarks of a little mental or physical exertion is surprisingly large. As a consequence there are a few who generally have the bulk of the extra work thrust upon their shoulders while the larger group of work shirkers gaze upon them complacently offering cynical, inconsequential criticisms.

This self satisfied contentwith-things-as-they-are group may be noticed more markedly by the students than by the faculty. In fact they may seem an entirely satisfactory sort to those in charge of running this institution for they get fairly good marks and do not produce a bad impression upon their superiors. Certainly not-they are too lazy to be heretical-too cowardly to be obnoxious-and too eager to get a good grade to dispute the pet theories of a professor. Their negative influence is as insignificant as their positive accomplishments. They are merely null.

They go through college thinking second-hand thoughts, dittoing the ideas of their instructors, following the general trend of the mob, and perhaps soaking up superficial knowledge having no ideas of their own, or at least, failing to indicate them lest they be erroneous. To them the criterion for education is getting the highest possible grade for the lowest possible output of work.

Oh, of course they will be graduated, but the bubble of self-satisfaction will eventually burst, leaving them practically helpless in the realization of the insignificance of their position. Ω Saving the rain forests has become a focal point in many environmentalist campaigns. In 1971 Norman Myers published one of the first comprehensive books in our long environmentalist campaign: The Sinking Arc. In this alarming text Myers states that the world could "lose one quarter of all species by the end of year 2000." He goes on to state that the main loss will be from tropical forests. Now only was this alarming, it was also controversial. To this day specialists are debating as to the severity of this situation and what measures can or should be taken.

It is common knowledge that rain forests are being destroyed, and that this threatens the planet's ecological balance. In spite of this knowledge, many countries have been hesitant in stating policies against deforestation for economic reasons. This is especially true of Third World countries.

The world wide demand for exotic hardwoods has remained high over the past twenty years, and this has given an economic incentive to tropical countries strapped for hard currency. Countries like Burma need the cash to support economic development projects, and forests are often the easiest resource to exploit. No geologic surveys are necessary: everyone knows where the forests are. Simple enough?

The long-term effects aren't as simple. They run from extinction of endangered species to global warming. Our rain forests are one of the most fragile and valuable ecosystems on our Earth. They serve as home for thousands of species of animal life and varieties of exotic plants.

In the 70's the first "treehuggers" appeared as a group of women making human chains around trees in the Himalayan foothills. And they started a tradition of sorts. Many companies such as Community Products Inc. (makers of Ben & Jerry's with their Rainforest Crunch) have started to take on their own campaign to stop deforestation, and become tree huggers of sorts. You too can become a tree hugger, get involved in Environmental groups, support companies that are against deforestation. Read about it. Start Now. Ω

Washington College Dining Services

They Will Work With You to Fulfill Your Special Needs

Tanya Allen
Staff Writer

Do you have a problem with the food offered at the dining hall? Are you a vegetarian? Are there certain foods you can't eat because they'll give you hives, headaches, or convulsions? Are there some nights when you just can't find anything to eat except cereal? Reader, remember this: you go to a small school. Small schools have cafeterias that care. Washington College has been renowned for the quality of its food, but many of the special services it offers students are not commonly known.

There is a new note on the Napkin Board about the "W.C. Guarantee," which reads" "When at any board meal plan, you—our valued customer—are dissatisfied with the available entree selections, the WCDS Supervisor on Duty will provide you with an alternative entree." According to Lisa Travis, who supervises the meal plans, "If you ask for it and we have it, we'll get it for you." This has always been an unwritten law. If you can't find anything in the dining hall that suits you, you can go up to one of the supervisors and ask them to get you something else, whether it be an omelet, or a sandwich, hotdog, or particular type of bagel.

The WC dining service also takes care of students with food allergies—such as lactose intolerances, wheat intolerances, MSG sensitivity, hypoglycemia and diabetes, by working with them to create individual "special diets." For hypoglycemics who need to eat 6 small meals a day, the dining hall makes up "Food bags," which usually contain such staples as cheese and apples. To get on a special diet, a student must obtain a doctor's note and recommendations for what types of food he or she should and shouldn't eat. The Dining Service also has a Registered Dietitian available to discuss any dietary question a student may have.

For vegetarians the Dining Service tries to provide menu alternatives, such as beans and pastas, at every meal. If they put cold cuts out, for instance, they will also put out cheese. On September 22 the Hall will have "Vegetarian Worthington Night," on which students will be able to sample new vegetarian dishes.

There is a new carry out policy this year as well. The school will no longer use styrafoam sick trays. Instead, plastic carry-out containers were issued at orientation, and students can still get them by asking a supervisor. There is no more prepackaged plastic ware also, which will cut down on waste, and paper cups are being used. The dining service uses recycled, non-bleached napkins, washes out their trash cans instead of using plastic liners, and recycles all of their cardboard and tin. Lacking a compactor, they crush all of their cans by foot.

The Dining Service encourages students to have one-on-one communication with their supervisors and staff. They like students to bring in recipes, and to give the staff new ideas and feedback. Obviously, the Washington College Dining Service really does care about the Washington College students, which is one of the wonderful things about going to a small school. Ω tions, rather than the issues." North did this when confronted with an incriminating memo from his safe: "I am not denying that. I am simply saying it is not a document that I originated, that I solicited, that I encouraged or that I believe I ever talked to (late CIA Director Casey) about." That whole last bit is totally immaterial to the case at hand, of course, as the topic at that time was whether North was aware of certain conversations between General Singlaub and Casey. North has employed a tactic analogous to the military tactic of with a feint and thereby misdirecting the forces of the opposition.

Of course, Senators are not that easily duped: they're all seasoned politicians and know exactly what techniques are employed in evading unpleasant questions. But while they won the battle on most points, they lost the overall war. North successfully used a technique often employed by the executive branch of many countries; the big lie.

The DEA manual defines the big lie or repeated assertion as "based on the assumption that if you say something often enough, and loud enough, some people will believe it. The repeated denial of the crime reenforces the subject's ability to lie. We as interviewers (read interrogators) should not give the subject an opportunity to repeatedly deny the crime during our questioning."

Congress made exactly this mistake during the Iran-Contra hearings. North continually denied that the activities he carried out violated the Boland Amendment. His repeated denials had the effect of reinforcing his own ability to lie, and yielded the additional benefit of allowing himself to appear as an innocent victim of Democratic Congressional perception. Americans today are absolutely skeptical of the honesty and integrity of their politicians and civil servants. If Oliver North is elected to the Senate, Americans will have more to worry about than ever before. Ω

Merry Wives of Windsor to WC

Dan Garret Speaks About Being Falstaff

Lisa Swann
Staff Writer

Cunning ladies, madcap pranksters, and jealous husbands collaborate to entertain Washington College! The University of Maryland, Baltimore County's Shakespeare on Wheels will present The Merry Wives of Windsor on Saturday and Sunday, September 18 and 19, at 7:30 p.m. Falstaff and various other familiar Shakespearian characters will come alive in open air on the Martha Washington Square outside of the Gibson Performing Arts Center. Admission is free, and performances are interpreted for the hearing impaired.

The company will roll their traveling stage, complete with actors, scenery, and props, onto the square, recreating a type of theater common in the days of the Bard.

This marks the eighth successful season of Shakespeare on Wheels under the leadership of its founder, William T. Brown. A busy season awaits the actors, with 53 performances scheduled at 28 sites throughout Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia. The coveted part of Falstaff is claimed by Dan Garret, a native of the Eastern Shore. Dan says this will be his second performance at Washington College; he played a part in last year's Othello. As a skinny 26-year-old, playing Falstaff has been one of his biggest challenges, he says. The role has expanded him greatly as an actor—not literally, luckily. Dan really enjoys traveling around with the theater, but he especially enjoys acting in his home turf. As an added item of interest, Dan will play the bad guy in an upcoming Channel 2 series, "Homicide."

In this interpretation of "The Merry Wives of Windsor," director Sam Creedy emphasizes the comic qualities of love and jealousy. In the process, he creates an amazing evening of hilarious entertainment. All are encouraged to bring blankets and snacks and enjoy the fun.Ω

William Warner Honors Our Bay's Complexities

Andrea Nolan
Staff Writer

Last Friday, Washington College was host to a talk by William Warner, author of Beautiful Swimmers and recipient of the Pulitzer Prize. His talk was a treat to hear, for Mr. Warner spoke eloquently and frankly about the Bay, neither denying the Bay's problems nor acting as doomsayer. For those who missed his talk, I recommend picking up a copy of his book, if you haven't already read it. Anyone who lives on the Eastern Shore for any period of time should hang their head in shame if this book is not in their library.

Beautiful Swimmers focuses on the Atlantic Blue Crab, or Callenectes sapidus , which translated means (you guessed it) "the beautiful swimmer." By following the crab through the seasons and hence, following the waterman who fish the crab, Warner opens up a window to view, and in some ways understand, the complexities of the Chesapeake Bay.

The Bay is a living testimony to understatement. The Chesapeake is shallow, wide, and on most days calm and unassuming. While it is certainly beautiful when viewed, often it is not recognized as the strange and completely unique ecosystem—one of the seven wonders of the universe—that it is, right in our backyards.

The complexities of the Bay defy complete understanding. The Bay is both fragile and resilient. Our fertilizers, pollution, sewage, and development are deeply scarring and endangering the Bay. Meanwhile, we are fishing the Bay's crabs and oysters with greater fervor than ever. Obviously, this cannot go on for long. If it does, there will be no more crabs, certainly no oysters, and a large part of the magic of Maryland will be lost.

However, while the Bay is fragile, it is also resilient. This resilience was one of the main emphases of Warner's speech. If we limit our fishing practices, institute a moratorium on oysters, and correct our living practices, the Bay can "come back:" it has in the past, and it can again. We don't need to heal the Bay, we just need to allow her time to heal herself. We must remember that while living in Chestertown, on our little Chester River, we are as much a part of the Bay as the Blue Crab. We must be careful of how we treat our unique, if temporary, home.

For those of you that haven't read Beautiful Swimmers, go out and buy a copy today. Don't leave the Shore without having read this book. For all you incoming freshman that were forced to read it this summer, and may not have been overly enthusiastic about learning the differences between and sook and a jimmie, save your book. Get out into the bay, schlock around in the marshes of Eastern Neck Island, learn how to sail, row a boat backwards on the Chester, hang out with the watermen in Rock Hall, go to Betterton Beach (day or night), watch the migrating geese at Remington Farms, and eat a hell of a lot of crabs.

Then, when you are burned out on thesis writing (or comps studying), in your senior year, pull out your copy of Beautiful Swimmers and read it again. I promise you, you will wonder how you could have not loved this book. In the years to come you will find that you are glad that you lived, for a time, on the banks of the Chesapeake. Her name will sound like poetry. And you will find yourself glad to come back for alumni picnics, providing you have a chance to drive the familiar road to Betterton, sit on the beach, and look at the Bay. Ω salad bar. A popular SGA member slipped on a puddle of water, falling on his rear end. The entire cafeteria cheered and clapped.

Thane Glenn and his apostles were sitting at a back table, singing Phish songs. Another Senior – Christine Smith – was sitting at another table with her friends Andrea and Mary. Tanya Allen – still the proud owner of a Rainbow Trout pocketbook – ran to their table, all excited. "Guys! Guys!"

"What? What?" Christine, Mary and Andrea said.

"I just talked to Scott Koon," Tanya said, clapping. "And I asked him if I could do a humor/pseudo-gossip column for The Elm again, and he said, yeah, I could do one!"

"That's great!"

"Yeah, but, get this. He told me, 'NO FLIES.'"

"No Flies?!"

"Yeah. No flies. I'm not allowed to do Josephine again."

"Why doesn't he want you to?"

"I don't know...It probably has something to do with his political beliefs. Arg."

"Whatever happened to Josephine, anyway?" asked Christine.

"It's a long, long story," sighed Tanya, "Involving lots of mail and Rod Stewart. Too involved to go into now. But, what can I write about if I can't write about flies? I need an alter ego...I need to come up with a format in which I can make fun of people in which I can disguise people so they won't get mad when I put fun at them..."

"How about...you could write about...hamsters? Hamsters are a very popular campus pet."

"No, hamsters aren't mobile enough."

"Mobile...how about ghosts? Ghosts can be mobile."

"No, using ghosts could get weird, especially after last year. Agh! I just realized something horrible!"

"What?"

"I just realized – I'm a Senior! And that means, there's no one I have unjustifiable animosity against anymore!"

"Huh?" Mary – a sophomore – said.

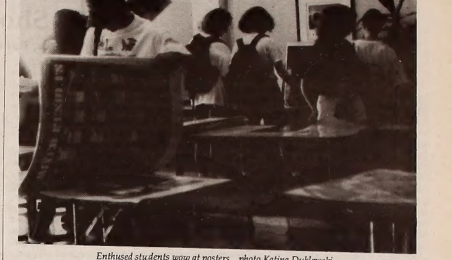
"I understand." Christine said. "You see, when you're a freshman you're afraid of everybody. Sophomore year you're still afraid of everybody, and plus you strongly dislike them. Junior year you hate everybody, because you're superior to them. Senior year, you know everybody. You can say "hi" to everyone and you don't want to make enemies—who wants to be remembered after graduation as a Senior bitch? All your unjustifiable animosity is gone!"

"And the last time I did a column was when I was a sophomore..." moaned Tanya. "And now I don't hate anyone, and that sort of thing is so important for this kind of column writing...I can't make fun of fraternity or sorority members, because I'm one of only, oh, 4 or 5 people living in the New Dorms who doesn't belong to a fraternity or sorority, and, geez – some of them are my friends! And I can't make fun of the administration or the SGA, because I've worked with them and realized they're really all good people....I can't make fun of Lit. House people, because I am one....I can't make fun of seniors, because I'm one of those, also....and I can't make fun of freshmen because, as a senior, I'm above all that. Geez does it suck being a senior! What am I going to write about?"

(Thane Glenn and his apostles were having a food fight. One of the apostles picked up a meatball and chucked it at another apostle. It missed the apostle and went flying, soaring, like a bird, high, overhead, and hit the disco ball. The disco ball crashed to the floor.

There was a blinding flash and suddenly the room was filled with water and)

"Christine? Ohmygod, Christine! You've just turned into a flounder!"



"Agh!" Christine shouted, "Tanya! You've just turned into an angelfish!"

"Agh!" Tarin Towers screamed from another table as she turned into a Portuguese Man-of-War. "Blub!" Thane Glenn and his apostles said as they turned into monk fish. Jeff Vahlbusch was surprised to find himself transformed into a catfish. President Trout was surpised to find himself turned into a . . . Ω

CAC Gallery Goes Commercial

This past Wednesday, the gallery area of the Casey Academic Center was mystically transformed into what some thought was the parking lot outside of the Dead show in Philadelphia this weekend. Well maybe you couldn't buy tie-dyes, but you could choose from an almost unfathomable number of posters with which to decorate your room including many of Jerry himself. Freshmen gawked in wonder, ready to charge home to Mom and Dad more posters than could cover the surface area of even the off-peach office of President Trout , more less their own measly room in Kent house. Upperclassmen, used to the annual phenomenon bumped past the crowds and overly-eager-to assist-you salespeople to get to class or to clear mothballs Career Center notices out of their mailboxes. Eclipsed by all of this hustle and bustle was the SGA Elections table, resigned to a less noticeable table usually occupyed by Faye and Ethel eating lunch.

Among the usual naked women and beer posters flocked to by the freshmen guys and the kitty cat photos acquired under order by every sorority on campus, there were a few unusual and tasteful posters available to adorn your room. Most unique were the computer generated posters which resolved themselves into three dimensional images after a few minutes of adapting your eyes to them. Many people filled the chairs conveniently provided to attempt this, some in frustration. Periodically, the murmur of the crowd would be interrupted by "I see it, I see It!" enthusiastically uttered by a new devotee of modern technology.

Also available were extra large British tube posters (that's 'subway' posters for all you non-cosmopolitan readers) which themselves would suffice to cover half of any room in Somerset. Savvy students selected such classic posters as Monty Python's Ministry of Silly Walks, the subtly colored Lord of the Rings print, and one entitled "In case you need an excuse to party." (a piece one would think Washington College could publish itself...)

By the end of the day Washington College students had completed the ever important decoration of their meager dormitory rooms even at the outrageous prices of between $10 and $20 for a glossy piece of paper destined to be thrown away or destroyed by duct tape and staples by next May. As for the unlucky placement of the Elections table, the SGA did manage to involve a sizable portion of the campus in voting, who knows, perhaps because of the very shoppers present?

Amt Publishes Second Book

Emilie Amt is anticipating the publication of her second book on medieval history. Her book, The Accession of Henry II in England, Royal Government restored, will be released by Suffolk publishing house Boydell & Brewer this November. The book will cost $63.00, and will be available in the WC Bookstore and Miller Library.

The book is based on Amt's doctoral dissertation, and is the product of nine years of study and research. Amt finished the book while on junior faculty leave in Oxford last year. "I'm very grateful to the college for the opportunity," Amt said.

The book deals with the transition between the reign of King Stephen of England (1135-54) and that of Henry II (1154-89), detailing the steps by which Henry negotiated peace and established the authority of government.

Amt said that the royal government had become inefficient during the reign of Stephen. Amt came to this conclusion by analyzing the royal financial accounts.

"This kind of work is based very largely on original sources," Amt said. "I did work with the Pipe Rolls, which are royal financial accounts. I computerized four years worth of this this original data, which has not been done before." Amt said that the patterns of revenue indicated that there had been "a massive collapse of the judicial system under King Stephen." Amt's book chronicles the rebuilding of judicial revenues which took place under King Henry.

Amt is the college's first Christian A. Johnson Fellow. The Christian A. Johnson Fellowship supports opportunities for junior faculty to conduct scholarly research. Her first book, Women's Lives in Medieval Europe: a Sourcebook, was published by Routledge in 1992.

Separate But Equal?

To begin this commentary I would like to introduce myself. I am Kate Sullivan, co-sports editor, and former varsity athlete. I remind those offended by the allegations I will make in this commentary that this is a commentary. This commentary reflects my own opinion. Nothing more, nothing less. As a woman and a former athlete at Washington I bring a unique perspective to the subject of which I am about to speak. I ask that all of you read this commentary with your own unique perspective in mind.

On the last page of the Washington College catalog, in very small print, there is the college's statement on the discrimination policy. It states that "Washington College admits qualified students of any race, sex, sexual preference, color, national or ethnic origin, to all the rights, privileges, programs, and activities generally accorded or made available to students at the school."

I believe that this policy has been violated by certain members of the Washington College Athletic Department. This violation is in individual circumstances and in some cases, may not have been purposeful. I am going to speak to one individual case, my own.

I played Varsity Softball last spring under new coach, Lanee Cole. I participated in the fall ball program and felt my performance to be more than satisfactory. Coach Cole was nothing but supportive of my playing and seemed confident in my abilities as a softball player. Note here that I came into last season with a .500 batting average, 33 stolen bases, only 2 fielding errors and was voted Most Valuable Player of my league. We went into the regular season and began our practices. I was still, at this point, one of the coach's prodigies. I was a dedicated player and she maintained her confidence in my abilities to compete on the Division III level.

Now we reach our problem. A couple of weeks prior to the first game I approached my coach about a personal problem. I did not want to attend practice one afternoon and went to her office to ask to be excused. She asked for a reason. I told her that her relationship that I had been in had ended. She asked why that had to do with softball. I reluctantly told her that I had been involved with a member of the softball team and that I did not feel that I was able to practice with her that afternoon. My coach preceded to inform me that lesbianism was against her religion. She then asked me if I felt guilty about being "that way."

My sexual orientation should not have been the dominating factor in our discussion. I ended up attending that practice and spending the season on the bench. I did not receive a Varsity letter at the end of the season , like all the other members of my team. It is my opinion that I was placed on the bench because the coach discriminated against me on the basis of my sexual orientation.

Quite frankly, being a lesbian had nothing to do with softball and the only time I ever brought it into the realm of softball was that day in her office when she wanted a reason why I did not feel I could attend practice. I am not alone in my opinion. There are members of the softball team who support me in this.

I feel that I should have the support of the entire school because of the statement made in the handbook. My situation, and possibly the situations of others like me, are blatently discriminatory. The policy of Washington College should be the policy of each individual at this school, student or faculty. We run by an honor code here and this honor code is not just academic. Upholding the discrimination policy should be a part of our honor code. The discrimination ploiicy is in effect so that each individual is treated with the same respect and courtesy. My coach did not treat me with the same respect with which she treated my fellow teammates. It is my right as a human being and as a member of this community to demand the same respect and the same courtesy. I demand the same opportunities as the rest of the women, heterosexual or lesbian, are afforded at Washington. I address this in this commentary, not to further my own cause, but to make this community aware. I ask all of us to examine ourselves and work in our own ways to make a difference.

Bullets Shoot Down Sho'women

Washington Falls, But Confidence Is Still On The Rise For 93-94

Scott Steinmuller
Staff Writer

On a Saturday of Fall breezes and bright sunshine the Sho'women of Washington engaged the Bullets of Gettysburg in a field hockey game.

This confrontation developed into a very closely played contest. Though in the end , the even play not being reflected,the Sho'women succumbed to the Bullets 3-1.

"I was pleased with how we played," Coach Feyerhem said. "Obviously, I would have preferred we won, but I was satisfied with our effort. Gettysburg thwarted a lot of our attempts, especially going up the middle. It was a very evenly played game.

"It was a fast-paced but clean game. Both teams played aggressively, especially in the second half. There were a couple of breakdowns, but we worked hard. The players were tired at the end," she added.

In the first half, Gettysburg displayed good ball movement, and immediately went on the offensive. The Bullets' style of play immediately created opportunities. They finally converted ten minutes into the game with a strong shot from the right side.

Following the Gettysburg goal the game grew tighter. The Sho'women began to exchange offensive threats with the Bullets but due to strong defense on the part of both teams the scored remained 1-0 for the next ten minutes.

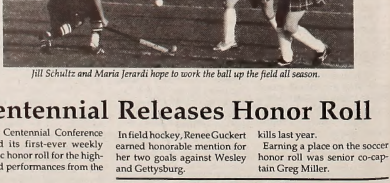
Then, around the 15:00 minute mark senior forward Liz Olivere passed the ball from the midfield up to fellow senior forward and co-captain Renee Guckert who broke away on a one-on-one with the goalie and scored unassisted to tie the score at one.

The remaining 15 minutes were evenly played with many chances for goals on both sides. However, only Gettysburg was able to capitalize with a goal with seven minutes remaining. The first half ended with a key save by freshman goalie Stephanie Self.

"We felt very much in the game at halftime," Feyerherm said. "We reinforced that. We also talked about emphasizing the sides of the field and circling up quicker around their free hits."

Going into the second half the Sho'women were down 2-1.

The second half reflected very closely the first half with its tight play. The only breakdown occurred with 12 minutes remaining when Gettysburg scored to up the score to 3-1.



"I think the third goal took the steam out of us," Feyerherm said. "Hard opportunities, bought us down a notch. Not in effort, but just in the fact that we saw it was harder to think we'd pull it off."

When asked if the outcome of the game brought about any second thoughts in using the 5-3-2 formation, coach Feyerherm responded, "No, in fact we had a couple of breakaways, and Renee (Guckert) scored on one. If anything it secured my belief in the system. We generated a lot more attack than we had in any other game."

"We need to improve on stopping the ball clean," Feyerherm said. "When we get the ball we need to control it better. We seem to either hold it too long and then get tackled or it gets taken away. Thirdly, we need to create breakaways down the side, the right side especially so as to bring the ball down the opponent's non-stick side.

"Gettysburg generated attacks so quickly. They received many more clean balls than we did and they capitalized on any mistake we made," she added.

The Sho'women's next game is on Saturday the 18th against the Alumni.

Jill Schultz and Maria Jerardi hope to work the ball up the field all season.

Centennial Releases Honor Roll

The Centennial Conference named its first-ever weekly athletic honor roll for the highlighted performances from the week.

Each sport from each school in the conference nominates a player to be named as Centennial Conference Player of the Week.

No Washington players earned the distinction of being Player of the Week last week, but three were named to their respective sport's honor roll.

In field hockey, Renee Guckert earned honorable mention for her two goals against Wesley and Gettysburg.

Following the Gettysburg goal the game grew tighter. The Sho'women began to exchange offensive threats with the Bullets but due to strong defense on the part of both teams the scored remained 1-0 for the next ten minutes.

WAC Notes

On the volleyball court, sophomore Jen Dixon earned a place on the Centennial honor roll for her games against Dickinson, Wilmington, St. Mary's, Notre Dame and at the Haverford Tournament.

Dixon led the Sho'women in kills last year.

Earning a place on the soccer honor roll was senior co-captain Greg Miller.

Miller, the starting goalie, earned his spot for his consecutive shutouts against Lebanon Valley and Lancaster Bible.

Miller went on to record a win over Albright.

Soccer Kicks Off With Best Start Since 1981

Paul Kenny
Staff Writer

The Washington College soccer team has launched its 1993 campaign with the best starting record of a Shoremen soccer team since 1981. Thus far, the Shoremen have posted three wins and two losses against some tough competition.

Last Thursday (September 9), the Shoremen defeated a strong Lancaster Bible team 3-0. Washington got off to a slow start but the momentum changed when senior co-captain Rory Conway drilled home the first of his two goal tally late in the first half.

Early in the second half, Conway scored his second goal off an assist from sophomore Geoff Bley.

Freshman Andrew King scored the Shoremen's third goal with his head off a 30-yard throw-in by Bley.

Bley's huge throw-ins have proven to be a big offensive threat for the Shoremen, with the ball oftentimes landing right in the opponents six-yard box.

Overall, Washington outplayed the home team.

"Our game plan started to come together in the second half," assistant coach Jack Shafer said. "That's when we put Lancaster away."

Head coach Todd Helbling credits the defensive unit for shutting out an offensively talented and aggressive opponent.

"It was a good overall performance compared to that of last weeks game against Lebanon Valley," Helbling said.

Over the weekend, the Shoremen travelled to Muhlenburg for a two- game tournament.

The Shoremen opened up with a 2-0 loss to Mulhenburg, one of the toughest opponents on their schedule. The Mules finished #17 in Division III last year.

Although the Mules controlled the game, scoring two spectacular goals, the Shoremen had their opportunities but found themselves unable to execute and put the ball in the net.

"Overall, our performance was much better than in previous years against the Mules," Helbling said.

In their second game of the tournament, the Shoremen defeated Albright 3-1. As in the Lancaster game the Shoremen got off to a weak start and found themselves down 1-0 at the end of the first half.

However, in the second half, the Shoremen came out strong and dominated.

Sophomore Sean McMahon opened the scoring, blasting a shot into the upper-right hand corner of the net.

Minutes later, freshman Jon Koziyal beat four Albright defenders to score the second goal for the Shoremen.

The third goal came with ten seconds left in the game when Geoff Bley launched another huge throw-in which was settled and kicked into the goal by freshman Andrew King.

"Playing back to back games is tough, but we knew that we were a more talented side than Albright", Helbling said.

Throughout the first four games, junior co-captain Greg Miller proved to be a force in goal for the Shoremen saving 23 of 26 shots. This is a very good statistic considering some of talented strikers he has had to face so far.

With a one day rest after the Mulhenburg tournament and some good games against tough competition under their belts the Shoremen took on Marymount. However, they were disappointingly defeated at home.

This game was frustrating for players and fans alike.

The Shoremen dominated the first half of play but found themselves unable to put the ball in the net, missing several easy opportunities. With 2:24 minutes remaining in the first half the scoring was opened when both teams scored "own goals" back to back.

Marymount came out suprisingly strong in the second half scoring a quick goal in the first few minutes.

The Shoremen loaded the offensive end of the field leaving their goal as an easy target when a Marymount defender got a lucky break and scored their third goal with 28 minutes remaining.

The Shoremen picked their heads up and put on a strong offensive spurt but were only able to score one more goal in the remainder of the game.

The goal was scored by Conway when he beat two defenders and pushed the ball by the Marymount goalie to complete a strong offensive move.

Sophomores Yoseph Bekele and Brian Rush played particularly well, although the team as a unit simply failed on the day to produce goals and ended up making mistakes which they can ill afford to make against the tougher teams on their schedule.

Helbling was pretty happy with the teams performance in the games to date.

"Being a young team we still make mistakes and winning games that we should win talent-wise, is tougher than it should be simply because we are still lacking experience playing together," he said.

Correction

Last week, The Elm made a mistake in saying the soccer team had not won at home in three years. The error was made in two places. In fact, the team won its only game in 1991 at home.

Jerardi Sticks With It

Senior Field Hockey Player Performs On The Athletic Field And In The Classroom

Matt Murray
Co-Sports Editor

Maria Jerardi would never be classified as a dynamic field hockey player who would be certain to get attention from fans in the stands.

"Maria is certainly not flashy, but she's a solid player," field hockey head coach Sarah Feyerherm said. "She's sort of your ultimate team player."

What makes Jerardi unique is the academic career she has led along side her four-year athletic stint.

She has been named to the College Field Hockey Coaches Association National Academic Squad for the last two years in recognition of her academic achievement.

Her academic resume is stacked with high scholastic marks and extracirricular activities.

Jerardi, a native of Columbia, Maryland and a graduate of Wilde Lake High School, carries a 3.89 grade point average while double majoring in International Studies and Chemistry which has also earned her a place in the Omicron Delta Kappa honor society.

Her extracirricular activities include involvement with Zeta Tau Alpha sorority, Crew, International Relations club,

Maria Jerardi

Hands Out, Target Tutoring, Student Government and several music ensembles. She's also been a peer advisor and is currently a resident assistant.

For Jerardi, field hockey has only been a piece of the puzzle—but it's been an important piece.

"I play because I love the sport," she said. "I love travelling with the team, and I love playing. It's a good release because I get to go out for a couple of hours and do nothing else. It's also been good because it helps me organize my time.

"I guess the big thing would be the people I've met through field hockey."

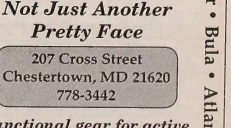
Jerardi is excited about field hockey so far this year, as the team stands at 1-1 after the Gettysburg game.

"I think the team is very promising this year," she said. "I think we play together really well as a team. It's been the most fun season I've had since freshman year."

Another thing which has made Jerardi's field hockey career special has been her rise from a bench player to a starter.

Even though she started as one of the last players on the depth chart on a nationally ranked team in 1990, she has taken the same hard work ethic from the classroom onto the athletic field.

"That's the advantage of a small school," she said. "You can go out and get to move up. It's been a long haul, but I can look back and tell another player on the bench now to stick with it."



To Jerardi, field hockey has also given her as strong a sense of pride as her academic pursuits.

"Other players are flashier, but I just go out and want to have fun," she said. "I've improved a lot (in field hockey). I can play at the college level with other people who can play hockey. When I was a freshman, I couldn't play very well at all."

Jerardi hopes her next accomplishment will be a win over Haverford on Tuesday.

Volleyball Spikes Competition To Go 8-3

Erika K. Ford
Staff Writer

After playing a week's worth of games, the Washington College volleyball team has already proven to be a formidable new member of the Centennial Conference. On Tuesday the Sho'women pushed past Dickinson to win three matches out of five against the Devils.

This victory improves their record to 8-3 overall.

Michelle Chin, sophomore co-captain, was pleased with the effort.

"We had a very tough time, but I think we played well," she said. "We had a few problems at the beginning that we were able to overcome when we stuck it out together.

"The freshmen were helpful too. When we really needed to score, we were able to work together and pull it off."

However, Chin feels the outing was not a complete success.

"Our coach tells us that right now we're only tapping about 50% of our potential," she said. "We're left with that other 50% to improve upon in upcoming games."

Playing the positions of both setter and hitter, Chin led the team in assists with 16. She also contributed 10 digs and eight kills for the night.

Freshman starter Tina Smith helped the Sho'women along the way. She had 10 digs and 11 assists.

Courtney Myers and Catherine Barrett also saw a lot of action on the court and were keys to the victory.

Junior co-captain Beverly Diaz also had a big impact on the match.

"She (Diaz) is very strong in every aspect," head coach Penny Fall said. "She is important because she plays a little bit of everything for us."

Diaz led the team in digs, kicking in 27, as well as in aces, with four for the evening.

Sophomore Jen Dixon, usually a big contributor on the team, filled in as usual. She had 24 digs and 15 kills in Tuesday's game.

Coach Fall said the the success and failure of the team will be affected by "how well we can get balls to setters to attack."

"We need to keep a positive attitude among the players," Fall added.

The September 8 Quad-Meet at Washington started the team's regular season. They defeated the College of Notre Dame 2-0, as well as St. Mary's, 2-1.

However, the Sho'women fell to Wilmington, 0-2.

On September 11 the team traveled to Haverford to play in a tournament with seven other colleges. They won five of the match-ups, beating Bryn Mawr, Worcester Poly. Tech., Notre Dame, Kutztown, and Wilmington. They lost to Catholic and Widener Universities.

The team's three games this week will be away. They'll travel to Catholic again, participate in a tournament at Scranton, and play Swarthmore, hoping to improve upon their 8-3 record.

Board Meets at Wye

LRPC Preliminary Report Considered

Scott Koon

The Board of Visitors and Governors held its first meeting of the 1993-94 academic year this past Friday and Saturday at the Aspen Institute's Wye Center in Queenstown.

On Friday, the Board convened a plenary session to consider the Preliminary Report of the Long Range Strategic Planning Committee. After Louis Goldstein called the second plenary session to order, President Trout began by acknowledging that some faculty have reservations about the plan, saying that there is "understandable nervousness among faculty that the many academic items [in the plan] are things they must do, rather than things they must discuss." Trout also emphasized that, while many committees and constituencies within the College will be consulted before final revisions are made, only the trustees "will be asked to approve this in a formal way."

Dean Wubbels then summarized the plan for the Board, and Gene Hessey explained its financial implications.

The floor then opened up for discussion. Several attenders noted that the plan could constitute an important part of the upcoming capital campaign planned to commence next spring.

Another topic of discussion was what could be done to make the College more attractive to prospective students. Wubbels said that in recent years the College had lost ground in markets where it has traditionally performed well, notably among Maryland students and students from private schools.

Dean McIntire stressed the need to improve student life at the College. She said that if the College reached the plan's goal of raising the retention rate by 10 percent, the College would have 50 more students enrolled than it does at the present.

Also at issue was the question of what could be done to make more students willing to pay the full bill for four years of schooling at Washington College.

Since the plan calls for improving the quality of incoming students while simultaneously increasing enrollment, it focuses on increasing the attractiveness of academic programs as the primary means to achieve these goals.

By implication, the College's academic allure must increase relative to its athletic appeal. The plan states that "38% of the 1992 matriculants expected to participate in a var-

Trout on WC's Future

Amy Peterson

Wednesday evening, President Trout held an open forum with students to present his views of Washington College's future and to respond to student concerns. While the turnout of about fifteen students and several administrators was disappointing, Trout provided those attending with highlights of the Long Range Planning Committee's Preliminary Report, the data prepared for the Middle States reaccreditation and an opportunity to address any "burning concerns."

President Trout addresses the concerns of students

Trout opened with remarks describing the extensive self-study in which the college has been engaged for the last year. The Middle States evaluation of the college takes place every ten years in order to assist in the reaccreditation of WC as an institution. "In one sense it is a huge nuisance, in another sense it is really illuminating," said Trout, pointing out that the nine committees formed examined everything about the college. "Well, maybe not everything; everything is a lot of stuff." However the huge amount of data collected through the process "generated a knowledge of [Washington College] more comprehensive than every before in its 212 year history," claimed Trout.

Trout then discussed the preliminary report that the Long Range Planning Committee (LRPC), released last week. While praising certain aspects of the College today, Trout quoted the report's assertion that "stasis impairs our future." He endorsed the major plans for growth proposed by the committee which he feels will create a more vital campus and a more meaningful degree. The growth discussed by Trout addressed increasing enrollment, augmenting faculty and staff positions in order to strengthen existing departments on campus, and raising endowment funds.

Trout hopes that the size of Washington College will increase from its current 850 undergraduates to 1150 within ten or eleven years. Breaking the one thousand barrier was cited as an important step in attracting quality students to WC. Trout pointed out that only less than 6% of entering students nationwide are interested in attending an institution with a student body less than 1000.

A larger student body would provide WC with "the critical mass to do what we do well." More students would enable WC to better distribute students among majors. Currently 84% of student are majoring in seven of 21 majors offered at WC. More students

Sunday Evening Vandalism

Two male students imbibed large quantities of beer and terrorized campus Sunday night.

The first incident, a fire alarm pulled in the Cullen Dorms (Worcester - Somerset - Wicomico), happened at approximately 7:55 p.m. on September 19. While falsely reporting a fire is a criminal offense reportable to the State Fire Marshall, no suspects have been charged.

Five minutes later, at 8 p.m., two students entered Caroline House and acquired the dry-chemical fire extinguisher. They stormed into the first open room and coated it thoroughly with the yellow dusty substance contained in the extinguisher. The two residents of the room were present and the perpetrators sprayed both women in the face.

After spraying under at least one door on first floor and coating the front half of the hallway, the two proceeded to the second floor and sprayed the remainder of the hall's contents and under residents' doors.

WC: Less Filling, Tastes Great

These are terribly interesting times to be at Washington College. While all the talk of reforming the curriculum, increasing the College's endowment and growth in the size of the student body has stirred up considerable controversy and debate among nearly every constituency of the College, one important group has not really been heard from: the student body.

Are the opinions of Washington College students worth listening to? Most assuredly. A fair proportion of Washington College students do show that they have strong convictions, and these students are often quite willing to exert a lot of time and labor to further their agendas. In my three years at Washington College, I've had the honor of meeting some very dedicated and meritorious young people. Some Washington College students have accomplishments which are virtually superhuman, and these students are a credit to this institution and this nation.

Alas, these students are not representative of the campus as a whole. Faculty and administrators at Washington College sometimes make the mistake of assuming that these same overachievers are what might be called "student leaders."

While some might be perfectly capable of leading, they lack an essential attribute which leaders must have in order to be leaders: a group of followers. There are no real of the leaders of the WC student body, because each student pretty much does as they please independent of leadership. The best that official student leaders can do is to serve, not lead. There are no leaders who determine an agenda, because the agenda is determined for them.

But what issue is the most important to more Washington College students than any other? What do we really care about? There have been many surveys and questionnaires circulated as the College has undergone the arduous self-examination of the past couple of years, yet none have really touched on the core concern of the plurality of students here.

That issue, of course, is beer. Wine, liquor, alcoholic beverages in general: these issues are also important to the student body here. But when push comes to shove, it is beer which is the first love of WC students.

On most issues, the student body appears to have the patience of Job. Decrepit laundry machines, bad plumbing, tuition hikes, noise on campus, a communist takeover of the student newspaper — all are bourne without official complaint. Oh, sure, folks love to gripe and complain to their friends, but that is usually as far as it goes.

But take away their beer, or even make it slightly inconvenient for them to consume beer, and some students go absolutely ballistic. By every conceivably measure, this is the hottest issue on campus. Restrictions on drinking always provoke the most letters to the editor in this paper, the most heated debates in the SGA and the most lively Dining Hall discussions.

Is it acceptable to charge money for entrance to parties where alcohol is served? Will kegs and hard alcohol ever be allowed back on campus? What is the right way, the acceptable way, to serve alcohol to minors? These are the most controversial issues on campus today. In the minds of many students questions of larger importance to the College and Chestertown pale in comparison.

At least, that's been my experience on campus here. The College itself is incredibly tolerant of underage drinking, but of course whenever abuses occur, some sort of crackdown inevitably follows. Students should simply keep calm and realize that all crackdowns eventually come to an end. So maybe you only get to play cops with three friends instead of sixteen. It's not the end of the world.

On the Advantages of Transferring to Washington College

Washington College and Franklin Pierce College. It would seem like a most unlikely comparison. Normally, one would not expect to find themselves in a situation of having to compare the two. However, early this summer as I was considering transferring, I found myself in just that situation. In fact, I ended up spending a good portion of my summer comparing and contrasting the various fine points of nearly every aspect of these institutions. Now, being the resident expert on Franklin Pierce College, I am here to offer my testimony on the many differences between Washington College and Franklin Pierce College, as well as an inside look at the process of transferring from one college to another.

Franklin Pierce College is located in southwestern New Hampshire in the town of Rindge. My biggest complaint has always been that while it is a pleasant little community, it is too small, isolated, and boring. When I list this as my main reason for transferring I often get sarcastic responses such as, "Oh yeah, and now you're in Chestertown!" However, what these people do not realize is that Rindge makes Chestertown look like a booming metropolis. That is to say that being situated in an actual town rather than suburban Rindge is a great improvement.

Campus life is also an important aspect to consider. Actually, the two campuses function in a similar fashion. There are the usual speakers and lectures that students line up for in advance hoping to maximize the quality and diversity of their education, (yeah right!). There is also the occasional comedian and/or band that manages to keep people occupied for a few hours, if nothing else.

Perhaps the main difference is the lack of fraternities at Franklin Pierce. This makes for a confused and disorganized party scene. This also means that most of the parties are held in the halls of the dormitories as opposed to a more festive location. Also, fraternities seem to provide a vehicle for students to get to know one another; they are particularly useful for freshmen and transfer students to meet the rest of the student body. Without this social facility, there tends to be less structure to campus social life.

Founded in 1963, Franklin Pierce is a relatively young school, thus the campus itself has not been developed to its fullest potential. For example, there is only one main academic building. Being in the same building for all of your classes makes for a monotonous atmosphere, and is just a little too much like high school. Washington College on the other hand has a beautiful, well-developed campus, appearing to be much larger than its enrollment of 850 students would suggest. It is quite unique for

I know with all this stuff going on with Michael Jackson, that it's not the hippest topic, but let me turn to the other musical genius of the 1980s (not including the second coming of Steven Tyler and Aerosmith) and tell you that Madonna has to die. This is an inescapable truth. I know we all have to die, but I mean she has to die soon. And she must know this.

The Material Girl is not getting younger and as most of the women at this school can attest to, or I'll do it for them, time really takes its toll on the second sex. Madonna must realize this, and being that she is not Sean Connery or Paul Newman, getting old is going to mean more and more people are not going to want to look at her body parts.

I know she sings and acts, well she does dance at least, but honestly, she can't keep up doing the things she is doing. She has become the Chuck Yeager of Pop, pushing the envelope to its extremes. The only thing left for her to do is freeze this image of her in our minds and by that I mean Madonna must die.

No one has proven better at marketing Madonna than herself, so perhaps it is talking out of turn for me to make this declaration. She has over and over again redefined and recreated herself, surpassing anyone's expectations about her longevity. Sharon Stone, that incredible flash in the pan, and other crotch-peddlers, will only be 'ass'terisks in encyclopedias while Madonna will have sociologists discussing those metallic pointy things she wears on her breasts and have college students writing essays on the social ramifications of her picture book for upper level American Studies classes.

But the Kennedy mystique lives on because he didn't live long enough to create any really big Kennedy mistakes. (He was gonna pull us out of Vietnam, he really was!) And Marilyn put on a little weight towards the end of her short stay, but that's not the image we have of her. That's why she will always be Marilyn Monroe and never Martha Raye or any of the Golden Girls.

The only other possibility options for the former Mrs. Penn is that she become a mother and devote her life to that. She could get involved with Hillary Clinton and that Edelman chick and help save this nation's youth. She would have to give up her glamorous exhibitionism and use her nipples for something other than dripping hot wax on. We would remember her as a modern day Saul. And she probably could make some money off of that.

But if she doesn't want to become a mother, the only other career choice Madonna can make, not with standing another movie or album, would be death. I am not advocating anyone go out and off Madonna, I;m sure she is one step ahead of any of us. Leave it up to her, she has brought herself to the top of her profession without anyone's help. Art requires sacrifices and sometimes the artist must suffer. Shanghai Surprise and Body of Evidence make it clear that Madonna is

Yeltsin Dissolves Legislature

Paul Briggs

By the time you read this column, it will probably be out of date. The former Soviet Union is once again spinning out of control.

Here's the situation as of 2:00 AM Eastern time, September 22, 1993. Russian President Boris Yeltsin has officially disbanded the Congress of People's Deputies and called for parliamentary elections in December. The Parliament, meanwhile, has not only ignored Yeltsin's order to disband, but has officially impeached him. Alexander Rutskoi, Yeltsin's ex-Vice President, has declared himself "Acting President."

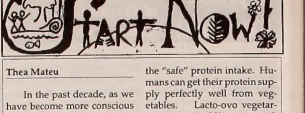
Of course all of this is illegal, according to the Russian Constitution, which, like most of Yeltsin's opponents in Parliament, dates back to the Brezhnev era. It remains to be seen, however, if anybody is actually going to enforce the law against either side. For the moment, The Army seems to be either supportive of Yeltsin or neutral. No mass demonstrations have yet taken place in support of either side. It is improbable that the Russian people will remain silent for long; my guess is that before too long Red Square will be packed.

President Clinton, meanwhile, has spoken with Yeltsin and is backing him on the condition that parliamentary elections are held as scheduled. It is generally agreed that if elections take place, the ex-communists who currently dominate the Parliament will be thrown out, but what sort of people would replace them is anybody's guess.

Chris Wallace, sitting in for Ted Koppel on ABC's Nightline, interviewed Alexander Rutskoi. Rutskoi stated that since assuming "office" he has dismissed several Cabinet officers, including the Foreign Minister, and appointed people to replace them. He did not say whether the people he "dismissed" have actually left their jobs. My suspicion is that they are still at work as though nothing had happened.

Right now the smart money seems to be on Yeltsin coming out on top. The executive organs of the Government seem to be supporting him. But since he has disbanded Parliament he can't do anything more, unless he sends in the police or the army to drag out the deputies and arrest them. He may do that, or he may simply reduce them to irrelevance by governing the country as best he can without them until the elections.

Whoever eventually wins, the current political chaos doesn't bode well for Russia's future. If the Congress of People's Deputies succeeds in ousting Yeltsin, reform may grind to a halt, and the Russian people will be deprived of their only truly representative government official. If Yeltsin wins, his political future will be tainted by his disbanding of Parliament and unconstitutional rule by decree. However necessary his actions may be, they set a dangerous precedent in a country that has never known democracy until very recently.



This crisis may harm the Russian body politic in other ways. On many occasions, including the Moscow coup attempt two years ago, the Russian people have stood up for change and democracy. In return they have received a collapsing economy, a ruined standard of living, and promises that someday, years from now, life will get better. The sight of Yeltsin wrangling with the deputies may inspire determination in them to press for additional change, but it is more likely to inspire apathy and despair.

There is also the question of the local governments of the Russian Federation. Many of these feel free to try new economic solutions without consulting the central government in Moscow. For example, Kalmykia, a small state on the Caspian Sea south of Astrakhan, is experimenting with something akin to a corporate state. If the ex-communist deputies in Parliament succeed, they will have a hard time enforcing their will on these regions.

Unless Yeltsin wins an absolutely crushing victory, the central government can only emerge weaker and more discredited. Nationalist and secessionist tendencies are flourishing in many areas, including Tatarstan, the Caucasus, and the Russian Far East.

Increasingly, local leaders will be asking themselves whether they wish to be at the mercy of what they perceive as an unstable and largely unrepresentative government. A sudden, catastrophic breakup

In the past decade, as we have become more conscious of our planet's needs, we have also started to worry about the importance of good nutrition to our health.

Vegetarianism has become more popular as a natural solution. There are several categories of vegetarianism. The most strict or extreme group are categorized as vegans and eat no meat, fish or seafood, eggs or dairy products. This is a very healthy and environmentally friendly way of life. Many people also have ethical reservations about killing animals for food. Considering the many pesticides, hormones and drugs animals are exposed to, vegetarianism appears to be a healthy alternative.

Nutritional studies are largely sponsored by meat, egg and dairy industries. These are vital industries to our nation's economy and thus can manipulate the information they want the public to receive. Government data on our protein requirements, have generally been gathered from studies of amino acid patterns of rats. When the studies were performed on humans, researchers took the highest figures and doubled them to yield the "safe" protein intake. Humans can get their protein supply perfectly well from vegetables. Lacto-ovo vegetarians, as you could have guessed, eat eggs and dairy products. Some vegetarians eat fish and seafood but mainly vegetables.

The reasons for these practices are also varied. Many people adopt vegetarianism for ethical reasons. Not only are the animals slaughtered but they live in inhumane conditions. Most vegetarians also tend to look for natural products. This, too, is a new trend that is gaining popularity. You can see this with all the new health food stores and natural product stores which are cropping up all over America.

One problem that we're often not aware of is that at times these products with natural/healthy sounding names aren't much different nutritionally from their cheaper supermarket counterparts. The result is, whether you're eating naturally for health reasons or for ecological reasons, reading labels is a must. Many products have misleading names or notices. But, if you are aware of his fact and search around carefully, you can find tasty and environmentally friendly (this includes packaging) products. Start Now. Ω

Holdouts and Handshakes

Mark Phaneuf

As many of you know, they finally agreed. They bridged a once unfathomable chasm, ending what to have been drawn out for an eternity. Two sworn enemies were able to summon up enough common sense and foresight and arrive at an amicable settlement. A few signatures and a handshake and peace was brought to . . . Dallas. Yes, Jerry Jones, owner of the World Champion and, more recently, the 0 an 2 Dallas Cowboys, and Emmitt Smith, the league's leading rusher for the last two seasons, came to terms which put Emmit back in uniform to the tune of 14 million dollars over four years. The issue that proved so divisive to the locker room was put to rest, allowing the team to concentrate on the playing field. Somewhat lost in all of this hullabaloo of the monumental and historical agreement last week, was another agreement, albeit with less direct effect on the NFC East. This was the Middle East Peace Pact signed by Yassar Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin.

You may ask yourself, who are these clowns? Who do they play for? Were they the all-stars of the Barcelona Dragons of the World Football League? Nope, unfortunately not. The one is a cute and lovable terrorist and the other is a grizzled old war veteran. One is the leader of Israel and the other is the leader of the PLO, whatever that stands for. I'm not really sure which one of these guys is which and, honestly, who really cares? But, basically, these two groups have been fighting since God knows when, their entire respective existences have been dedicated to wiping each other off the face of the map. It has been a fight over Credit? We don't need no stinking credit!

So today I unofficially heard that my senior thesis was approved. I'm glad — I probably would have transferred if I were to take an exam in order to graduate. It seems unfulfilling to me, and I realize that some people prefer comps over theses — but I can't see it.

Since I'm writing a poetry portfolio, I was amused to read the following in A Plan for the Third Century: Extending Tradition Through Innovation • Preliminary Report of the Long-Range Planning Committee: "The most distinctive academic programs of the College are the creative writing program centered at the O'Neill Literary House, the general writing program, and the Senior Obligation, but the latter two programs are not very visible in our literature."

I don't know who decided that the writing program was so hot. Most people have problems doing the Sophomore Writing Obligation in order to graduate, much less during the sophomore year.

As for the senior obligation, most majors require a written thesis of some kind; the kinds are varied and reflect their department for the most part. For example, the business thesis is a written document employing research techniques exploring marketing, management or other aspects of the business management major.

The drama thesis entails directing or designing a theatrical production, complete with a director's notebook detailing dramaturgy, theory, vision and other things about which the major has spent four years learning. The drama major can instead choose to do a written thesis.

Art majors likewise have the option, with departmental approval, of mounting an art show displaying original work in the media of their choice, in combination with a comprehensive art history exam. Art history majors simply take two days of exams. The thesis-writing option does not exist for art majors.

Here's where it gets sticky. What follows is the rundown for the rest of the departments, as per the 1992-1994 Washington College Catalog: American Studies: AMS seminar course, thesis; Biology: senior seminar, and option of comps, lab research project, or written thesis; Chemistry: seminar and lab project with "thesis-quality report"; Economics: research thesis; History: research thesis or honors thesis (preceded by a junior-year course in Historical Method); Humanities: thesis or comps; International Studies: research thesis; Mathematics and Computer Science: thesis and completion of problems in mathematical journals; Music: thesis or performance; Philosophy and Religion: thesis on history of philosophy or special topic; Physics: Journal Club, oral examinations; Political Science: research thesis; Psychology: senior seminar and research project; Sociology: research thesis.

I left a couple things out: Modern Language and English majors must take comps unless their GPA is high enough (3.4 and 3.5, respectively) to write a thesis; they can then choose. English majors then have the option of a creative thesis: a portfolio of poetry or short stories, or a novel.

Why does the English department, one of WC's largest majors, not encourage writing? Isn't this a writing school? Don't we have a whole building just because of that? Are we saying that this is 'sort of' a writing school, but only for those who

Everyone in the Washington College population had just been transformed into aquatic sea creatures. Chaos reigned. Christine Smith, (who had just been turned into a flounder,) screamed "Ack! I don't know how to swim!" Mike Frey (who had been turned into a swordfish) and the rest of the members of the Washington College swim teams immediately hired themselves out as swimming instructors, charging $10.00 a lesson for every water-illiterate student. The deans immediately scheduled a meeting for the porpoise (sorry) of getting all the R.A.'s together to inform them of how to deal with the very cod (sorry again) situation. The R.A.'s immediately scheduled hall meetings to get their residents together so residents could have the chance to carp (sorry once more) about their feelings. All the residents ditched their hall meetings. All the students instead swam en masse to the quad of the New Dorms, which even underwater still looked remarkably like the setting of Sesame Street. Haus, (who had turned into a grouper) swam to the top of Dorchester and cried out to the crowd, "I believe that since we've all just been turned into aquatic sea creatures, we-the-students should depose the entire administration and elect Mark Murphy to be the King and ruler of Washington College!" All of the students shouted "Whaoo! Mark Murphy! Mark Murphy! Yay Mark Murphy! Whaoo!" Mark Murphy, who had been turned into a proud, noble guppy, swam slowly up to the top of Dorchester, floated next to Haus, looked down at the cheering students (packed into the quad like sardines,) smiled his great big old smile, (or at least as great big old a smile as a guppy can give) and said southerly, "Well, aaaallll right!"

Tanya-the-Angelfish and Christine-the-Flounder looked out at the crowd from the windows of their Talbot suite. "My," said Tanya, some of the men look very nice as fish...." John Phoebus, for example, had been turned into a quite gorgeous Snook (Centropomus undecimalis) fish. Max Walton swam around as a proud Pompano (Trachinotus carolinus). The twins Skip Gibson and Harrison (note: great mystery of WAC: whether the name "Harrison" is Harrison's first name, last name, or middle name. No one will ever really know.) had turned into a couple of the most marvelous Mutton Snappers (Lutjanus analis) anyone had ever seen....

"Wow," said Christine-the-Flounder, "With all these men transformed into newly to-die-for-looking fish, maybe there's good things ahead for the Washington College women!"

"Yeah!" Said Tanya-the-Angelfish. "At the beginning of this semester the Junior and Senior classes had such a lack of prime breeders that the women kept having to have to jump Freshmen boys, but now. . . ."

"Now there's hope." Christine-the-Flounder said.

"Uh, guys?" Sue Czechowski—a Biology major and leader of minnows said, swimming up to the two, "Sorry to break it to you, but..."

"But what?"

"Fish don't have sex."

"They don't have...."

"No. Fish copulation consists of female fish emitting eggs, which fall to the bottom of the sea, and then male fish swimming above the eggs, depositing sperm."

"Ew!"

Mark Phaneuf, (this carp nobody knows because he was abroad last year) swam up to Tanya-the-Angelfish, looking confused. "Uh," he said, "I could be wrong on this, but don't some fish eat other fish?"

"See, fish DO have sex!" Christine said triumphantly.

"What?" Mark said, confused.

"Don't mind her," Tanya said, "And geez, you're right... fish generally live on other fish! I hope no one else realizes this! Oh, dear!" she said, looking at her friends in horror, "Are all of us at WAC going to become...cannibals?"

"And..." Mark said, still sounding perplexed, "Has anybody thought about the Sho'men?"

(At this same moment the Chestertown Sho'men were beginning to notice that Washington College had just been turned into an underwater community full of large, mutant fish. The Sho'men began to smack their lips. The "Welcome back, Washington College students!" banner in the middle of High Street flapped forebodingly in the soft bay breeze....)

Phi Sigs Donate Their Time to Chestertown

Banned Campus Organization Seeks to Promote Goodwill Downtown; Bloom and Maxcy Speak Out

John K. Phoebus

Last Sunday, September 19, the brothers of Phi Sigma spent an hour and a half cleaning up downtown Chestertown. This effort marks the beginning of a community service project they plan to conduct every six to eight weeks. According to President Bill Bloom, in the past the Sigs have been actively involved with volunteer work in the town, both through Hands Out and on their own. The Sigs contemplated adopting a highway but Bloom settled on "unofficially adopting downtown Chestertown" to bolster town relations. Bloom said that since many members of Phi Sigma live in town "This is just our way of giving something back in return."

In the cleanup itself, twelve trash bag armed Sigs canvassed lower High, Water, Queen and Cannon Streets. Approximately ten residents stopped the students to thank them for their effort. Father Peterson, of Sacred Heart Parish, praised them as an "ambitious group of young men." While many residents were just interested in the brothers cleaning their backyard, others were sincere in their thanks.

Phi Sigma has not been an officially recognized fraternity on campus for five years. The Sigs are descended from the national fraternity Phi Sigma Kappa, which evolved into a local fraternity, later to be removed from campus for various reasons. Bloom feels they have been able to retain a remarkable degree of organization for an 'underground' fraternity. He points out that the fraternity is a distinctly different group than the one which was thrown off campus. They currently exist as a paradox for the administration because they are unrecognized, yet a visible student organization. However, the administration has taken steps to discuss this paradoxical existence. The Student Affairs committee of the Board of Visitors and Governors discussed at their Saturday meeting steps WC can take to "deal with" off campus fraternities, recommending the issue for further investigation.

The people in your neighborhood do their part to keep the Fountain Park neat and tidy.

In an interview with the Elm, Dean Maxcy commented that "underground groups have come to the attention of the college community and local community because of a couple of events that occurred off campus last semester." [This reference is in part to another fraternity's farm party at which several students were injured in a fight. While the Sigs in the past have had farm parties, they have held none this year and none are planned.]

Maxcy says that "if members of these underground groups are willing to be identified they will be represented before [the Student Affairs] committee." Maxcy said they are currently unrecognized by the College because they have chosen not to follow steps to become an official fraternity. While Bloom understands that the procedure needed to become legitimate, he feels "that financially there are many benefits to being off campus." Dues for the Sigs are currently approximately one fifth of dues of fraternities recognized by the College.

Despite their questionable existence in the mind of administrators, the Sigs are a dynamic, visible group to the students on campus. Phi Sigma Chris "Topher" Head says, "I believe that we are sincerely interested guys...the kind of guys that arrange their sock drawers - but don't wear socks." Despite the jovial nature of some members, Bloom and other brothers are serious about preserving the existence of Phi Sigma. Whether the administration will take steps to prevent the remains to be seen.

poor judgment of the perpetrators. He told the Elm that "it was very careless of these individuals to disrupt campus life and to displace dorm residents in any period of time."

Exiting the building, the two ran to third floor Minta Martin, opening doors, throwing things and wreaking general havoc. After thoroughly disturbing the residents, the suspects began wrestling with each other in the hallway, at which time the nightwatchman on duty caught up with them.

They confronted him and ran out the door. People at the scene had identified one suspect and investigations led to the identity of the other.

Security is continuing the investigation, and the All-Campus Judiciary will try the suspects. Assault victims in Caroline may also prosecute criminally.

Other Security news:

- More information has come in about the harassing phone calls being received by female students. Any other victims of these calls should contact Roderick at ext. 7810 to further the investigation.
- Another bicycle has been stolen from campus. The bike left unlocked at Cardinal dorms, has a value of $350. Roderick reminds all bike owners to secure their vehicles.

- A fight was broken up in Minta Martin on September 18 at 12:55 a.m. The 'domestic dispute' caused a disturbance in the stairwell and the couple was told to keep it down.
- Tampering with an outside doorway on second floor Dorchester was reported on September 21. It has not yet been determined whether the incident was an attempted break-in or a malicious destruction of property.

would enable WC to increase revenue in a capacity to justify the hiring of an additional professor for our smaller majors. Seven majors are presently staffed by only two full-time faculty. The prospect of a student considering an art history major where eight or nine of the required courses are taught by the same professor was dubbed "pedagogically bogus" by Trout. Greater enrollment would provide educational variety and versatility within small majors.

On the subject of faculty and staff growth, Trout suggested increasing faculty by twenty positions and staff by thirty.

Two "R"s focused on by Trout were "recruiting" and "retention." The retention rate at WC stands at 62%, the percentage of students who graduate in four years. Trout hopes to increase our retention rate by ten percent in four years. Of the students who leave WC, Trout categorized into thirds: one third fail out, one third leave because of location or size and one third for financial reasons.

There is not much WC can do about location, as Trout said, "we can't move Chestertown to Baltimore." To address financial related student attrition, WC is working on raising the scholarship endowment. By putting more students on scholarship as opposed to financial aid, the college risks less money since scholarships may be revoked depending on academic achievement.

Trout bragged that the average board scores of the freshman class had risen to 1100 from less than 1000 six years ago. The bottom 10-15% of the freshman class is the risky portion for the college and Trout hopes to attract improvement in this segment of the entering class.

Recruitment at Washington College will also improve as the school grows and as the national demographic surge in eighteen year old reaches college age. To assist in "selling" Washington College Trout said the college is considering hiring an outside group to handle WC's publications and marketing. [Editor's note: last Saturday, the Board of Visitors and Governors voted to contract Communicorps to perform this task for Washington College.]

Increasing the endowment of WC is another major goal of Trout's. When he arrived here in 1990, Trout said the college's endowment stood at $19 million. It has risen to the current level of $30 million and Trout hopes to raise another $2 million. Due to the state of the economy, interest rates are low resulting in a lower return on endowment than expected. Trout feels WC must tap the endowment funds to performa "jumpstarting of the institution." Spring of 1994 is set as a kickoff for a development fund raising campaign. By tapping the endowment funds, WC would invest and wager on its future. Trout hopes the Board accepts this plan of action. "We must grow or die."

Trout then briefly spoke of other campus news. He praised WC's entry into the Centennial Conference. The Hodson Hall renovation project is slated for completion next year. Construction of the Daly Hall building and renovation of Bill Smith begins in June 1994. Trout approved of the Student leader and Alumni retreat held last weekend at which plans for next February's Birthday Ball, and October 30's Casey day were discussed.

President Trout then opened the floor to questions. Of the remarkably few students (less than fifteen) attending, even fewer had questions. John Phoebus inquired about the type of student that Washington College sought to attract and if this would change in the expansion of the College. Trout responded that WC seeks to "attract the student that has the personal characteristics to take advantage of the theme of involvement." This student would not be passive. Trout pointed out the improved board scores of students.

Regarding tuition costs, Trout said he hoped students understood that tuition must increase to keep pace with costs. He pointed out that the net tuition revenue (the revenue received by WC after financial aid has been paid) has stayed flat for the last five years. Increasing net tuition revenue is an important goal and can be realized by the shift to scholarship awards in place of many financial aid awards. This is dependent on the scholarship endowment which Trout hopes will increase.

Dr. June Costin, advisor for the Newman club, inquired about WC's responsibilities in meeting Americans with Disabilities Act requirements. Trout pointed out that the renovation of Hodson Hall and planned work on Bill Smith include handicapped access. Daly Hall will be fully handicapped accessible. The total cost to WC of compliance with this federal act will be $850,000.

Bill Dudich asked what Trout planned to do to improve student life. Trout suggested that perhaps the SGA would be better able to address these concerns with the greatly increased budget they now have. Trout expressed his "faith and confidence" in Dennis Berry to assist in enriching student life. Ω

Alumni and Student Leaders Gather in Weekend Retreat

Casey Day and Birthday Ball Planned

This Saturday, while the Board met at Wye, many of the "movers and shakers" of the campus met in a retreat with the Alumni Council to discuss the upcoming year. Coordinated by Pat Trams, Director of Alumni Relations, the alumni were interested in "what student programs are important and how [they] can help realize them." Attending were members of the SGA, class officers, and other student leaders. Among various issues discussed, two major events were planned at this meeting.

For this Fall, Betty Brown Casey's vision of a "Casey Day," in which students volunteer time to the college, was realized. Sophomore Class President Mark Reyero offered his leadership in initiatine a relandscaping project along the campus and Washington Avenue. Covering the area from the fire lane to the north entrance to campus, the project will solicit student volunteers to give "Casey Time" in beautifying this area of campus. Alumni will raise money for the necessary tools and supplies. Also promising support are members of the Chestertown community. These resident feel grateful for the many efforts college students have made in assisting town projects. This is viewed as a way to pay back Washington College for their past help. Casey in her CAC dedication speech hoped for just this union of students, town residents and alumni. Additionally, Reid Raudenbush, Director of the Physical Plant, and Christian Havemeyer, Chair of the Board's Buildings and Grounds Committee, pledged their assistance for this project. Casey Day will take place during the morning hours of Saturday, October 30.

Looking ahead to the Spring, the participants in the retreat planned for next semester's Washington's Birthday Convocation Ball. To be held on February 19, the ball will take place in the newly renovated Hodson Hall student center. Accompanied by the music of the Zim Zemel Orchestra, attendees may wear formal or masquerade attire. The Washington College Historical Society, under leadership of President Wendy Debnam, will provide the thematic surroundings for the night, carrying students, alumni and staff back to WC's founding in 1782. Dave Knowles, Director of Food Services graciously agreed to provide a formal sit down dinner for the Ball at 7:30 p.m. as an alternative to the regular meal served that evening.

The committee examined the history of the Ball in their day's planning. They discovered that the Ball has not always been held in Cain Gymnasium and thus settled on the new student center as a prime location for this year's event. The aim of the committee was to attempt to schedule events which would allow increased interaction among alumni, faculty and student. The February event promises to accomplish this goal.

Plans were also discussed regarding a Parent's Day in the spring at which alumni could return and participate in a job fair for interested students.

Trams, in reflecting on the retreat felt that "the student involvement was great in revitalizing the alumni." If this energy is applied to alumni/student functions, she feels confident in their success. Ω

Phi Delts get Involved in Candlelight Tour of Chestertown

Jon Clayton

This past weekend five members of Phi Delta Theta volunteered their assistance in conducting the candlelight tour of Chestertown. As guides in the Law Office of Sam Heck they received a brief history of artifacts found in particular rooms of the house. Participants included Matt Johnson, Sean Swift, Rob Moran, Jesse Hammock, and Steve DaSheilds, who enjoyed doing the service project.

The five participants felt it gave them a better sense of the history of Chestertown and provided an excellent opportunity to simultaneously have the occasion to meet some of the local people in the community. Sean Swift said, "Mr. Heck was a good individual, and I learned a lot about the history of the house."

The house was built in 1866, and it resembles the court houses built during that time period. It was remodeled in the 1940s. Some of the of house's original contents included decoys and paintings from native Eastern Shore artists. Jesse Hammock, a resident of the Eastern Shore, believes that learning more of the Shore's local history instilled in him pride of his community and those who live in it.

Events like the candlelight tour demonstrate what small towns like Chestertown have to offer. They give Washington College students the opportunity to aquire a sense of culture and pride in both the past and the present. Washington College has been an important asset to Chestertown and the entire Eastern Shore of Maryland for 211 years, and the brothers of Phi Delta Theta are working to continue this long tradition of amicable relations. Phi Delta Theta encourages other Washington College students to try and get involved in such events because after four years are up you may never get another chance to see what a place like Chestertown can offer.

Phi Delta Theta is planning other, larger community services during the fall semester. They will once again participate in the Adopt-A-Highway program. Phi Delta Theta is also planning to operate a haunted house in conjunction with Zeta Tau Alpha. These events are done not only to serve the community, but also get to involved and meet the different people of the community. Ω

SGA Convenes for 1993-94 Term

The Student Government Association of Washington College convened for their first meeting of the Fall Semester Tuesday, September 21. Earlier in the evening, the Executive Board of the SGA had dinner with President Trout to discuss the upcoming year. (Hey President Trout: When is the Elm Staff going to get a dinner, huh?) Baker opened the Senate meeting by swearing in the newly elected dorm senators.

The Senate were then asked to approve the nomination of Bridgette Avant as the Student Conduct Council Chair and Carey Hargrove as the SGA Parliamentarian. Each were approved unanimously.

Both the Junior and Senior classes reported that they were in the process of planning parties to raise funds for class activities. The Sophomore class reported that they planned a campus beautification project called 'Casey Day' for October 30, and that the annual blood drive was in the planning stages. There was no Freshman class report, as officers have yet to be elected.

Most the executive officers reports and new business focused on encouraging senators to volunteer for the SGA committees. Before the meeting was adjourned, SGA President Jamie Baker reminded the senators that they should report back often to their constituents on the activities of the SGA.

After the meeting, Baker said he felt encouraged by what he said was a "capable, diverse group of SGA senators." When asked why the SGA has gotten off to a slower start than it has in recent years, Baker said "We wanted students-especially new students-to get comfortable on campus before throwing business their way. By holding elections on the fifteenth of September, we have gotten a more diverse group of participants."

Very few of the SGA Senate elections were actually contested, but Baker does not feel that this reflects a low level of interest in student government. "It wasn't a lack of interest, just a problem of advertising and publicity," Baker said. "Having only the Elm and WAC Happenings made it difficult to adequately publicize (the elections.)" Ω

Due to a computing in error in the Registrar's Office, the Loving Cups were incorrectly awarded at Fall Convocation. Dean Maxcy congratulated all of the Greek organizations stating that the GPAs were within hundredths of points of each other.

Caroline Parties

Last week notices appeared in Caroline proclaiming that parties were forbidden in Caroline until further notice. According to Dean Maxcy, "There's always been a policy that there are no unregistered parties in residence halls."

Maxcy said the enforcement has been carried out by Resident Assistants, who typically allow informal gatherings of students so long as they do not engage in disruptive behavior.

Maxcy said the crackdown was needed because "Caroline is so heavily populated by new students that socializing got out of hand the first couple of weeks this semester. It had come to our attention that students in Caroline were unable to study or sleep because of the disruption caused by too active a social life." The no-party policy will be continued until further notice. Ω such a small college to have so many fine academic and athletic facilities.

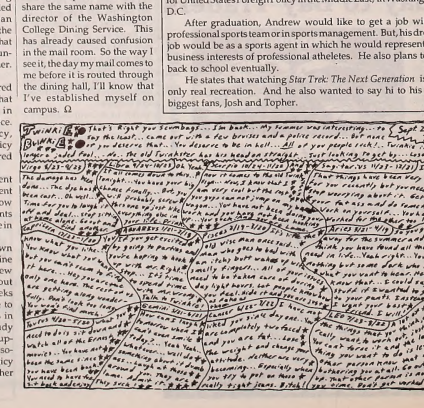
Transferring from one college to another is a major decision in one's life. In doing this, you leave behind the friends that you've just really gotten acquainted with, to start the whole process all over again. On arrival at your new school, you find that your classmates are already established in their social groups. It then becomes a race against time to make up for that lost year. But after all is said and done, the tiring hassle of transferring was worthwhile for me.

Establishing oneself in a community takes time. I have certainly found this to be true. I was also surprised to find that I share the same name with the director of the Washington College Dining Service. This has already caused confusion in the mail room. So the way I see it, the day my mail comes to me before it is routed through the dining hall, I'll know that I've established myself on campus. Ω

Student Profile: Andrew Evans



Andrew Evans, a Senior Business Major, comes to Washington College from Ft. Washington, PA. In addition to his role as Senior Class Vice President, Andrew is a Peer Advisor, a Dean's List student, a member of the Society of Junior Fellows, and the Investment Club President.

The summer after his sophomore year, Andrew worked as an intern for the Private Sector Task Force on Financial Management for the city of Philadelphia. And this past summer, he worked as an intern at the Council for the National Interest, a lobbyist group for United States Foreign Policy in the Middle East, in Washington, D.C.

After graduation, Andrew would like to get a job with a professional sports team or in sports management. But, his dream job would be as a sports agent in which he would represent the business interests of professional atheletes. He also plans to go back to school eventually.

The lovely document the faculty are heated over, the Long Range Planning Commit-obligation, in any and all de-course. If they were to grant academic credit to the senior accordingly have to grant credit to the other non-graded requirement for graduating: the Sophomore Writing Obligation.

Which goes back to my original point- students at a self-billed writing school are expected to know how to write, or to be taught how. Almost all majors require evidence of this.

To give course credit for the thesis would seem to me to undermine it, not legitimize it.
To make it completable before the senior year would make it perhaps not as subject to the same level of scrutiny — by the students themselves. Ω

Ye Olde Elm Archives

Our second installment in the Elm Archives series touches on the sensitive subject of the fifth year student at Washington College. In the Friday, October 18, 1957 issue of The Washington Elm, an article appeared that sheds light on this troubling phenomenon. While many explanations have been offered for the fifth year student at WC, it is likely that many students today will agree with the assessment in Dave Gillio's student profile parody.

Spotlight on a 5th Semester Senior

Dave Gillio

This paper's second spotlight falls on Mr. Andy Athlete. Albert, "Mumbles" to his friends, has been very seldom affiliated with anything. In '49, he ran for office of Frosh Class Representative, but was defeated by Zelda Contentenot. Again in '50, he tried before finally being voted in by a bare margin in '51 sophomore class land, I think, involving places called the West Bank and Sunset Strip. They even denied each other's right to exist. None of this really makes any sense to me, because, if you look at baseball and football teams, come this time of year, they have to share the same field. Sure. it is annoying. and often distracting, to see the diamond outline and dirt mounds from the San Francisco Giants game when the Forty-Niners are driving, but it is nothing to start throwing stones about.

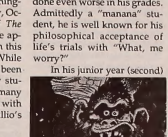
I know all about this because last Monday morning, when I was hoping to watch The Price Is Right, a special report interrupted the broadcast. When I saw that special report logo, I am always reminded of when we kicked Saddam Hussein's butt, and hoped maybe maybe something neat like that was going to happen again.



Instead, it was the peace signing deal, involving those two guys I talked about before and President Bill Clinton, who I had heard of. Dan Rather and Connie Chung were hosting the event. They would not shut up about how important an event it was, about how you could feel the winds of change blowing and how some handshake was symbolic of things to come. Oh yeah, right, whatever Dan and Connie. The campus was just a buzz about the handshake, everybody was being nice and peaceful; Lambdas were shaking hands with Lit House Freaks. Get real.

During the elections, I remember a professor of mine talking about how media often manipulates events to make them seem newsworthy. Well, we fell for that whole character issue but I was glad to see that this time the plan backfired and no one I knew had the slightest clue about the so-called "historic" agreement.

Just to get a frame of reference, I went tot he library and got one of those books with all of the maps, searched the index and found out exactly where elections.

Although Al has not been politically successful, he has done even worse in his grades. Admittedly a "manana" student, he is well known for his philosophical acceptance of life's trials with "What, me worry?"

he was pledged to his fraternity, Sigma Phi Nothing—a post he held for several years. Al also ran for president of Young Democrats Club, Pan Hellenic, Young Republicans Club, and Alfred E. Newman Club.

A physical education major, with social drinking as a minor, Al hopes to be able, someday, to attend graduate school, although he has had substantial offers from industry—notably from a Mr. Gibson of local fame. He is from Cumberland Heights, Tennessee, but has traveled extensively on the continent as a result of winning first prize in a contest sponsored by his draft board. His secret ambition is to graduate from W.C. before 1960, and make some, any, team this spring.

Al enjoys vacations, weekends, girls, and cool music, but positively detests education. Now that this new drinking fraternity, Rho Tau Ho, is eligible for SGA funds as a campus activity, he hopes that this will be his biggest asset this year. In looking over his eight years at W.C., Al expressed regret that he was never asked to join ODK, but brightened when told that it was not a X-country honorary fraternity.

Lots of luck to Albert, for this year and 1960.

All of this political junk aside, last week was an historic week. It was a week when, for a few moments, the sun shone a little brighter; a day the birds chirped a little more melodically. You had an extra spring in you step if you were a Cowboy fan.

Cherish the moment. Embrace it. Carve the notion into your psyche and never forget it. You can tell your kids where you were when you first heard the Emmitt Smith had ended his hold-out and rejoined the Dallas Cowboys. Drive Safely.

Outsider's View: "Damn Yankees" in the Works

Tracing the Unfolding of a Senior Drama Production

Alex Baez

Each year, a number of drama majors at Washington College produce and direct productions as their fulfillment of the Senior Obligation. The most many non-drama students may witness of such arduous and complex undertakings, though, is the final product.

For the next four weeks, the Elm will trace the production of the musical "Damn Yankees," directed by Elisa Hale, through each stage.

The reporter, perhaps like many students, has little personal familiarity with the theater, the drama department, or the distinct mores of either. Thus, it seems an especially compelling task to demystify the complexities of launching a student production at WC.

As a junior, Elisa Hale had already determined that she wanted to produce a musical. She began researching and listening to many musicals. Finally, she picked "Damn Yankees" because it fit the many constraints she knew she would have, and because she felt this musical, about life in the baseball world, would be appropriate for the kind of mixed audience she could expect.

In choosing a musical, Elisa had to keep in mindthe nature of Taws Theater, her expected budget of around $150, and the costumes the musical would require. Elisa was interested in producing a musical fromthe '50's and legitimizing musical production at Washington College, which traditionally has avoidedmusicals because of the work they require to launch.

Elisa says she hopes "Damn Yankees" restores the image of the musical at WC, and that the musical is enjoyable for crew, actors, and audience alike.

Perhaps one of the first and biggest surprises for Elisa this fall was the realization that she would have only four weeks to prepare her project. She had requested a due date before Thanksgiving so the baseball uniforms she needed would be available from the Sports Department. Faculty from the Drama Department assigned Elisa her production date, and she must plan all succeeding action according to this factor.

Despite doubts about whether she would be able to pull off a musical in this time, Elisa decided to persevere. However, she realizes that the four week limit will require great organization and sweat.

The first formal stage of launching the production, prior to auditions, is the production meeting. For an uninitiate, this may come as a bit of a surprise, since this aspect of the production process is seldom publicized.

"Damn Yankees'" production meeting took place in a small room in the hall of The Drama Sundaday evening.

Most of the discussion in this meeting was based on considerable prior thought and action on the part of the director, technical crew, costume and set designers, stage manager, and drama faculty. Elisa chose her crew based on their abilities as demonstrated in past productions.

In many cases, Elisa has worked personally with the members. By the production meeting, Elisa clearly had already enlightened her crew about her basic expectations and goals and the essential duties each member would carry for "Damn Yankees."

The physical limitations of Taws stage are important, and the group has already involved around related issues. Elisa discussed her ideas about the set's design with her technical directors and agreed on basic details, such as how the lighting and musicians would generally be placed, and later, how special effects, such as smoke and certain movements, would be achieved.

The team discussed which materials would be best for the set. The group will garner some items from campus; for instance, the crew hopes to use lockers from the Music Department. The group also debates about whether some items should be made from scratch, or if existing items should be u used. Often, existing set pieces Elisa wants to use are suggested by the group.

There is also the question of where all the objects will fit when they are offstage and how they will be transported onstage. The libretto, which is en route from New York, will help the group focus on some specific details. Meanwhile, Elisa plans to lend a cassette of the music to Richard McKee, her choreographer. And Elisa is presently trying to get hold of a copy of the video.

The schedule of Tawes Theater itself must be checked to ensure there will be no conflicts between other events it will host and the emergence of the "Yankees" set. Orchestral visits, lectures, and dramatic and other events already scheduled can make for considerable complications. It is determined that Elisa can have her set onstage from October 2nd until the 21st; at other times the space must be free.

Elisa plans to produce working drafts of the stage plan by the weekend. Josh Buchman, one of Elisa's technical directors, will draft the lighting plans as soon as possible. The patterns of movement for the actors must also be set down; these will influence how the set is designed.

Elisa held her first audition on Thursday evening and will hold another next Tuesday. Her experience has been that with only one audition, numerous actors call up and have to schedule a different time to try out.

Elisa tells the production meeting group that she is desperate for people who can sing and dance, but she stresses to her team that there are nonsinging parts and that actors who do not sing should be encouraged to audition. The crew is asked to spread the word.

Surprisingly enough, even at this early time, details about the cast parties are being discussed. The weaknesses of certain cast parties of last year are discussed; plans are made to alter these details. The team reviews the present alcohol policy and how this will affect the parties. The group also discusses the need to get a fan to blow air through the otherwise stuffy confines of Phoebe's—the haunt beneath the theater where cast parties are held. Elisa and her directors now await the results of auditions.

Printing Press Workshop Launches its Eighth Year

Jason R. Truax

On Monday, September 20, the eighth year of the O'Neill Literary House Printing Press Workshop began. Mike Kaylor, director of the Printing Press, conducts the workshop, which is held on Monday evenings from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. the first eight weeks of each semester. There is no fee for the workshop, but space is limited by the size of the printshop.

Kaylor said that most students who participate in the workshop are new to the trade. He says he always wants to know why each student chose to take the workshop; reasons vary from a love of books to interest in design. The requirements of the workshop are not burdensome. Students need only attend the workshop and spend two hours a week on individual projects that are always being undertaken by the Press. These projects include the elegant announcements of events that are posted around campus, the large Washington College Review to be released later this fall, and two new major outside commissions.

The workshop is designed to enlighten students about the history of printing and to give students practical press experience. Students spend the first session learning about the history of the written word, from early pictograms to the present (an ambitious agenda for a lecture, to be sure).

Students' next task is to begin learning how a piece of type looks when set in a composing stick, and the difference between troublingly similar letters such as u and n, p and q when seen upside-down. As the workshop progresses, students learn plenty of information and lore, including the origin of expressions that began in printshops and that are now common usage, such as the now-familiar, "Mind your p's and q's."

Once this introductory stage has been completed, students begin to learn where each type piece fits in the typecase through a combination of practical experience and memorization of a diagram sheet. A student also learns where one inserts spaces between letters and what size these should be: matters of aesthetics more than immutable law.

Finally, a student practices laying out some type on his or her own. At the outset, this may require more dexterity than a student can muster; there may be tumultuous spills of lead letters to the floor or throughout a typecase. Eventually, though, the process becomes closer to second nature.

A student will gain a well-rounded knowledge of printing procedure by combining typesetting practice with running set pages through one of the three antique presses in the shop. If a student finds this apprenticeship demanding, he may be reminded that in earlier eras, he would be required to sweep the floor for some time before being allowed to touch the type. In the old days, an apprenticeship would begin at a young age and the subject began as an unpaid printer's devil, progressing through journeymanship to the final status of master printer. The whole learning process took from five to ten years at minimum.

The ascent to power in Kaylor's workshop is comparatively swift. After gaining an aptitude for laying type and producing several flyers or similar projects, a student will be invited to create and produce personal projects, such as a carefully designed copy of one's

Juliana Hatfield: Sticky Sweet

Rachel Demma

Juliana Hatfield sounds a lot younger than she is. "Become What You Are," her second album since her separation from the Boston-based Blake Babies, is little more than rhymes of childish simplicity warbled out by Hatfield's babyish girly-girl voice. It's twelve tracks of absolute fluff, pure bubble-gum pop.

Having said that, it should be added that as fluff and bubble-gum go, Hatfield does not make for bad listening. Sure, you have to grit your teeth through lyrics like "He's a movie star/and he drives around in cars/Met her in a bar/said I know who you are..." and the current and overplayed single "My Sister." But with backing from the "Hatfield Three" drummer Todd Philips and bassist Dean Fisher, these horrible bits of verse are transformed into toe-tapping little ditties.

"Become What You Are" is full of lilting, upbeat, and thankfully short, songs. "Feelin' Massachusetts," moving slightly beyond the trite silliness of the other songs, is worth a listen. Hatfield's little-girlishness can be almost endearing in "Spin the Bottle," a tale of truth or dare and five minutes in the closet (When I'm 25, I only hope I won't be playing kissing games at parties.)

The tunes tend to be repetitive, but Hatfield can keep your head bobbing throughout all twelve tracks on the album. The Hatfield Three are sugary and sticky sweet. If your local record store is sold out, check at the candy store. Ω

Director Sally Potter's Orlando to Play for Film Series This Week

Based on the eponymous novel by Virginia Woolf, this film has been called a dazzling feminist epic. It juggles genders, property, and history. The hero/heroine changes sex as he/she travels across centuries and continents. Woolf and Potter explore the arbitrariness of sexual roles, liberating identity from gender. Starring Tilda Swinton and Billy Zane, this film received excited reviews for its delicious eccentricity, wit, and high style. It is also worth seeing for its lavish period costumes, which received recent coverage in Elle magazine. Ω own favorite poem, or picture bookplates. Because Kaylor is interested in the total art of the page and the book, students may also learn techniques for creating fancy dyed pages, strange folding book designs, and bookbinding. Kaylor also is familiar with handmaking many types of paper and may be willing to impart his knowledge to interested students.

The Print Workshop is not limited to students of English and creative writing, as an outsider might falsely assume. Kaylor is interested in instructing students from all disciplines, especially students with a knowledge of the graphic arts. This relevance of all disciplines to printing quickly becomes clear as one listens to Kaylor speak in the workshop.

This year, Kaylor's extensive experience in printing has earned him the position of President of the Chesapeake Chapter of the American Printing History Association. He will soon be attending their annual conference. Kaylor started type work at the age of twelve and has collected equipment for eleven years.

Much of the equipment in the shop belongs to Kaylor; he owns 500 cases of hand set type. The college has 750 cases of hand set foundry type in all. The equipment one sees in the pressroom itself is only a fraction of the total equipment at the Literary House. The basement also holds an extensive assortment of printing treasures: 300 cases of type, most of which are irreplaceable.

Incidentally, students will be pleased by a break halfway through each workshop session, during which Kaylor typically brews tea and produces a box of cookies for the enjoyment of all. Often, interesting ethnic, classical or other music will be played in the background.

While WC students do not receive academic credit for the workshop, students form other institutions can attend printing press internships for academic credit from their colleges. Ω

Who knows what method she will use, suicide (I don't mean another movie) or a lone gunman. Perhaps she could enlist the help of the Norwegians, who did such a bang-up job on that Middle East peace pact. Or she could choose to make a mysterious disappearance, after which she would hide herself away in Woodlawn Park, Colorado working as a waiter named Corey at the nearby Cripple Creek Casino.

I leave you with this question to ponder: at the funeral, how will they be able to close the coffin with those damn shiny cones sticking out? Drive Safely.

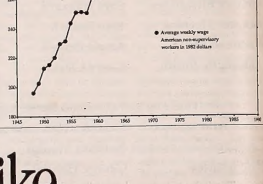
CRISIS

Scott Ross Koon

Only a couple of decades ago any economist would have deemed it an impossibility for an advanced capitalist economy to make a transition to a service economy. Nations, after all, produce goods which are derived from discrete material inputs, not ephemeral "intellectual properties." From this perspective, a service economy is inherently contradictory, as what nation could possibly export services to obtain the exchange needed to buy the material goods necessary to maintain a consumption-based economy?

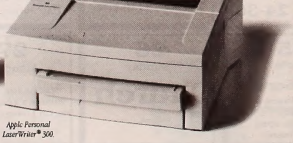


Today this view has lost popularity. The internationalization of of the capitalist economic system has made it possible for advanced nations to relocate manufacturing enterprises to less developed countries.

In theory, this shift allows the more advanced nations to retain those jobs with the highest degree of value added while simultaneously allowing individual manufacturing firms to remain competitive in the global marketplace.

This has not been what has happened in the case of the United States. Although the real value of America's Gross Domestic Product increased almost fivefold from 1948 to 1988, the average factory worker has not benefitted. Wages of non-supervisory workers in constant dollars reached their peak in 1972 and have been steadily decreasing ever since.

This trend has little to do with the supply of labor, and more to do with the inner workings of the process of accumulation of capital. Marx Wrote in the first volume of Capital "If the quantity of unpaid labor supplied by the working-class, and accumulated by the capitalist class, increases so rapidly that its conversion into capital requires an extraordinary addition of paid labor, then wages rise, and, all other circumstances remaining equal, the unpaid labor diminishes in proportion. But as soon as this diminution touches the point at which the surplus-labor that nourishes capital is no longer supplied in normal quantity, a reaction sets in: a smaller part of of revenue is capitalized, accumulation lags, and the movement of rise in wages receives a check."



This dynamic explains the wage patterns observed in the accompanying graph. Massive government spending in WWII and the cold war provided an enormous stimulus to the American economy. Technological innovations in the means of production during this period did cause a rapid increase in the extraction of surplus value. These innovations continued throughout the cold war period, which in part accounts for the length of the

Put Me In Coach, I'm Ready To Play

An amazing thing happened last Thursday. I was minding my own business in my reserved spot on the soccer team's bench in our game against Gallaudet. But before I knew it, we were leading 4-0 at halftime, and...I got to play!

After a five-game "exile" to the "pine" (actually, they're aluminum here), I got into a game. It was a very special moment. It was also a special day for Chris Downs, Brian Dorst, Jolyon Bowman, John Moreland...

This isn't to say we don't belong on the bench, just as it isn't to say the thirteen or fourteen guys who play regularly for the Washington soccer team don't belong on the field. It's just that I was so happy playing and it was such a great experience that it's hard to explain)... See...

I love Washington College.

O.K. That couldn't have cleared it up too much.

See, I love Washington College and everything it stands for. I think it's great that players like myself can come to a small liberal arts college and continue our athletic career. Intercollegiate athletics can be an important part of the educational process, and here at Washington, students can partake in this unique opportunity.

Opportunity—that's what students find here in Chestertown. It's the chance to remain a starter instead of a red-shirted hasbeen. It offers the chance to fill a role as opposed to languishing on a Division I bench. It offers the opportunity to just keep playing—merely for the love of the game.

Division III isn't about winning or losing (although winning is nice) or big crowds at games (although more than 30 at a home game would be great) or getting television exposure. It's about playing for the love of the sport and getting the most out of college.

In national news today, we always hear about Division I programs preparing for probation. Syracuse, Kentucky, Clemson, Auburn and Maryland have all had either their football or basketball programs in trouble with the NCAA in recent years.

However, do you think Elizabethtown would ever get their soccer team in trouble for offering a corvette to a player? Would Gettysburg's women's swimming team go straight to a two-year penalty for boosters giving cash payments in excess of $25,000 to participants?

Nope. It would never happen, because in Division III, students worry about their chemistry grade first and their jumpshot second. If they don't, they won't stay very long. Coaches in D III don't have a good enough rapport with professors to change an athlete's grade (see Rollie Massimino—UNLV).

This is Division III, and more specifically, this is Washington College. There are only 840 students here and over 30 percent of them participate in varsity athletics. Last year, 271 students took the fields, courts and rivers to stay fit. This fall over 175 athletes are currently active in an intercollegiate sport between in-season (volleyball, soccer, field hockey) and out-of-season sports (fall programs in baseball, softball, crew, tennis and men's lacrosse).

Look around campus, and there are a lot of athletes, and the greatest thing about Division III is you probably don't consider them athletes—but people. They are special people playing at the highest level they can personally achieve.

Washington now has 15 (8 for women, 7 for men) intercollegiate sports, and while men's lacrosse and men's basketball will always be the two dearest in Chestertown's hearts, this campus takes time out to recognize each and every sport.

So, next time you're at a game, think about the athletes. No matter who is on the field, cheer loud, because for one individual, it may be the game they remember for the rest of their life. Maybe the Shoremen will be going up against Gallaudet, and for some, it will be the first game action in a college contest in their career.

WC Field Hockey Contest With Red Wave Is A Wash

Maria Jerardi battles for the ball.

Adam Poe

On Thursday, September 16th, the Sho'Women field hockey team faced the Western Maryland Green Terrors, as well as the driving rain, only to be defeated 1-0 in overtime.

The loss dropped the Sho'Women to 1-2 overall, and 0-2 in the Centennial Conference.

Even though Coach Feyerherm felt that the weather was a "non-factor," the rain poured down for the entire first half and well into the second. When the rain finally let up, and the 70 minutes of regulation time were over, the score stood at 0-0.

With 11:45 left in the overtime period, Heather Scaburg of Western Maryland got a breakaway, raced up the right side of the field and scored on a quick shot to the goal.

Coach Feyerherm described the defeat, as a "very tough loss," and that things were very quiet in the Sho'Women locker room after the game.

Both the players and Coach Feyerherm felt that this was a big game and that they needed the win. A victory would have evened their conference record, as well as marking their first ever win in the newly formed Centennial Conference.

"This was a big game, in the sense that Western Maryland was a beatable team," Feyerherm said. "We played the better game, we dominated the entire second half, and we felt we deserved to win."

The Sho'Women outshot the Green Terrors 12 to five, putting pressure on their defense and goalie the entire second half, only to come away empty.

The Sho'Women also had two key penalty corners within the last minute of regulation, as well as a few key breakaways, which they were unable to capitalize on.

Coach Feyerherm felt that they had the momentum heading into the Overtime period, and that they were "on the doorstep."

Once they were unable to punch the ball in the net right away, the momentum began to shift, and ended when Scaburg scored the winning goal. Sherry Albright anchored the Western Maryland defense with eight saves in the goal.

Feyerherm felt full-back Jen Hanifee performed well in controlling the Sho'Women defense.

"(Hanifee) was very controlled and very on," Feyerherm said. "She had a great game and possibly her best outing of the year so far."

Feyerherm also felt that Amy Barrell and Liz Olivares, who have tough jobs of playing offense and also marking a defense man, were "really getting the hang of the job, and they each had a great game on Thursday."

Also, center back Peggy Bowman was very aggressive and was all over the ball the entire game.

"Now that we are starting to generate a lot of scoring opportunities, its very important that we begin to start to capitalize on those opportunities," Feyerherm said. "We must think about where we want to place it. When we do that, we will begin to score and start winning games."

On Tuesday the 21st, the Sho'Women were once again at home, this time facing the Red Wave of Haverford College. Once again, both teams were unable to score in regulation.

The game headed into overtime tied at 0-0. After two very exciting overtime periods, where both teams had opportunities to score and end the game, the horn sounded at a 0-0 tie.

During this well-played game by both schools, the Sho'Women took 27 shots on goal, while the Red Wave took 32. Goalkeeper Stephanie Self came up with 11 saves for the Sho'Women, while goalkeeper Rachel Levine stopped 14 shots for Haverford.

Soccer Sticks With Swarthmore In A 1-1 Tie

The Shoremen soccer team travelled to Swarthmore College Wednesday and pulled out a 1-1 tie in double overtime. Washington's record in the Centennial Conference is now 0-2-1.

Washington scored early with Andrew King's tap-in off a Brian Rush free kick only 2:06 into the game.

Swarthmore tied the score with approximately 10 minutes left in the first half on a header from a corner kick.

Both teams went the next 85 minutes without scoring, and the game ended in a tie.

Greg Miller led the Shoremen defense with seven saves in the goal.

On Saturday, Washington fell to Franklin & Marshall 2-1 in another Centennial Conference contest.

The teams played the first half in Lancaster without a goal, but Rory Conway's goal off of a Tom Hiebler cross two minutes into the second half gave the Shoremen a 1-0 lead.

However, the lead was shortlived as a Franklin & Marshall attacker broke through for a goal with 24:30 remaining in regulation, and Billy Boyle drove the nail into the coffin with the winning tally with only 1:30 left in the game.

Last Thursday (September 16), the Shoremen trounced Gallaudet by a 6-0 score.

Freshman Greg Ferri scored only 24 seconds into the contest and the rout was on.

Jon Kostyal, Shawn McMahon and Conway added first half goals to give Washington a 4-0 lead at halftime.

Freshman Andrew King had two assists in the first 45 minutes.

In the second half, Rush scored on a McMahon cross with 34:14 remaining.

Jason McDade added to the lead on a goal with 10:38 remaining on a pass from sophomore Matt Murray.

Washington's record now stands at 4-3-1, and the Shoremen face Gettysburg tomorrow at home at 1:30 p.m.

Tom Hiebler and Chris Kleberg ('93) go for a loose ball in a game last year while Chip Helm looks on.

Centennial Names Honorees;Sports On Conference Skid

Centennial Honor

The Centennial Conference announced its weekly honor roll and while no Washingtonathletes were named the conference's player of the week, the honor rolls were filled with Shoremen.

In field hockey, sophomore Jen Hanifee (this week's P.O.W.) earned conference honors for anchoring the Washington defense in last week's loss to Western Maryland.

In volleyball, sophomore Jen Dixon earned honor roll status for her second week in a row after being named to the All-Tournament team in Scranton.

For the soccer team, honors went to senior co-captain Rory Conway for his three-goal week.

Conway tallied one goal each against Marymount, Gallaudet and Franklin & Marshall.

Last week's Newt's P.O.W., Beverly Diaz goes up for the set. The volleyball team was at Swarthmore on Wednesday.

WAC Notes

Centennial Follies

Thus far, the new conference has not been kind to the athletic teams.

Only the volleyball team has earned a win over a Centennial foe in their match against Dickinson.

However, the soccer and field hockey teams are both 0-2-1 against Centennial competition.

The overall record for Washington teams in Centennial Conference matches is 1-4-2.

Gimme A Break

The field hockey team is developing a bad knack of outplaying opponents but ending up on the short end of the scoreboard.

Even though the Sho'women have outshot their opponents 68-53 so far this season and outscored them by a 5-4 total, the team has run up a 1-2-1 record.

Fall Swing

The softball and baseball squads are in the middle of their fall programs, and Washington's teams are planning on several fall scrimmages.

The baseball team's scrimmage with Prince George's Community Colleg was unfortunately rained out on Tuesday. The game will most likely be rescheduled.

The softball team is planning for a September 30 contest at Delaware Tech at home at 1:

Lanee Cole's team will also play at home on Octobe against Anne Arundel C.C.

Greg Miller goes up for a save in a 1991 game. Miller had seven saves against F & M and Swarthmore.

Sho'women Seek Serious Success In Scranton Series

Erika K. Ford

After an impressive early start, some tough competition has slowed the winning streak of the Washington College volleyball team.

Overall, the team still has earned a .647 average after 17 games. In the Centennial Conference they are 1-0 following last week's win over Dickinson.

On September 16, the Sho'women traveled to Catholic where they lost two games to one. Co-captains Beverly Diaz and Michelle Chin led the team in digs.

Last weekend Washington finished third out of 12 teams in the Scranton Tournament. Sophomore hitter/blocker Jen Dixon was named to the All-Tournament team.

"We're playing a lot better as the games on and can step up to some tough competition," Dixon said. "I think we've made a good reputation for ourselves since we've been up against a bunch of experienced teams."

Dixon currently leads the Sho'women in kills with 133 and has 138 digs. Her total attempts at the ball number over 300.

In the five game tournament, Washington lost the first to Upsala, 2-0. Freshman Becky Stephens had four kills.

"We have chemistry on the court and I've never experienced that on a team before," Stephens said. "We communicate during practices and we try to do it during out games, too."

The volleyball team won its second match-up against Allentown 2-1. Michelle Chin contributed 23 assists.

They beat Marywood 2-0 in the tournament. They also were victorious over the University of Scranton, 2-1. Dixon and Diaz combined for 48 digs and 23 kills.

Washington lost their final game against Hunter, two games to none, but still finished third overall in the Scranton Tournament.

Freshman hitter Catherine Barrett, a frequent player on the team, is enjoying her first season at Washington College.

"As a team, we're talking a lot and we show support for each other," Barrett said. "I'm really grateful that the sophomores and juniors have helped the freshmen out the way they have.

"Many teams are surprised at how good we are—they weren't expecting a challenge."

Tomorrow the Sho'women volleyball team will travel to Gettysburg to play both Gettysburg and Muhlenberg. On Tuesday they'll be away at Haverford. Next weekend five colleges will come here to play in the Washington College Invitational.

In professional football action, Kendall Cunningham threw for 300 yards, including a 10-yard pass with four seconds left to Calvin Williams (eight receptions, 181 yards, three touchdowns) to lead the Eagles over the Redskins, 34-31.

The New York Giants (3-0), led by Rodney Hampton's 134 yards, prevailed over the Rams, 24-10.

Neil O'Donnell threw for three touchdowns and the Steelers gained 223 yards on the ground as they whipped the Bengals, 34-7.

The Cleveland Browns remained undefeated as Vinny Testaverde rallied them for 16 points in the final three minutes of regulation. Eric Metcalf's two-yard run capped the ralley to give the Browns a 19-16 win over the Raiders.

The Dallas Cowboys, playing with Emmitt Smith for the first time in 1993, defeated the Phoenix Cardinals, 17-10. Derrik Lassic ran for two touchdowns, as Smith saw limited playing time.

The New Orleans Saints held Barry Sanders to 76 yards rushing, and rookie Derrik Brown ran for 121 yards, as the Saints beat the Lions, 14-3.

The Seahawks squeaked by the Patriots, 17-14, as Chris Warren ran for 174 yards. Patriot kicker Scott Sisson's 54-yard field goal try hit the uprights with 30 seconds left.

Eric Pengramm ran for 192 yards, but it wasn't enough as Steve Young threw for three touchdowns, 210 yards, and ran for 52 more to lead the 49ers over the Falcons, 37-30.

John Carney mailed six field goals to help the Chargers nip the Oilers, 18-17.

The Chiefs' Nick Lowery hit five field goals on Monday night, as Kansas City held off the penalty-plagued Broncos, 15-7.

In major league baseball, the New York Yankees and Baltimore Orioles remain tied at five games out as the Blue Jays continue to hold the lead in the American League Eastern Division.

Chicago's WhiteSox remain four and one half games up on the Texas Rangers in the A.L. West.

Montreal's eight wins in 10 games helped them gain ground on the Phillies who hold a four-game lead in the N.L. East.

Atlanta holds a three-game lead on the Giants in the N.L. West.

This week, we pick--

Jen Hanifee for Newt's P.O.W.!

Also known as Wiz's little sis, the sophomore from Millington, Maryland and a graduate of Kent County High School, has been the defensive spark the field hockey team has needed to stay competitive this season.

Hanifee's work in the Western Maryland earned high praise from her coach.

"She is the reason Peggy Busker only had to make two saves," Coach Sarah Feyerherm said.

Hanifee also performed well in the Haverford game, leading the way to a Washington shutout.

We could bother to mention honorable mention for this week, but if you cared, you could look at the Notes section and find out who the Centennial Conference picked.

But we know you don't care, so we won't bother.

Therefore, just congratulate Jen on her fine performance last week. And here are some other people to mention just for the heck of it...

Chris Downs ended a 24-game streak on the bench when he played the entire second half of the Gallaudet game.

And we also congratulate Aran Downes, but we don't exactly know why...

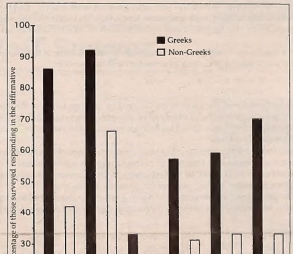
Greeks Like to Drink

National Greek Letter Organizations Imbibe More Alcohol Than Other College Students



Residents of fraternity houses on campuses around the country drink three times more alcohol than other college men, according to re-searchers at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. The study, the most extensiveever done on collegiate drinking shows that fraternity house residents imbibe an average of 20 drinks a week, while other college men drink an average of eight drinks in the same time period.

The survey also said that on a weekly basis, sorority house residents drink two times more alcohol (6 drinks) than other college women (3 drinks).

"The difference is astounding. This is significant new information that campus officials and prevention specialists need to have," said Cheryl A. Presley, director of SIUC's Core Institute for Alcohol and Other Drug Studies.

The sweeping study surveyed 5800 students at 78 colleges and universities around the country. Of these, 568 were fraternity house residents and 638 lived in sorority houses.

"The question arises, 'Is it Greek like itself that results in heavy drinking or is it the heavy drinkers who are attracted to Greek life?' It's probably a little of both," Presley said.

• Fifty-four percent of fraternity and sorority members reported driving while intoxicated in the year before the survey in comparison to 36 percent of the rest of the student body.

• Other findings included the following data.

• Eighty-six percent of fraternity house residents and 59 percent of sorority house residents had binged on alcohol in the two weeks before the survey, compared to 42 percent of other students.

• Twenty-one percent of Greek house residents six or more times in two weeks, compared to 7 percent of other students.

• Ninety-two percent of Greek house residents suffered hangovers in the year before the poll, compared to 66 percent of other students.

• Nearly two times more Greek house residents (33 percent) suffered alcohol and drug- related injuries as did other students (17 percent).

• Almost twice as many Greek house residents (57 percent) annually suffered alcohol- and drug-induced blackouts compared to other students (31 percent).

• More than half of Greek house residents (59 percent) got into alcohol-related fights or arguments in a year, a problem reported by about one in three other students (33 percent).

• Seventy percent of Greek house residents missed classes as a result of alcohol or drug use, compared to 33 percent of other students. Ω

Senior Class Activities

Andrew Evans

The Senior Class met for the first time this past Monday evening, October 27. President Melissa Sullivan opened the meeting by reporting that she and the other class officers met with President Trout to discuss 1994 Commencement speakers. Names brought up in the meeting with Trout were: George McGovern, Janet Reno and Maya Angelo. Suggestions for speakers were also taken from those in attendance and will be brought up in the next meeting with the President. Seniors in attendance put forth Al Gore and Jane Alexander, Director of the National Gallery, as preferences. Further ideas for a speaker may be presented at any time to the Senior Class President.

Sullivan also announced plans for a Senior Class party to be held this semester. Potential locations for this event are the Country Club and Great Oak. She said that it was intended to bring the class together.

The officers were encouraged to see the turn out for the meeting and hope that this enthusiasm will continue. Any Senior interested in becoming part of these activities is encouraged to attend the next meeting on October 11. Notices will be sent out to all Seniors. Ω

Senior Retrospective Video

About 20 of the campus' student leaders have leapt forward into the business world. With Kathleen O'Donnell in the Development Office, the volunteer effort known as the Senior Campaign is being led by co-chairs Ivette Gormaz and Julia Scheid. And the rest of the class will reap the benefits — starting with the Senior Dinner.

On October 27, the Senior Class will gather for a sit-down dinner and a video presentation put together by their classmates — based on campus life and photos borrowed from other seniors. In order to complete this presentation, seniors need to lend their photos to be added to the montage. Any photos you're willing to lend to the effort can be put in the box in the CAC mailroom, or you can contact Julia at ext. 8908. Ω

GOP Media Expert Speaks Wednesday

Steve Sandler, who has been doing radio and television commercials for the Republican Party for nearly twenty years, is visiting the Washington College campus in Chestertown on Wednesday, October 6, to talk about conservative politics.

The guest of the Louis L. Goldstein program in Public Affairs, Sandler is delivering a lecture entitled "Well, Maybe Incest is Okay': Untravelled Paths of Conservative Politics." The lecture begins at 7:30 p.m. in Hynson Lounge, and is open to the public at no charge. Ω

Software Changes in Miller Library

William Tubbs

Students may have noticed that we shut down the library system last week for a couple of hours. We needed that time to load a new version of the system software, which includes a number of improvements. Though most of these will not be visible to the general public, there is one that people may want to know about: the ability to see what library books are charged out to you without having to ask at the circulation desk. Toastmasters Club to Form; Hear, Hear!

Terry Scout

Whatever your goals in life may be, much of your success will depend on your ability to speak. People who can effectively communicate possess one of the skills necessary for successful living. According to a survey by the College Placement Council, ability to communicate is the number one attribute that employers seek in new employees.

If you would like to learn how to communicate better in a non-threatening environment, then join Toastmasters. The club will help you discover communications abilities that you didn't know you possessed. Active participation will bring you to the point where you will feel confident expressing yourself in publi.

Each meeting of the club lasts about one and one-half hours. A typical meeting consists of a brief business meeting, table topics — a session of impromptu speeches, and short prepared speeches. Membership in the club provides you with a wide range of professionally produced educational materials and resources on speaking.

There will be a demonstration meeting by a group of DuPont employes from Newark, Delaware, at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, October 6, in the Forum of the CAC. Ω

Sin Tax Imposed by WC

Back in my day, there was a smoking section in the dining hall. We would sit down with our trays, gorge ourselves on starchy food, eat fattening desserts and then relax with coffee and cigarettes. It was a veritable heaven in Hodson Hall.

Nowadays, alas, this relaxed atmosphere is no more. We were never really offered an adequate explanation for the change in policy, but we didn't really fight it. Smoking is a dirty habit, we smokers dirty people, and we knew we couldn't beat the system.

It happened all over campus. Once, people could smoke in the magazine room in Miller library. No more. Once, we could smoke anywhere in the Lit House. No more. In the Casey Academic Center, we have a new building on campus which is entirely smoke free-ashtrays notwithstanding. And when they renovate Bill Smith, they'll probably make that a smoker-free zone as well.

What gives? Is there anywhere indoors where you can smoke and study at the same time, besides your own room? There is the lovely study lounge in Hodson, but they might as well hang a sign outside that says "non-smoking students only." Of course, students can feel free to light up in the Bunting conference room, but how many students use the Bunting conference room?

These policies may be intended to discourage smoking, but they only serve to make student life less bearable for students who smoke. The only real program which could reduce smoking on campus would be a medically supervised smoking-cessation program. There is no such program here, and it is not likely that one will be introduced.

These reductions of the rights of smokers come at a time when the College is making more profit than ever from the sale of cigarettes to students. This summer Phillip Morris drastically reduced the price of its Marlboro line of tobacco products. This precipitated a price war with other producers, which has resulted in the lowest cigarette prices in years.

It is now possible to buy Marlboro cigarettes for $1.70 at any store in town, yet the College charges $2.70 for the same product. The College is perfectly willing to make exorbitant profits form the sale of cigarettes to students-so long as the students don't try to to smoke them in any of the campus buildings.

Currently our President (Clinton, not Trout) is speculating on increasing the federal tax on cigarettes by $1.00 a pack. That's fine with me, because he plans to use the money to finance universal health care. But what is the College doing with the extra $1.00 a pack students pay for the privilege of being able to buy cigarettes on campus?

The federal government has the right to impose sin taxes. By the time any tax on cigarettes is imposed, it will have been subject to review by many special interests. Jeff DeMoss is accountable to nobody when he sets prices on cigarettes.

He is accountable to his customers, however. The prices of cigarettes in the so-called "WC Deli" are outrageous. No generic brands are offered as a substitute for the high priced brands. The only way to make Mr. DeMoss lower his prices is to stop buying cigarettes at the "Deli." It is easy to walk down to C-Town or Royal Farms and buy our cigarettes there. A boycott by students would show Mr. DeMoss that the market is unwilling to bear as much as he thinks it is.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

For those of you who may be unaware, the Computing Center Directors have seen fit to require all working students to use a time clock. I object! My family objects! This is not in any way what we want our tuition money spent on. Not to mention the obvious suggestion it makes about my work ethics. Just what is it that you are saying?

Their [sic] are always a few bad apples in the bunch, but you are charged with dealing with them in an adult manner. If you cannot, then get someone who can! Is this to better define the "slack" culprits? I am certain there are more mature and cost effective ways of determining problems.

While it may appear to them as the only way to get results, it has probably cost WC more than will ever be recuperated.

I am required to fill out a time card for the Computing Center, as well as complete a time sheet for the Business Office. Double time effort. If you work at Computer Repair in Bill Smith, you must walk all the way down to Ferguson to Punch in, Punch out. Those two trips alone take approx. [sic] 20 minutes out of work time. Poor utilization of time, not to mention the obvious suggestion that I am basically untrustworthy. Where did you folks get your work ethics? Bad for morale!

I am required to fill out each week a separate time card. This added to the original time sheet makes three pieces, every two weeks for every student worker. Waste! What about our costs, what about our trees!

This practice insults my intelligence and makes me question those of the Computing Center. I take pride in my work here at WC, both as a Student and as a worker.

I object!

If you feel that you have legitimate grounds to justify a request for anonymity, then call the Elm at ext. 8585, and we will confidentially work with you to determine if your letter merits anonymity.

To the Editor,

Goodness! So what is the value of a human life to you these days, Mr. Phaneuf? How much she entertains you? How much her physical self fits your very limited idea of beauty? There are a great many people who find Madonna a threat, and she has made use of that. Death has allowed popular culture to control Marilyn Monroe — to use her in many ways. If Madonna shared that fate would it make you feel more comfortable with her image? If she continues to prosper and succeed commercially well into old age, will that threaten you and your sense of human worth? I'm only asking. But you've confirmed my sense of the real need for a Woman's Studies program that will explore the answers.

Swastikas at the CAC

Having recently returned from a year in Salzburg, Austria, I am both interested and puzzled to be back at Washington College. I had a great year and I would love to tell you a few things about what I experienced...especially in regard to one certain topic.

I have had the opportunity to study German and Austrian culture and history for some six years now and consider myself relatively astute in dealing with related themes. What struck my eye at the academic society of Washington College was frightening new, and relatively obvious attempts at freedom of speech. The puzzling aspect is the choice of the Hackenkreuz, better known as the Swastika, as a method of expression.

I first noticed on of the symbols on a desk in my Spanish class in Smith 36. Thinking it an abnormal occurrence, I proceeded as usual to the Casey Center where I retrieve my mail and read it in the foyer. As I sat in one of the tables pleasantly decorated with the name of the institution, I noticed another. Having seen two Hackenkreuz in two hours, I began to think about the symbol and its meaning.

Then, I thought about my experiences in Europe with the ever-rising number of Neo-Nazis and how I felt when seeing them. They frightened me when they followed a friend of mine and howled racial remarks at him. I also remembered a group of them gathering around a friend, calling her names. They even prodded her with sticks. These were uncomfortable situations—situations I would like to believe we as a Washington College don't have to face.

I also remembered my trip to Dachau, the first model camp for the concentration camp system established in the mid-30's. Then I later thought of my trip to Poland where I visited Auschwitz, the deadliest camp of World War II. I also remembered my visit to Buchenwald, a camp in the former East Germany, where I stood on the foundations of buildings where some of the most grotesque experiments in history occurred.

Having studied these places, I saw it necessary to go and see them first-hand. It was the coldest feeling I'd ever experienced. Hitler actually adopted the symbol of the Hackenkreuz from an Indian symbol used in philosophy that was in no way related to racism and hatred. The swastika stood for something, something unpleasant like a lake that is still

Do You Know Who's Coming To Dinner? Neither Do I!

Mark Phaneuf

Sometimes, when I have finished my work at the end of a long day of Washington College learning, I think about the movies St. Elmo's Fire and The Breakfast Club. Those movies were our generation's Rebel Without a Cause and Easy Rider. Am I the only one dying to see sequels to these classics? Am I the only one who wants to see exactly where these kids wound up? I wonder how far Rob Lowe got playing his saxophone and Anthony Michael Hall actually did go off and create a Microsoft-like dynasty.

They must have ended up somewhere, because Demi Moore is the only one who is still making hit movies. I wonder what became of the anal-retentive principal from The Breakfast Club, not to be confused with the anal-retentive principal from Ferris Bueller's Day Off. I know he went on to play the anal-retentive police chief in Die Hard, but he wasn't in Die Harder.

After I sit and think about that guy for a while, I think about how he was the authority figure and how much of a jerk he was. It is relevant because we are in an age when authority figures wield no authority, an age when power is mishandled and justice is miscarried. Brought up by the dottering old man Reagan and tutored by the man who kicked near Saddam Hussien's butt, we have found justification in the belief that all old people are out of touch, insincere and stupid. To find the incompetent strawmen who are our leadership, we don't need to look to the movies or the White House. We need look no farther than the Hynson-Ringgold House.

A few weeks ago I was invited down to the President's house for dinner. It was in conjunction with the William James Forum, which was sponsoring a talk by Ralph Waller, the Principal of Manchester, Oxford. I studied at that institution last year (remember that, it is important). I was surprised and honored for a chance to schmooze with the man who is in all those pictures holding oversized checks in the Washington College Magazine. In the years I have been here, I've never before had the chance to meet the President. Hell, I only got a checking account this summer!

I arrived at his house with several other people. At the door he said "Hi" and I said "Hi." We shook hands. He pronounced my name wrong, but everyone does that, so I corrected him. I thought about saying it was nice to meet him but I thought that it might be impolite. Dinner went fine. There were about fourteen of us there, split up at two tables. I sat at the table with Mrs. Trout. We were served and the food and conversation was great. I really encourage everyone to to take advantage of this opportunity and go down there for some grub.

The group then moved back up to campus to hear the talk by Dr. Waller. The speech was about whether or not we needed higher education. It was like Pat Riley giving a speech on whether we need hair gel. As I said my goodbyes, the President of Washington College, at whose house I had dined only a few hours earlier, asked me why I was there. He asked me if I was a former president of the William James Forum or just an interested party. Quietly, I said I went to Manchester College last year.

I left Hynson Lounge feeling deflated and depressed, like a blow-up doll of Kate Moss. I didn't expect him to know who I was or how to pronounce my name. I could understand that. After all, in my years here I have never made an attempt to speak to him. In this burgeoning campus of eight-hundred plus, I was able to get by unnoticed and quiet-like.

What got me was that he didn't even know why I was at his house. Maybe I'm petty, maybe I pay too much attention

Thirdly, To-all-those-who-have-been-wondering: The occurrences in Blub are completely fictional. The Washington College campus has not REALLY been turned into a school of fish. Calm down.)

President Trout (A Trout) and Dean Wubbels (A Wahoo), neither of whom had yet learned that the students had just deposed them and elected Mark Murphy to be king. (Note to anyone who doesn't know Mark: he was the-guy-in-that-neck-brace last year) were having a discussion about the latest occurrence on the Washington College campus.

President Trout: I can't believe this! We've all been turned into aquatic sea creatures! This is great! Finally! Something that will draw national attention to Washington College!

Dean Wubbels: And national attention drawn to the college means more students drawn to the college!

President Trout: More students! More students! Yay more students!

Dean Wubbels: So many people will want to come here that we can stop giving Freshmen all those academic scholarships!

President Trout: And so many people will want to come here that we'll be able to make up for all the students we lost this summer!

Dean Wubbels: More students! More students!

President Trout: Yay, more students!

Dean Wubbels: Gosh, you know, the only other thing that would get us as much national attention as this would be hiring a hit man or old SGA president to shoot everyone in the dining hall!

President Trout: And thank God we don't have to do that! This will bring us publicity-galore! We can now put out full-page ads in the Washington Post, saying things like "Send your children to Washington College. We'll give them the AQUATIC EXPERIENCE!" More students! More students! Yay, more students!

Dean Wubbels: Shall we have one of our secretaries call around to tell this glorious news to all the newspapers?

President Trout: Yes!

"I say we have an enormous celebration to celebrate the coronation of Mark Murphy!" shouted Haus-the-grouper.

"Par-tee! Par-tee!" chanted all the Washington College students/aquatic sea creatures.

"Oh, wow!" said Mary Holmes of Mary & Jerry who had both turned into Atlantic Bonito fish, "Think of how great parties are going to be, now that we're all aquatic sea creatures! All we have to do is empty a keg into a room and invite everyone in to swim around! We'll all be able to get drunk through osmosis!"

"Par-tee! Par-tee!" chanted all the Washington College students/aquatic sea creatures.

"Oh, dear." said Tanya-the-angelfish. "As a hypoglycemic, I still can't consume alcohol...."

"That's ok!" said Christine-the-Flounder, "You can be our musical entertainment, then!"

"Musical entertainment?"

"Yeah! You can sing for us!"

"You're right!" said Tanya-the-Angelfish as she launched into two of her favorite songs:

BOBBY DAY (to be sung to the tune of "Barbara Ann")

Ba ba ba ba bobby day, Ba ba ba ba bobby day

Bobby Day-ay-ay, yeah he's o-kay-ay-ay

He's got us reading and a'writing, rockin' and rebellin'

Bobby Day-ay-ay, Ba bobby Day

TATUM (to be sung to the tune of the theme of the Lone Ranger)

"Par-tee! Par-tee!" shouted all of the Washington College students/aquatic sea creatures.

DIRT

No Coke Means No Class

No one ever called Miz Dee's a swanky joint in any of its incarnations. I hope the name doesn't die after the last WC Students to see Dee on campus (i.e. seniors) graduate. And I do think the next, newand-improved Snack Bar/WC Deli/whatever will be worth the wait. I mean, they're going to have booths.

They've seemed to re-do Dee's every year. The lattice work, the hospital striping, and the menu have all gone through revisions each year ... But this is the biggest change I've seen. The menu of about ten items does leave a lot to be desired. Its present location in the CAC is handy on the way to class, but then again, that's exactly what it's missing.

You can buy an over-priced, wilted, microwaved cheeseburger, or some version of a chicken sandwich and a hot dog. They do not, however, have three of Dee's biggest sellers — fries, nachos, and chili. You can buy yoghurt and blueberry muffins if they haven't run out. There's cookies, crackers and chips — but no candy.

But the biggest aberration from the norm is the drinks. Yes, once again the Dining Hall is thwarting the happiness of Washington College Students by limiting their potential beverage consumption. First no bar in the CoffeeHouse, and now this.

This being that Dee's — excuse me. WC Deli at the CAC — sells approximately four things: coffee, Gatorade, Snapple, and nothing. Occasionally there will be fruit juice or "gasp" a soda or two. This latter item, of course, only following the removal of the Coke machine.

First they left the machine behind the counter so you had to intrude into food service territory to spend $.60 for 12 ounces of flavored carbonated water. Then they "forgot" to have the Coke man refill the machine. They also refused to give you change for your Dee's dollars so you could go get yourself a Coke. (In the past change was provided for those who needed it for the candy machine when Dee's was out of candy.)

Meanwhile, the Bookstore went on supplying such delicacies as Crystal Pepsi and Clearly Canadian — still over-priced, chargeable, and linked to the Deli Syndicate/WAC Monopoly — but ever present. If you had time to stand in line.

Tuesday, they removed the machine and started selling sodas. A few. At five cents more than the machine price (which, incidentally, you can get around if you go to Gibson or Bill Smith — but only if you think about soda ahead of time).

Let me clarify the Deli Syndicate/WAC Monopoly. A few weeks back there was an article in these pages about the Bookstore Extortion Plot. Those of us who are poor (read, Mommy and Daddy can't afford to send us money. Ever. Much less every month) have to charge our books, art supplies, etc. and pay in installments in order to cover the inflated prices. We shop at the Dollar Store for everything else.

Now they (same manure, different they) have caught us unaware and want us to pay for the privilege of drinking sodas we could get for ourselves, cheaper, if they'd just give us the change, as they have in the past. You can't boycott them because, if you're on the full meal plan, you've already paid for the food, so you may as well eat it.

Or drink it. In a classless society, Coca-Cola would be the same price for the man shopping at SuperFresh as it is for students at a liberal arts college. But we're drinking coke in a gallery with million dollar floors, so they're going to milk us "rich kids" (Hah!) for every nickel we're worth. But this is no classless society. And they have no class.

grey after fifty years or like rooms full of hair, shoes, or eyeglasses. I've been to Amsterdam and walked through the house of Anne Frank. I've stood in her bedroom and have seen the actual pictures she had pasted on the walls. I also lived off of a street where Nazi troops used to march by the hundreds.

The individual with which we are dealing has obviously expressed the freedom of speech, but has no understanding of what he or she has done. Maturity plays a large role here. I am grateful for my education and I am glad I have a good understanding of the topic discussed here. Obviously, someone needs to book-up on the topic of the Hackenkruez and the ideologies for which it stands. I can think of more than a few things that will make everything very clear. Ω to details, but I cannot remember one time in my short little life when I had invited someone to my home and didn't have a clue as to why they were there when they had arrived. Actually it did happen once, but I was really drunk when I made out the invitations. I didn't know who anyone there was, including myself, and hadn't the slightest idea as to why I decided to make it an all Richard Simmons theme party. So there are extenuating circumstances. And truthfully, aside from the fact that he has his pictures taken with those cheeks and that he lived in the house, I am not exactly sure why the president was there.

But this is all in the past and I have learned the errors of my ways. Every time I enter the cafeteria I announce "I am here because I am hungry and I am going to eat lunch" or, conversely, "I am here to eat dinner". It doesn't matter if there is anyone in the room when I get to class, I make sure to declaim "I am here because I registered for this class". My roommates look at me kind of funny, when I get back and say "I am here because I live here". It may sound silly, but, if you look at it, it really makes a tremendous amount of sense and saves from any possible confusion in the future.

When I go into the bathroom I feel somewhat awkward telling the toilet why I am here. But as most of you can attest to, there is nothing worse than a befuddled toilet. And as I sit here and think about all of this, I can't help wondering how Molly, Judd, and good ole Emilio made out and whether the charter members of The Breakfast Club matured into card carrying members of The Diner's Club. Drive Safely. Ω

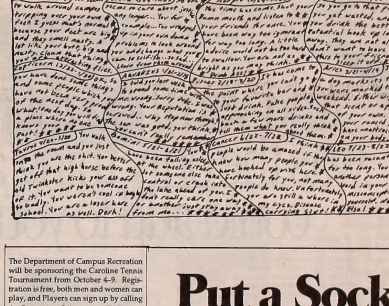
"More students! More students! Yay, more students!" chanted President Trout and Dean Wubbels.

"Yay, FISH!" cheered a Sho'men as he cast his line into the Washington College campus.



"What's that?" said Chris Sanchez (a Spanish Mackerel) as a large shining hook with an enormous worm at one end came plunging into the middle of the quad.

All of the students/aquatic sea creatures got suddenly silent.

"I don't know," said Killi-Fish Heubert, but I'm getting mighty hungry...."

All of the Washington College students were surprised to find that they suddenly had an even greater hunger for worms than they usually had for dining hall food.... Ω

Literary Fellowship Rooms Awarded for 1993-94

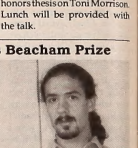
Each year, the Literary House awards four rooms to live in to qualified students for the rest of the year. These rooms, known as the Fellowship Rooms, offer the recipients a quality working environment strategically located on the third floor of the one of the college's main hotbeds of writing and literary activity.

This year, the rooms were awarded to seniors Tanya Allen, Melissa Moorehead, Jennifer Reddish, and Tarin Towers.

In selecting the recipients, preference is usually given tosenior English majors writing theses; juniors with a specific project in mind, such as a novel in progress, are also considered. Theses may be either scholarly or creative writing. This year's recipients represent both venues.

"Finally! A quiet place that has enough bookshelves!" exclaims Tarin Towers.

Literary Briefs



There will be a book signing session with Washington College alumnus and prize-winning illustrator Jack Schroeder '58. Schroeder illustrated the new Literary House Press published Selected Poems of Gilbert Byron '23. Literary House, 2:00 p.m., October 2.

In Their Own Voices: "Damn Yankees" Auditions

Rachael Fink:

"Are you here to audition? Great! Please fill this out you'll be number 15. When I call you, you can go out and sing for Elisa."

"Elisa, I have three more for you, but I'm sending in Eve. She has to go to SCA."

"Okay, Jen, you read Applegate, and Bridgette, you read Lola in scene five."

"Professor Weissman, you're next."

Two nights of auditions, over thirty people, to sing, read, and then cast. As a stage manager, I had the easy job. All I had to do was get everyone in and out as quickly as possible. But auditions of this size never run smoothly. Someone always has to be done by 8:00, or hasn't decided what to sing, or is scared stiff about the whole process.

Making sure everyone is where they should be at any given point, making sure they know what to do when, and making sure everyone is calm was my job.

Elisa Hale, my director, and Ciaran O'Keefe, our musical director, had to decide who, when and why everyone would get a part.

But we did it, and everyone got a part and now rehearsals are in full swing, despite scheduling conflicts, lung infections and not enough hours in the day.

Stop by the green room any night for the next month and we'll be there, singing, dancing, building a set and getting ready to open the curtain on "Damn Yankees!"

And come see the show on October 21, 22 or 23. It will be a fun show that everyone should enjoy, except me. I'm not supposed to enjoy it; I'm the stage manager. So come and enjoy it for me!

Marshall Norton:

Painless.

That's how I would describe the audition for "Damn Yankees." This was a welcome change compared to the auditions I went to in high school, during which all the prospective cast members sat in the audience--altogether an uncomfortable experience. In the case of the auditions for "Damn Yankees," however, the only people in the audience were Ciaran O'Keefe and Elisa .

Having been involved in numerous theater productions in high school, I almost jumped at the chance to be on stage during my freshman year. Granted, I had never even heard of "Damn Yankees" so I didn't really know what to expect, but I thought that the experience would be fun.

As usual, everyone there was asked to fill out a form detailing their past theatrical accomplishments, their daily schedule, and any other times that they might not be able to attend a rehearsal. While everyone was busy with that, Stage Manager Rachael Fink informed us all that the musical was not about the Civil War.

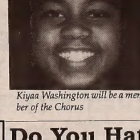
Then came the fun part. According to the number written at the top of each audition sheet, we were instructed to go out on stage where Ciaran would be waiting to accompany everyone on the piano. Elisa was out in the audience, seated about ten rows back to see whether everyone's voices could carry well.

Each singing audition was followed by script readings from various combinations of the auditioners. This part of the audition took the longest, for in each case it was necessary to wait until enough people had finished singing to have the right number for each scene. The audition began at 7:00 p.m., and I (who was #11, out of around 20) wasn't finished until after 9:00.

The Saturday following that Tuesday audition, I received a call informing me that I had been given two roles in "Damn Yankees," so apparently the audition went well.

All I have to do now is figure out how I'm going to juggle the rehearsal schedule along with everything else I need to get done.

Kiyaa Washington:



My experience with the play, "Damn Yankees," has been quite enjoyable so far. I've gtten the chance to meet different people on campus. The audition was not difficult and I felt calm. Hopefully the musical will be a success.

"Spirit and Self": Freshman Colloquy

Student Director Previews Annual Event

Kelli K. Youngblood

Kelli Youngblood

The social event of the year approaches. Yes, it's Freshman Literary Colloquy time again. Wacky creative writing kids have pooled their collective brain cells and bookshelves to bring you ninety stimulating minutes of "Spirit and Self." The single performance will be on the deck of the Rose Casey O'Neill Literary House this Sunday, October 3, at 4:00 p.m.. All are welcome.

If you're wondering what the theme, "Spirit and Self," encompasses, you're in excellent company. The Colloquy group, wondering the same thing, has brought together a truly diverse collection of poetry, prose and dramatic selections. All of these works have had influence on individuals' definitions of the human spirit and how it is expressed through the self.

Conventionally, spiritual guidance is sought in a religious setting, not in a writers' hangout. However, the Freshman Literary Colloquy opens its mind to the possibility that this setting is religious. Still, this Sunday (at the Lit House) you will hear no sermons.

Instead, you will hear (and see) are dramatic scenes from The Little Prince, Our Town, Rosencrantz & Guildenstern Are Dead, and Six Characters, and the poetry of Thomas Hardy, Douglas Coupland, Alexander Blok and others.

William Faulkner, Alice Walker, Leo Tolstoy, and Ayn Rand will be among the authors read. The Freshman Colloquy will be a bountiful buffet of ideas and lovely, lovely words!

On The Rise In The Fall

October is on its way. In fact, it's here. Today begins the season when we start to think about falling leaves, Halloween, and cooler weather. It's also the time of year when fall sports are right in the midst of the year.

That's right—it's just about the mid point of the 1993 season for the Washington field hockey, volleyball, and men's soccer teams. It's a time to reflect and look upon what each team has accomplished.

Last year, it was a dismal fall in Chestertown, as our three varsity sports combined for a 23-39-2 record. However, everyone on each team kept saying, "Wait until next year." Even so, a little bit of skepticism arose.

This year, it's hard to find skeptics around campus. After all, what could any doubters have to say about this season. For instance...

The volleyball team is currently 13-8 waiting with anticipation for the Washington College Invitational this weekend. The volleyball team has never won its own invitational but has a realistic shot for accomplishing the feat for the first time in school history. Winning the tournament would give the Sho'women an 18-8 record. They have already surpassed last year's win total, and they still have a very young team.

The men's soccer team also is still young. Coach Todd Helbling's squad has only one senior and one junior. The rest of the team is entirely comprised of sophomores and freshmen. However, the team is still performing well with a 4-4-1 record at press time. Their losses include tight matches with Franklin & Marshall, Muhlenberg, Gettysburg and Marymount. The Shoremen also tied Swarthmore 1-1 for their first non-loss to the Garnet in 10 years. It was also the first goal for the Shoremen against Swarthmore in 10 years. However, the soccer team still has some tough games remaining against the likes of Dickinson, Haverford and Johns Hopkins.

The field hockey's record may not reflect it, but they are probably having a better season than last year. While they are 1-2-1 at press time, their two losses have come to Centennial Conference powers Gettysburg and Western Maryland. Probably more so than the other two sports, field hockey has been handed a much tougher schedule with the move to a new conference. Also the adjustment to a new coach could be a factor in the team's 1-2-1 start. However, the Sho'women's tie with Haverford last week was a very encouraging sign, and Washington has two games this weekend for a chance at a couple of wins.

Thus far, this fall's sports season has not been a time to wish for the coming basketball season. Fans are beginning to show up in large numbers for athletic contests, and maybe there will be even more to cheer for at the end of the season.

Start coming out in even larger numbers and root for the Shoremen during their tough Centennial Conference schedule.

We won't try and predict how the teams will finish up, but it should definitely be better than last year.

Volleyball Gets Ready For Washington Invitational

Team Beats Swarthmore To Improve Record To 13-8

Erika K. Ford

Following Tuesday's 3-0 win at Haverford, the Washington College volleyball team now has a .619 winning percentage with a 13-8 record. In the Centennial Conference their record is 3-2.

On September 22 the Sho'women traveled to Swarthmore and won three games out of four. Last Saturday they played away against Gettysburg and Muhlenberg in Pennsylvania. They fell to Gettysburg 0-3, but were victorious over Muhlenberg 3-2.

Through last weekend, sophomore Jen Dixon had 170 kills, the most on the team. Last year she led the Middle Atlantic Conference in kills. Junior co-captain Beverly Diaz had 210 saves and 19 aces. Freshman Becky Stephens led with 24 solo blocks, and freshman Tina Smith had 36 aces. The Sho'women have proven that a team effort is the key to success.

Coach Penny Fall is pleased with the young team and the improvement over last year's 12-20 mark.

"Already this season we're ahead of where I anticipated we'd be, especially with the heavy duty schedule we've been playing," Fall said. "I'm very satisfied, and it must be very satisfying for the student athletes too."

Fall believes the volleyball team still has room to improve though.

"We have to find the key to consistency in our games," she said. "We must understand what we have to do as a group to play at a high level right away.

"Sometimes we let other teams get ahead and gain momentum early in games, and then we have to work extra to catch up. Luckily we often can, but that isn't a good strategy."

Ultimately, Fall thinks that the Sho'women "must be ready for serious play sooner, and must stay competitive throughout each match."

This weekend Washington College hosts the Invitational Tournament. Five colleges will come to Chestertown with hopes of going home with the winning trophy. Washington has never won first place in the Invitational, but they hope that this year will be different.

"The team's attitude for this weekend is very positive," Diaz said. "Everybody really wants a first place win."

Sho'women volleyball will go up against five tough teams on Friday and Saturday. They will face Gallaudet at 6 p.m. and Scranton at 8 p.m. Friday, October 1.

On Saturday, they play Albright at 11 a.m. in Cain Gymnasium. That afternoon they'll face Salisbury at 1 p.m. and Catholic at 2 p.m. In recent match-ups Washington beat Scranton in close matches, but lost to Catholic.

Swimming Practice Begins

Swimming practice began Sunday night, and Coach Kim Lessard is looking forward to a strong season, especially with new recruits for both the men's and women's team.

The men's team now has 18 swimmers, which is the largest ever in school history. The women's team has also grown substantially with 14 swimmers being twice as many as the seven who swam last year.

Due to the nature of the sport, swimming has the longest season on campus, going from late September to late February—nearly five months long.

The first meet of the year will be on November 6 in an intersquad scrimmage. The first official meet will be on November 13, which will be the first Centennial Conference meet in school history, and it will also be the first time the swimming teams have hosted Franklin & Marshall.

In field hockey, freshman goalie Stephanie Self from Pocomoke City, Maryland was named to the honor roll for the first time for her performance

WAC Notes

"We've got six weeks to try and get in some kind of shape," Lessard said.

Centennial Honor

The Centennial Conference published its athletic honor roll again this week, and two Washington athletes were named.

In volleyball, Jen Dixon was named for the third straight week. The sophomore from Glen Burnie, Maryland had 37 kills, 48 digs and 18 blocks in a 1-2 week for the Sho'women in the Haverford game last week. Self had 11 saves in the tie, earning her first collegiate shutout.

Vandalism Hurts Lacrosse

Because of the vandalism last week and the suspensions thereafter, the men's lacrosse team will be missing two quality players. One of the students suspended played goalie for the Shoremen last year, and the other student saw time at attack.

Jason Campbell hopes to help lead the Washington men's swimming team to a higher place in the conference standings this season.

Gettysburg Soccer Sets Tone Early

Washington Stays Close Behind Miller's 13 Saves But Falls 3-0 To Bullets

Paul Kenny

Last Saturday, September 25, the Washington College men's soccer team took on the Bullets of Gettysburg. It was a cloudy afternoon with several rain showers making playing conditions tougher for both sides.

Gettysburg set the tone of the game early. The Bullets scored two goals in the first five minutes reflecting the talented nature of their side. However, the Bullets couldn't keep up the pace of the first 10 minutes for the whole game, and the Shoremen eventually settled into their game in the remaining part of the first half.

Gettysburg finished ranked 23rd in the nation in Division III last year and are ranked 10th this year. The Bullets are one of the toughest opponents in the Centennial Conference, ranked second in their region.

"Gettysburg is an excellent team with tremendous experience and skill," head coach Todd Helbling said. "The thing that makes them complete is that they work hard."

Offensively, the Shoremen had a quiet first half. Defensively, sophomores Brian Rush and Cliff Howell had a strong first half. Howell made a key defensive save on the goal line for the Shoremen when goalkeeper Greg Miller was beaten by a Gettesburg attackman.

The score was 2-0 in favor of Gettysburg at the end of the first half.

However, the second half was a different story. Although the rain persisted rather heavily at times, the Shoremen came out strong.

Senior co-captain Rory Conway had a cracker of a shot from 20 yards out in the first five minutes. However, the ball bounced off the inside of the left post.

With this, the crowd of spectators—consisting mainly of parents and some students—came alive. The Shoremen seemed to set off a spark that ignited the spectators who now cheered on their team and screamed at the referee. It all created an atmosphere of excitment and anticipation as the Shoremen played shot for shot against the 10th best team in the nation.

"We played hard," Helbling said. "They are better than us, faster than us and all that we could do was to go out work hard and earn their (Gettysburg's) respect".

Gettysburg quickly realized that this was not going to be a walk in the park for them. The Bullets responded with an offensive onslaught of the Shoremen defense.

However, the Shoremen defense took the challenge head-on and reduced the number of shots that Gettysburg had from 25 in previous years to 13 on Saturday.

Junior co-captain goalkeeper Greg Miller emerged as the player of the game for the Shoremen, shutting the Bullets out for 80 minutes and making 13 superb saves. Miller has a .826 save percentage in overall games, averaging 1.41 goals against him per game.

However, with six minutes left in the game the Bullets scored their third off a good offensive combination.

Regardless of the 3-0 final, it was not a disappointing perfomance for the Shoremen. They played a strong game, especially in the second half against a team of a much higher caliber.

Field Hockey Reaches Midpoint Of '93 Season With High Confidence Despite 1-2-1 Record

Adam Poe

Last week's tie to the Red Wave of Haverford rounded out the Sho'Womens' field hockey record to 1-2-1 overall. Although this is not where they wanted to be at this point in the season, an upbeat attitude still prevails amongst the players and the coaches, as they head into the back stretch of their season.

"We are looking forward to the week ahead of us, both in terms of playing and winning some games," head coach Sarah Feyerherm said. "I feel both Swarthmore and Bryn Mawr are definitely beatable teams, and that we can start out the second half of the season on the right track, and come away with two wins."

By the time the Sho'Women play the Swarthmore Garnet on Thursday, they will have had a week lay-off between games. The result of both scheduling and bad weather, this week off concerns Coach Feyerherm. Although, she feels that the team is still working very hard in practice, and that they should be O.K.

"Despite the slow start, the team is pretty happy with their level of play so far," Feyerherm said. "It has been frustrating, but things could be worse. We're definitely not being outclassed in any way, we're just coming up on the short end of the stick."

"It has been frustrating, but things could be worse. We're definitely not being outclassed in any way, we're just coming up on the short end of the stick." --coach Sarah Feyerherm

Looking beyond next week on the schedule, the Sho'Women will be facing two of the current top three teams in the South Region. On October 3, they will be facing Mary Washington College, who is ranked first in the South Region at 6-0, and on the 12th, they will be facing the Bluejays of Johns Hopkins University, who are ranked third in the South Region at 4-1.

In the season preview, Feyerherm felt that it was important that the underclassmen, especially the eight freshmen, become integrated with the system as quickly possible, because they just might be counted on to step up and fill the team's needs.

"Not all the freshmen play right now, but I'm very confident in their abilities as field hockey players, and I know that when the time comes for them to be asked to produce, that they will be able to do so," Feyerherm said. "The freshmen are not giving up at all, they are working very hard in practice to make themselves better field hockey players, and I definitely notice their efforts."

Right now, freshman Marcia Flinn is starting for the Sho'Women, while freshman goalie Stephanie Self is alternating starting in goal with sophomore Peggy Busker.

Recently, freshman Amy Scarlett has gotten more playing time, especially in the later stages of the Haverford game, when her play was described by Coach Feyerherm as being, "very composed."

Freshman Helen Pitts was seeing some playing time coming off the bench, before she broke her nose, while the other four freshmen, Gloria Mast, Elizabeth Barlow, Jen Ruenzel, and Nikki Chmura, are still waiting in the wings to prove themselves.

Renee Guckert goes for a goal.

WC Lacrosse Hopes To Pick Up Where They Left Off

Dave Lipinski

Last spring, the Shoreman lacrosse team made it all the way to the semi-finals in the NCAA Division III Tournament. It marked the ninth tournament appearance since head lacrosse coach Terry Corcoran took the job in 1983.

The Shoreman pulled off one of the biggest upsets in tournement history when they defeated number top-seeded Salisbury State University, 12-11.

The Shoremen, seeded eighth, dethroned Salisbury at home in Cinderella fashion before 2,000 astounded fans.

The Shoreman had lost the annual "War on the Shore" a few weeks earlier 17-5. Needless to say, Washington College faced a very confident SSU team when they arrived at Sea Gull Stadium.

SSU head coach Rick Berkman reflected his team's confidence in an interview with a Wilmington News Journal reporter before the game.

"This could be the best team we ever had," Berkman said. "Lacrosse is the talk of the campus right now."

The win was one of Washington's greatest athletic accomplishments. It reestablished the Washington College lacrosse reputation of a program built on heart and determination and made Washington College one of the top four Division III teams in the nation.

The victory, which sent the Shoremen to Delaware, Ohio for the semi-final contest against Ohio Wesleyan, notched a spot for the '93 Shoremen in the Washington College lacrosse record books.

The game showcased performances by four Shoremen who would earn All-American status.

Sophomore Greg Lawler earned First Team All-American honors, and junior Jason Paige achieved All-American status for the second year in a row with Third Team honors.

Senior defender Scott Overend and junior mid-fielder Chris Cote both received Honorable Mention All-American. In addition, senior attackman Harris Murphy was selected to the North-South All-Star Game.

Tomorrow, the annual scrimmage between the Washington College Alumni and the '93-'94 varsity lacrosse team will take place on Kibler Field at 1:30 p.m.

The game will be highlighted by performances by some of the greatest players in Washington College history. Several former players have gone on to extraordinary careers as professionals in the indoor lacrosse league (MILL).

This group includes Dickie Grieves who was a two-time All-American and 1986 World Team standout; Ricky Sowell who was a two-time All-American and All-Pro, whose overtime goal lifted the Shoreman past Hobart on Kibler field in 1985; John Nostrant who was a three-time All-American and All-Pro, Bob Martino who was a two-time All-American mid-fielder, and two-time All-American attackman Tim Hormes.

Martino and Hormes, who played together for four years, combined for four Shoremen playoff appearances, including a trip to the finals in 1990. All-Americans Chris Dollar ('87, '88), Paul Deniken ('88), Mike McGuan ('87,'88), Steve Beville ('84, '85), and Dave Slomkowski ('89, '90, and '91) will also be on hand.

These players and many more are part of the reason why Washington College has and will continue to have one of the richest and most winning lacrosse programs around.

Dixon Looking For Bigger And Better Things This Fall

David H. Knowles

When it comes to coaching volleyball, it's safe to say that not many know more than Penny Fall. In her eighteen years as the head women's head coach at Washington College, she's seen some of the very best come and go. Therefore, when she describes one of her players as having "an enormous amount of talent," you know that this is no ordinary athlete.

Jen Dixon, a sophomore from Glen Burnie, Maryland, is among the top players in the Middle Atlantic Conference. She has been on the Centennial Conference Honor Roll for the past three weeks. As a freshman last season, she was All-MAC.

"That's very unusual for a freshman," Fall said. "Most players don't make All-MAC until at least their junior year." Remarkably, as Fall points out, all of Dixon's talent and success hasn't caused her to lose sight of her teammates or the task at hand.

"She is the essence of a team player—the ultimate team oriented player," Fall said. "How her skills meld with everyone else's is what concerns Jen. I have actually spent a great deal of time convincing Jen that she's as good as she is."

In inter-conference matches, Dixon is ranked third in the Centennial Conference with 52 kills and leads the conference with 72 digs. Overall, she has 170 kills and 191 digs in 21 matches.

Fall also believes Dixon is a strong leader in her own sort of way.

"Jen leads by example, much the same way as someone like Cal Ripken," Fall said. "She goes out and does her very best, on and off the court."

Indeed, performance off the court seems to be an important team priority. Fall comments that "the team's goal is for a grade point average of at least 3.0."

When it comes to talent, Dixon is in good company. Captains Bev Diaz and Michelle Chin provide strong leadership for players such as Amanda Barnes, Courtney Myers, Becky Stephens, Katherine Barrett, and Mariah Geisler.

It is a team that obviously works and plays well together.

"They are a very pleasant group to coach," Fall said. "I've never had a team this young with so much raw talent."

There is no doubt that volleyball is a physically demanding sport. The team plays anywhere from forty to fifty matches per season. Tournaments are also a big part of their schedule, in which a team plays an absolute minimum of five matches in one day.

Such an arduous schedule requires not only physical strength and conditioning, but emotional strength as well. The schedule has obviously taken its toll on Dixon, who has had chronic back problems. However this has not discouraged her.

"I'm very dedicated to the sport," Dixon said.

This Friday and Saturday, Washington College is hosting the Washington College Invitational.

"It's our goal to win, especially since it's our own tournament," Dixon said.

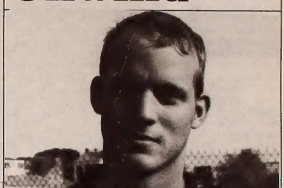
Mariano Duncan's grand slam and five RBIs helped the Phillies defeat the Pirates, 10-7. With the win, the Phils clinched the divisional title in the N.L. East.



Paul Molitor slammed a solo homer and Pat Hentgen (19-7) pitched 6 2/3 innings of shutout baseball, as the Bluejays clinced the A.L. East with a 2-0 win over the Brewers.

The Atlanta Braves and San Francisco Giants share first place in the N.L. West with five games to go.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

Nocontest...

This week, the choice was pretty simple. Any of you who watched the Gettysburg soccer game last Saturday saw an awesome performance from junior co-captain Greg Miller.

Miller, from Catonsville, Maryland, made 13 saves on the afternoon with several coming at point-blank range. He also came off his line effectively and limited the strong Gettysburg team (number 10 in DivisionIII) to only three goals.

Miller sports a 1.41 goals against average and has saved 82.6% of the shots against him on the season. He already has three shutouts this season (one was a combined shutout with Chris Downs against Gallaudet).

But enough about Miller...

Here are some of our other awards...

Fan of the week (year)--Kouri Coleman(who follows Greggi to all of his games unless she has to play field hockey).

Cyclist of the week--Mark Murphy (the key is the motivation).

Caps player of the week--Aaron "Soupy" Grayson (what form!).

Coach of the week--Sarah Feyerherm (she led her team to 0 wins, 0 losses, and 0 ties).

Shrimp eater of the week--Andrew "the Bomber" Parks (did you see him eat three plates the other day?).

Sleeper of the week--Abby Moss (she can fall asleep anywhere).

Gene Hamilton on LRPC Calculations

John K. Phoebus

In an interview with the Elm, Dr. Gene Hamilton highlighted his recent findings regarding errors in the Financial Models of the Long Range Planning Committee's Preliminary Report. As he describes, these mistakes in calculations and projections have a significant effect on the conclusions that can be drawn from them. Re-projections of corrected data by Hamilton appear to conflict with the precedent for growth expounded upon by Wubbels and Trout in recent references to the Report. Hamilton presented this report to Washington College's chapter of the American Association of University Professors last Tuesday and last Saturday to the LRPC itself.

The LRPC's Preliminary Report describes three financial models for the college projected over eleven years. Plan A calls for growth to 1150 students with conservative estimates of state aid and annual giving. Plan B has the same growth, but is more optimistic about the revenue derived from state aid and annual giving. Plan C holds the same conservative estimates as A, but only grows to capacity. All three plans make aggressive assumptions about tuition revenue. Plans A and C have been used to compare a model of growth (A) to a model of no growth past capacity. Page 82 of the report, in drawing conclusions for the infallibility of Plan C states: "The deficit of $700,000 [Plan C's outcome in year 2004] can be compared directly to the outcome from Projection A (surplus of $2.3 million) because both projections use the same assumptions, the difference being the assumption of growth in Projection A." Hamilton's careful examination of the figures in these two plans show that certain assumptions are different in each of them. These differences, appearing to be only small discrepancies, greatly overstate the difference in the outcomes of Plan A and Plan C after eleven years.

Hamilton served as chair of a subcommittee of the Task Force on Budgets, Finances and Facilities of the Long Range Planning Committee This subcommittee's task last Spring was to prepare a report on the college's financial stability. The financial projections in the LRPC's Preliminary Report, however, were created by Gene Wubbels, Dean and Provost, this summer and formally presented to the College in the Report released September 8. The Report is a preliminary report, the major themes of which were "growth" and "involvement." The LRPC's report is a recommended course of action for the College to take over the next ten years and is in its early stages of examination by the various bodies who would enact its plans, if approved by them.

Hamilton found eight differences in the assumptions of the two plans. First, the instruction budget in Plan A is not adjusted for the number of FTE students as it increases. The headcount after eleven years is 1159 in A, 959 in C. However the instruction budget in A is not adjusted to take account for the greater number of students. "The instruction budget is mainly departmental budgets, not including salaries. It does include photocopying, test tubes, supplies. Photocopying would double if the headcount doubled. That causes problems for plan A right away."

Secondly, the Residence life programs are not adjusted for a lower headcount in plan C. The proposed Residence life program would hire five professionals who would live in the dormitories, one of whom would be higher salaried and preside over the others. As Hamilton points out "Dean McIntire said the programs

Long Range Plan Open Forum

Christine Pabon speaks out at Open Forum

Scott Koon

The first Long Range Planning Committee open forum was held on October 6 in Dunning Lecture Hall. The meeting was attended by twenty-seven people, including six students.

The open forum is intended as an opportunity for members of the College community to attempt to reach a consensus on the Long Range Plan (LRP). The Preliminary Report of the Long Range Planning Committee provides the framework for the drafting of the LRP. The Preliminary Report was written by Dean Wubbels, and is based on the work of the Long Range Planning Committee.

Currently, the six faculty members of the Long Range Planning Committee have formed a subcommittee. The six faculty members on the committee are professors Steven Cades, Colin Dickson, Robert Fallaw, Michael Kerchner, Rossette Roat and Nate Smith. At the beginning of the forum, President Trout stated that these six have ". . . taken upon themselves the task of redrafting" the Preliminary Report's academic sections in consultation with the rest of the Faculty.

Wubbels said that a major purpose of the plan is to provide a sense of vision of the College's future that would be attractive to individual and institutional donors, and thereby enable the College to ". . . get another fifty million dollars that we otherwise wouldn't get. We need something to point to when we go and make our case for the College."

In answering recent criticisms of the financial models used, Trout said "I believe that beyond five years in modeling it's pretty iffy. This isn't a fixed model, it's a model which will be revisited all the time. Some small leap of faith is necessary to embark on the journey, and it won't be necessarily linear, as the models might suggest."

The wariness of many towards the Preliminary Report

Faculty Discuss Domestic Partners at Meeting

Scott Koon

At the Faculty Meeting on October 4 the Faculty discussed the Board of Visitors and Governor's recent rejection of the domestic partners proposal.

The debate on the issue began after the Faculty Representative to the Full Board, Dr. Nancy Tatum, reported on the Board Meeting of September 17-18. Dr. Edward Weissman commented on the Board's action, saying "I cannot even begin to express my revulsion, disgust and abhorrence at anyone who would somehow seek to impose private religious beliefs on a public institution such as the College. It is as abhorrent as denying benefits to someone who was Jewish."

The proposal rejected by the Board was a watered-down version of the original, and offered no tuition or health benefits. President Trout said the proposal constituted a move to ". . . affirm the importance of domestic partnerships at least symbolically." Trout added that "I think that there are trustees who opposed it on moral grounds, but there are some who argue eloquently against that point of view."

During the discussion Weissman asked ". . . what role did the Provost play in all of this [rejection of the proposal.]" Dean Wubbels replied that "I spoke when I was spoken to. I was asked about administering the plan. Dr. Weissman accuses me of unfairness and I dispute that. I've been fair to him and other people at the College." Professor Jay Wright added "The Dean did not make any incendiary commentary. He simply did not."

In other business, Trout informed the Faculty that the 93-94 "deficit situation" would be approximately $500,000, adding that he did not foresee that this red ink would necessitate further cutbacks at the College.

Whither the Long Range Plan?

The debate surrounding the Long Range Planning process is heating up. Many in the Washington College community have voiced specific concerns with the Preliminary Report of the Long Range Planning Committee.

This is understandable. I know that it irks me somewhat to hear the Dean and Provost and the President say that the process is now/here may being over, and then repeatedly refer to the Preliminary Report as "The Plan."

Washington College isn't Goucher, but perhaps we've reached the Goucher moment, or perhaps we may be in a Goucheresque situation, or mode, if you will, or we may even be said to be in a Goucher way. I'm rather tired of hearing the same old Goucher analogy.

And "involvement." Involvement is probably the most vague word in the English language. Sure, I'm all for involvement. Involvement is free. I don't have to sell my soul to Signet Bank to become involved. I was involved a heck of a lot before I ever came to college, and I guess the best I can say is that I didn't catch any diseases.

These points are, of course, minor, and are more a matter of personal style than substance. President Trout is correct when he says that most of the problems which have surfaced in people's critiques are ones which can be resolved through a consensus building process.

Trying to accomplish any task at a college is a bit like trying to get a bill though Congress. I can think of no other environment where it is necessary to fill out paperwork in order to have a party. In a place where something as ostensibly simple as throwing a party is often quite complex, orchestrating a ten year plan is an impressive feat indeed.

Perhaps this is the first time Washington College has seen the emergence of such a plan. I know that if I were a freshman and were not on the Long Range Planning Committee, I'd probably be confused. When I was a freshman, I felt really great about attending Washington College. If the current controversy regarding the planning process had occurred while I was here for my first semester, it would have been unsettling. What must it be like to choose a school because you like the school and then have the highest officials turn around and publicly state "This school needs to change." Usually, people don't fix something if it is not broken.

That is probably why so many are leery of the planning process. No one wants to think of Washington College as being "broken." Some people have minor reservations about the Preliminary Report of the LRPC, some have major reservations. This is probably the greatest testimony of how important Washington College is to its students, faculty, and staff. To exclude anyone from the process of planning the College's future is a great disservice to the institution.

Whatever our differences, we should not forget the importance of the Long Range Plan to the future of the College. To some extent, the actual content of the Preliminary Report is not as important as making sure that each constituency of the College maintains close contact with the process. The Preliminary Report itself mentions diversity as a worthy goal and an important element of the experience at Washington College. It is time for our diverse clientele to work together for the good of the College.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

When used properly, the Elm has the potential to be one of the students' strongest assets (or weapons, depending on how you look at it). Unfortunately, it appears to be working against the students, rather than for them. I have several examples I would like to cite.

First, your editorial in the September 24 issue: Yes, I can tolerate decrepit laundry machines, bad plumbing, tuition hikes, and noise on campus. However, I am now lodging my official complaint against the Communist takeover of the student paper (as you so eloquently put it). Beer does not happen to be my first love, and in answer to your question, "Will kegs ... ever be allowed back on campus?", probably not while you are the editor. I will return to this point.

Second: "Maddonafesto." ["You" in this context refers to Mark Phaneuf, the author of the article in question, -Ed..] I personally do not care whether or not you like Madonna, or if Marilyn Monroe put on a little too much weight for your taste. What I do care about is the fact that the Elm, which is supposed to represent the entire student body, not just the male population, printed your blatantly sexist article. For example, "The Material Girl is not getting any younger and as most of the women at this school can attest, or I'll do it for them, time really takes its toll on the sex and sex ... getting old is going to mean that more and more people are not going to want to look at her body parts" (whereas Paul Newman and Sean Connery are only improving with age). To continue, "The only other possibility options [check your grammar, Mark] for the former Mrs. Penn is that she become a mother and devote her life to that. She could get involved with Hillary Clinton and that Edelman child.

Open Forum: Friendly Eyes

"Beep! Hello, this is George Jamison from the Elm. I'd like you to write an open forum article this week. . ."

Should I do it? If I don't, this George Jamison person will probably never ask me to write for the Elm again. What is an open forum anyway? I usually read the paper but I don't pay attention to the titles. I have too much work to do anyway.

them with humble apologies. They lash at me with their eyes. Eyes glazed in disdain.

I guess all anyone wants to do is to look up and meet friendly eyes; to keep the world around them tranquil and appeased. But friendly eyes are a rather expensive pleasure; they are brought with inhibition and subservience. T. Maloney, the sage of the Drama Department, explains, "Inhibition murders Art. A person cannot truly bring life to any art—painting, acting, writing—unless that person is comfortable with himself, and not seeking outside approval. A person can never hide behind his art, he must live through it."

I know, he sounds a little bit like Yoda from Return of the Jedi, but his words are true—and frightening. I played two roles last year in plays produced at WAC and I enjoyed hiding behind both of them. But hiding is a poor substitute for living. Puck's mischievous pranks and Laura's shame belonged to them and I refused to accept responsibility for their faults.

Consequently, these characters lacked life. Looking back, I'd gladly share the joys and sorrows of these people—the joys and sorrows of all people—human nature is universal anyway. Unfortunately, in the theatre, and in life, you only get one chance to be bold, to be true; and those who hide are simply left unfound. People are simply too lazy or too busy

Lisa Swann

"Hello, this is Lisa Swann returning your call. I guess I can write this open forum thing. What do people generally open for a lize about?"

"Anything."

"Anything?"

"Yes. Like one was—well, one was on Wal-mart. Anything is fine, really."

Oh, God! Now I've annoyed him. "Of course I'll write a Wal-mart like piece for the Elm this week. No problem!" Shew. Well, that's a relief. I appeased the George Jamison on my phone; now all I have to do is write an article.

I don't know why I hate offending people so much. Freud could probably tell me, but no one listens to him anymore anyway. It's silly really—I mean being so paranoid, not not listening to Freud. Most people don't seem to mind offending me at all. I work at a grocery store and day after day people smugly allow me to bag their groceries in plastic, just waiting for the opportunity to rock their head boldly and declare, "I want paper!" Actually, I think they find it rather amusing to see me showering and help save this nation's youth. She would have to ... use her nipples for something other than dripping hot wax on ... But if she doesn't want to become a mother, the only other career choice Madonna can make...would be death."

Whether or not you chose to be politically correct is your business, but there is no need to forget the basic etiquette you should have learned when you were five. I don't appreciate insults aimed at any race, religion, or gender. Keep your derogatory comments (second sex, only other option is becoming a mother, and chick) and your personal opinions about women to yourself. The Elm should not be the place to air your grievances about women, whatever they might be. That is not news. Speaking of not-news, was there a point to your "Do You Know Who's Coming to Dinner? Neither Do I!" article or did you just want to bitch about the lack or recognition that you feel you deserve?

Continuing with the October 1 issue, I would like to say that while I am sure the Lit House does indeed rule, and I'm almost positive that someone on campus cares how not to impress the Elm Editor (someone must...somewhere), this is not a terribly informative "Inside" guide to the paper.

Lastly, "Greeks Like to Drink" (you saw this coming). Rumor has it that there was no news this week and you needed a filler. I almost missed the "Vandalism Hurts Lacrosse" paragraph tucked at the bottom of page eight. As nearly as I can tell, Greeks on this campus consume no more than anyone else. This survey is probably very useful to the students at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale; however, it has no proven merit at Washington College. Maybe for next week's issue you could go through the trash bins and count the number of empty beer cans that you find. That might be encouragement to make campus dry (in case anyone missed this irrelevant article).

It is my understanding that personal opinion is to be kept out of newspapers (save the Editorial). Apparently, I am mistaken. This paper shows favoritism, bias, and discrimination. I don't see the need to offend ninety-eight percent of your peers to make a point.

(By the way, your critical literary analysis of the anonymous letter last week was very impressive, but let's not be hypocrites. I couldn't seem to find the byline for the "Greeks" or the "Blub." And did you notice two to's in Mark Phaneuf's article? How about misspelling "gotten" in "In Their Own Voices?" I realize that it is difficult to proofread an entire paper, but considering the lack of news one would think you'd have had time. I probably shouldn't be writing this in parenthesis — my faux pas.)

Poet Robert Dana to Give Reading

At 4:00 p.m. on Wednesday, October 13 the O'Neill Literary House and the WC Lecture series will present a reading by the poet Robert Dana. The reading will be held in the Sophie Kerr room of the Miller Library at 4:00 pm.

Robert Dana is the author of 12 books of poetry, including What I Think I Know: New & Selected Poems. Another Chicago Press, 1991; and the forthcoming Yes, Everything, Another Chicago Press, 1994. He was recently awarded the National Endowment for the Arts Poetry Fellowship, and has also been granted the Rainer Maria Rilke Prize for Poetry, the White House Salute to Poetry and American Poets, the Delmore Schwartz Memorial Poetry Award, and several others.

He is also a contributing Editor to The North American Review and a Professor of English and Poet-in-Residence at Cornell College. His publications include The New Yorker, The Paris Review, Poetry, The New York Times, The Nation, and at least 25 others magazines. Ω

DeVido Comes to Washigton College

Danny DeVido

Not to be confused with that short, pudgy comedic actor of Taxi fame, New York's own Danny DeVido will be coming to WC next Wednesday, October 13 at 7:30 p.m. in the Hynson Lounge.

Hailing from Peekskill, DeVido, 27 is a regular emcee at The Comic Strip. In addition, he works at Catch A Rising Star, The Comedy Cellar, and The Original Improvisation. He regularly plays clubs and colleges up and down the east coast, and recently returned from a two week stint in Cancun, Mexico. DeVido is proud to be celebrating his 45th year in showbusiness (at least that's what he says it feels like.)

"I try to be a comic with a little integrity. I was in midtown Manhattan, and this guy comes up to me and says, 'Excuse me sir, how do I get to Carnegie Hall?' I looked at him for a second, and said, 'That's too easy.' And I walked away."

DeVido is a graduate of The Ithaca College School of Communications, where he received the Rod Serling Award, a scholarship for creative television writing. He also won several national awards for his writing and producing of The Nothing Show, Ithaca College's answer to Saturday Night Live.

You may recognize DeVido from recent appearances on Short Attention Span Theater and Stand-Up Stand-Up on HBO's Comedy Central. DeVido was proud to perform for our troops on the USS Intrepid during the Operation Desert Storm. In addition, he was mentioned in the Village Voice as a "hard-working, up and coming comic...a delightful host." Ω

Premo Speaks on Cuba's Crisis

On Tuesday, October 5, the second lecture in the International House Fall Series was presented by Dr. Daniel Premo in the basement of East Hall.

The lecture was on the ramifications of the end of Stalinism in the Soviet Bloc on socialism in Cuba. Dr. Premo prefaced his remarks by noting that the source material for his presentation come from a short trip to Cuba about a year ago in addition to his ongoing research on politics in Latin America. He said that despite the decline in living standards in Cuba, he sees "no indication that Castro's 34 year regime is in danger of collapse."

Premo put the present crisis into context by noting the importance of the USSR to the Cuban economy in the past. By 1989, the Soviet Union supplied aid equivalent to one sixth of the Cuban economy. Premo stated that the end of this aid has caused a 25 to 50 percent shrinkage in the Cuban economy, and has sent Cuban imports plummeting from $8 billion to $2.2 billion. "In a sense, what has happened in Cuba is that the country is deindustrializing at an astonishing rate," Premo said.

The lecture was attended by over forty faculty and students, and was followed by a lively question and answer session. Dr. Shad, the Director of the International House, encouraged people to attend the lecture series. "The series provides students with specific analysis of contemporary international issues," Shad said. "Its interdisciplinary in nature, that's what's most attractive. It's an intimate kind of situation which gives people the opportunity to ask questions. This is the kind of program that Washington College is all about." Ω

Are Freaks the Root of All Evil?

The first time I was at Washington College was in 1989 for a writer's workshop. As a junior in high school, the campus looked extraordinarily ... quaint. And this is from someone who grew up largely in a town of 500 near Pennsylvania Dutch Country.

Looking back, the similarities between those two weeks and my four years here are amazing. Cliques formed, rather quickly. There were cool people, and there was everyone else. The cool people were whatever group you happened to be in ... and there were freaks, then, too.

There were people who seemed to do everything, and there were people who did nothing but pay their money and show up. We had a literary magazine, poetry readings, structured and informal ethical discussions, art classes, sailing classes, and other sports.

Intensity is the one word everyone used to describe the experience. A large part of that was the professors, professional writers from all over the place. They made the experience. And they made it worth it. Teaching a bunch of pretentious high school writers how to take criticism was not easy, but it was the best thing they could have done to teach us how to write ... and how to be.

The mix of students from all over the state is enlarged several fold by the mix of students here, now, from all over the world. But the old dilemma of diversity into cliques of sameness is not a phenomenon confined to the Washington College campus.

I do think, however, that it provides an interesting case study. I'm most associated, I guess, with the "Lit House Freaks," to the extent that the "descriptions" compiled of senior leaders by the Development Office for the Senior Campaign list me as "Elm, Lit House."

Unfortunately, the connotation that that carries with it is not merely that I write and am a little odd. That's harmless. What isn't harmless is that, out of the huge number of people who are attracted to the campus by the O'Neill Literary House, the building itself, a huge portion is scared off each year by a few well-placed glares shot by territorial upperclassmen.

This snowballs to the extent that people who have never been in the building will never go because "they" are either extraordinarily weird or extraordinarily clique-y "over there." The building has an invite-only attitude projected by a very few and accepted, and resented, by the majority.

Even the external reviewers visiting to examine the English Department picked up on that. They asked if the Lit House divides the English department. Divides? Not formally. But it does set a precedent for officially-sanctioned elitism.

Most, if not all, of the glarers from the past three years have graduated. Some of those who were scared off long ago have migrated back. But what I'd like to point out here is that, first of all, the point is well taken. The faculty don't exactly discourage the territoriality and pretension that the Lit House is famous for. They, in a few instances, have discouraged people from creative writing, or forced people to choose between English and sports or English and drama.

Second, no one is going to throw rocks at you for showing up your senior year, or your freshman year, if you've never been in the Lit House before. Say hi. No one will shoot you. And if someone's head is buried in a book, ask yourself if you'd like to be rousted from your studies in your library carrel.

Third, without making any other accusations, I want to point out that the Freaks are hardly the only tight group on campus. They/we don't even have a minimum GPA requirement to fit in/to be yourself.

As an afterword, I'd like to point out that the Center for Creative Writing and Humanities, run by the Gifted and Talented division of the Maryland Board of Education, has been shut down due to statewide budget cuts. And without Mary Brown's leadership of the Summer Conference Program, it may never be satisfactorily replaced. Ω

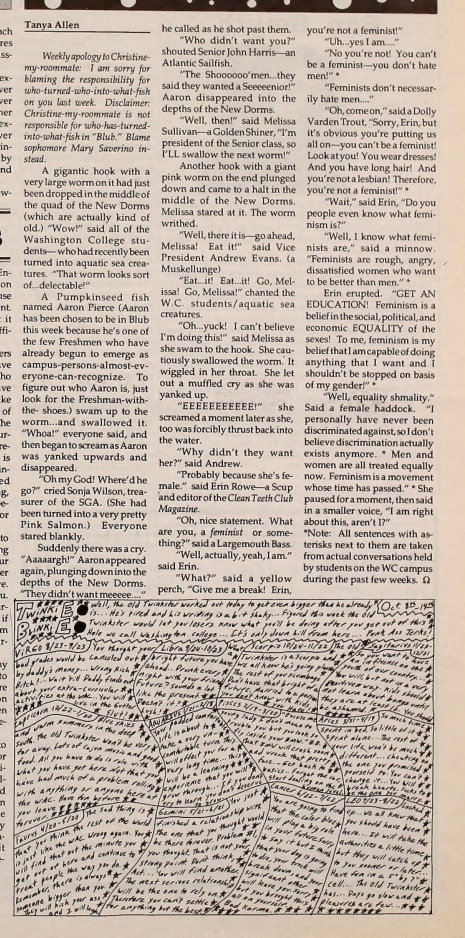
Blub

Tanya Allen



Weekly apology to Christine-my-roommate: I am sorry for blaming the responsibility for who-turned-who-into-what-fish on you last week. Disclaimer: Christine-my-roommate is not responsible for who-has-turned-into-what-fish in "Blub." Blame sophomore Mary Saverino instead.

A gigantic hook with a very large worm on it had just been dropped in the middle of the quad of the New Dorms (which are actually kind of old.) "Wow!" said all of the Washington College students—who had recently been turned into aquatic sea creatures. "That worm looks sort of...delectable!"

A Pumpkinseed fish named Aaron Pierce (Aaron has been chosen to be in Blub this week because he's one of the few Freshmen who have already begun to emerge as campus-persons-almost-everyone-can-recognize. To figure out who Aaron is, just look for the Freshman-with-the- shoes.) swam up to the worm. "Cool swirl mood it. "Whoa!" everyone said, and then began to scream as Aaron was yanked upwards and disappeared.

"Oh, my God! Where'd he go?" cried Sonja Wilson, treasurer of the SGA. (She had been turned into a very pretty Pink Salmon.) Everyone stared blankly.

Apparently there was a cry. "Aaaaargh!" Aaron appeared again, plunging down into the depths of the New Dorms. "They didn't want meeeee ...."

he called as he shot past them.

"Who didn't want you?" shouted Senior John Harris—an Atlantic Sailfish.

"The Shoooooo'men...they said they wanted a Seeeenior!" Aaron disappeared into the depths of the New Dorms.

"Well, then!" said Melissa Sullivan—a Golden Shiner, "I'm president of the Senior class, so I'LL swallow the next worm!"

Another hook with a giant pink worm on the end plunged down and came to a halt in the middle of the New Dorms. Melissa stared at it. The worm writhed.

"Well, there it is—go ahead, Melissa! Eat it!" said Vice President Andrew Evans. (a Muskellunge)

"Eat...it! Eat...it! Go, Melissa! Go, Melissa!" chanted the W.C. students/aquatic sea creatures.

"Oh...yuck! I can't believe I'm doing this!" said Melissa as she swam to the hook. She cautiously swallowed the worm. It wiggled in her throat. She let out a muffled cry as she was yanked up.

"EEEEEEEEEEE!" she screamed a moment later as she, too was forcibly thrust back into the water.

"Why didn't they want her?" said Andrew.

"Probably because she's female." Said Erin Rowe—a Scup and editor of the Clean Teeth Club Magazine.

"Oh, nice statement. What are you, a feminist or something?" said a Largemouth Bass.

"Well, actually, yeah, I am." said Erin.

"What?" said a yellow perch, "Give me a break! Erin, you're not a feminist!"

"Uh...yes I am...."

"No you're not! You can't be a feminist—you don't hate men!" *

"Feminists don't necessarily hate men...."

"Oh, come on," said a Dolly Varden Trout, "Sorry, Erin, but it's obvious you're putting us all on—you can't be a feminist! Look at you! You wear dresses! And you have long hair! And you're not a lesbian! Therefore, you're not a feminist!" *

"Wait," said Erin, "Do you people even know what feminism is?"

"Well, I know what feminists are," said a minnow. "Feminists are rough, angry, dissatisfied women who want to be better than men." *

Erin erupted. "GET AN EDUCATION! Feminism is a belief in the social, political, and economic EQUALITY of the sexes! To me, feminism is my belief that I am capable of doing anything that I want and I shouldn't be stopped on basis of my gender!" *

"Well, equality shmuality," Said a female haddock... "I personally have never been discriminated against, so I don't believe discrimination actually exists anymore. * Men and women are all treated equally now. Feminism is a movement whose time has passed." * She paused for a moment, then said in a smaller voice, "I am right about this, aren't I?"

Student Profile : Ben Smyth

Ben Smyth, a Gemini from the southern PA, York County area, holds the status of being a Senior Psychology major. He is also a brother in the Kappa Alpha Fraternity and has made the Dean's list a few times. He plans on attending graduate school for either neuroscience or neurochemistry.

This past summer he held an internship with WAC's Dr. McKillop. He worked on Interpersonal Enmity Relationships. For the layperson, he researched the dynamics and demographics and purpose of enemies on an interpersonal basis. In ten years he plans to still be in schoolfa professional student) and eventually he would like to be an M.D. in Psychiatry.

Among his likes he includes dancing, reading, music(hip-hop, reggae, Sting, modern jazz, etc.). Among his dislikes he includes country music and spicy food. His favorite color is the sky forty-five minutes after sundown on a clear night; indigo or some shade of purple that he can't pinpoint. He sees himself as mildly athletic which can be interpretted in many different ways. He claims to have a brown belt in Shuko-Ki.

On Washington College, he said that it is what you make of it; put in what you want to get out. His favorite memory at WAC is not printable(not unusual on this campus) and he is glad he got to meet so many interesting people. He is a dynamic conversationalist which anyone could discover just by cornering him for a chat.

Chaos in Somalia and Russia

Paul Briggs

In light of the bloody fighting that has taken place recently between US forces and General Mohammed Farah Aideed's followers, one might get the impression that the mission in Somalia is a failure.

The truth is that most of the original objectives have been achieved. The famine has ended, the population has been fed, and most of the country is safe. However, there is not yet a central government in place capable of maintaining order in the absence of United States and United Nations peace keepers. Note the term "peace keepers." It seems harmless enough implying that troops will not actually have to defeat anybody, just keep violence from flaring up. And so it was- until General Aideed ordered his troops to open fire on the Pakistani troops who were serving under the UN. Then the world learned that peacekeeping involves more than just standing around on a street corner with a gun in hand. Now the multi-national forces in Mogadishu have found themselves fighting heavily armed, well-organized, absolutely ruthless urban guerrillas.

Newspaper descriptions of the fighting often made it sound as though the US. forces were defeated. This is not the case- the Somali gunmen suffered heavier casualties and emerged in a strategically worse position. But this is less important than it seems. This conflict is essentially one of attrition, and the question is who can endure the greatest losses. For better or for worse, Americans have become accustomed to winning enormously lopsided victories, and have very little tolerance for high casualties- particularly when the goals are so far removed from our immediate interests. Aideed, on the other hand, has much more at stake and is perfectly willing to sacrifice everything but his own head in his quest for power.

Currently, conventional wisdom holds that the only options we have are to increase the American presence until Aideed is caught or withdraw completely. The President has, for now, chosen the first option. Neither option is particularly appealing. Unless the United States withdraws, it is likely that more Americans will be killed, wounded or captured. But if we pull out now, General Aideed will have Somalia on a silver platter.

The fact is that it is extremely unlikely that Aideed, with all of Mogadishu to hide in, will be captured anytime soon. Consider all the trouble the United States had to go to capture Noriega. The most that can realistically be achieved is that Aideed's forces can be crippled to the point where the next Somali government can deal with them. As we have recently learned, even this cannot be done safely.

The power struggle in Moscow has ended, and Yeltsin is firmly in charge. The army has cast its lot with him and taken control of the parliament building, violently dispersing the pro-communist demonstrators which had surrounded it. Signals from Moscow, including the firing of several major regional administrators, indicate that the government will soon begin cracking down on the Communist Party bosses and bureaucrats who still hold power in many parts of Russia.

As was mentioned two weeks ago, parliamentary elections are scheduled for December. If the new Parliament defies him on some issue, what will he do then? Political violence is a hard habit to break, especially if it proves effective; as, in this case, it has.

Clinton was right to support Yeltsin through this crisis. However, he must remember that Russia's future is more important than any one man. He must be prepared to insist that nothing like this ever happens again. Ω the need to print any sort of disclaimer disavowing the opinions expressed therein, and I thought that it was an appropriate piece to run in a space which for the past two years has been allotted to opinion features. I honestly did not think that anyone would confuse it with a news story.

Opinion features may be submitted to this paper by any student, at any point in time, and the views expressed therein do not reflect the opinions of the Elm, it's staff, Washington College or anyone else but the author. That has been the policy in the past, and it continues to be the editorial policy.

Having said that, I must admit that in hindsight I regret the decision to run "Madonnafesto." The problem is, that although I personally may be offended by a submission, my personal tastes are not at issue.

If I had the time, I would draw up a focus group of typical students and run every article by them before publication. I do know that someone, somewhere will be offended by something in this paper on a weekly basis.

You may rest assured, however, that the word "chick" will not be used in this year's Elm to refer to anything other than a young bird. The word "girl" will not be used in reference to any woman over the age of thirteen. Any other words which have historically been used to impugn women's morality, belittle women's occupations, ridicule women's temperaments, characterize women as immature, mark women as emotionalistic, or discriminate against any women on any basis are also prohibited. The same naturally applies to slurs against persons based on their race, religion, ethnicity or sexual orientation.

As pertains to the "Greeks Like to Drink" article, I trust that readers did not misinterpret the data to be referring to Hellenic organizations at Washington College. There is absolutely no empirical evidence to suggest that members these organizations at WC drink any more than the rest of the student body. Ω

Thea Mateau

Although conservation is a global issue, it is not possible for one person to travel around the world righting all environmental wrongs. The impulse to correct environmental problems is a recent one in our society. Settlers longed to control and conquer the land, thus making any kind of relationship with nature impossible. The Indians stressed the importance of life as a web connecting man, Earth and creatures. Most settlers aimed to destroy not only the Native Americans, but also their ideas.

17th century settlers were driven by fear of the elements, of "witches" and "devils." They wanted to subdue nature. Destruction became a status symbol. It was fine to kill wild creatures for fun or cut down trees just because they were there. They were destroying the harmony.

Even in these early times, some men like Thoreau and George Perkins Marsh believed in preserving the beauty of the wilderness. An important point in the environmental movement came in 1975, when the American Forestry Association was created in hope of influencing government. And that they did. Soon laws were created that authorized presidents to declare forest reserves Public Domain. In 1907 this privilege was taken away by angry congressmen, but it is thanks to these early movements that we have many of our National Parks and Reserves.

In 1886 George Bird Grinnel founded the first Audubon Society. He and the Audubon Society can be credited for the Park Protection act of 1894, which forbade hunting in natural parks and created the first wildlife sanctuary: Pelican Island. In 1892 the Sierra Club was created and helped in creating the Antiquities Act in 1906. This act was prepared in reaction to the depredation of pot hunters in archaeological sites in the Southwest. The act authorized the President to set aside precious or threatened sites.

A movement often in conflict with the park and forest conservation movement is the wildlife movement. While the conservationists urge the responsible use of nature by human society, wildlife activists advocate as little meddling with nature as possible. In 1964 the Wildlife Act was passed. It authorized hands-off protection for areas out of national forests, parks and Bureau of Land Management lands. This happened far too late to save many species. Also in 1964 the Wilderness Bill was passed, designating 9.1 million acres of wilderness as wildlife refuge.

In 1970 we celebrated our first Earth day and have been working arduously for 23 years since. Man has moved from dependence on the Earth to add responsibility to his relationship. And as Wallace Stegner said "we are still in transition from the notion of Man as master of Earth to the notion of Man as part of it." Ω

Elm Archives: October, 1966

Mark A. Schulman

As Washington College expands both physically and academically it must constantly question and examine its education policies and search for new ideas and concepts to encourage the self-development of the individual. One such concept which remains to be explored by Washington College is the Honor System.

The Honor System is based on the belief that students can successfully take the responsibility of establishing and maintaining standards in social and academic life. Entailed in this concept are such things as student self proctoring of examinations, student self scheduling of examinations, and student self responsibility for their social conduct.

What are the implications of such an Honor System? The effectiveness of the Honor System rests on a high sense of inner morality of the student. When students plan to abide by an Honor Code they are indicating publicly their acceptance of the system and their intention to live by their principles.

That a violation of this code should never occur is probably inconceivable. But students must resolve that their ideals shall be maintained, whatever penalties must be imposed to maintain them.

Implicit in the Honor Code is the requirement that a student report an infraction of which he has firsthand knowledge. Occasionally, there is the tendency to feel that this requires spying or "tattling". There is sometimes a tendency to feel that to report another's breach of honor is to deprive honor of its personal sanctity.

For any code of rules or Honor System to be effective, however, there must exist two forms of social control: one is an individual, inner morality resulting from religion, education, and public opinion; and the other is an external control, law. Although distinct in their mode of operation, these two forms of control are supplementary.

For the vast majority of students, the Honor Code will take the first form, that of a set of personal ideals or code of conduct. In a group of persons with varied backgrounds and different moral standards, however, there are always some, who, for a time at least, must be made to understand that dishonorable conduct has temporal penalties also, one of which may be a forced separation from the group whose integrity they have violated.

It has generally been the conviction of the many schools that use the Honor System that dishonor will never be curtailed by curtailing honor, and that those few who are weak will never be strengthened by weakening those many that are strong. It is for this reason that the Elm suggest s careful consideration of the establishment of an Honor System at Washington College. Ω

Broadsides Spring Up All Over

Tanya Allen

"There is Something Wrong with Poetry," a poem by Katie Degentesh, was the first to appear this year. Then there was Mark Murphy's "Why I Like to Think About Life: a truly exploratory discussion about the reason I'm sitting here writing this by an ordinary man who thinks a whole bunch of very powerful thoughts." This week the "Lawn Furniture" of Paul Small sprang up all over, thoroughly confusing all those who noticed that the editor had typed in "Broadsides—Spring, 1993" at the bottom of the page. (Wistful thinking.) There will be at least seven more poems and short-short stories displayed across campus this semester, along with roughly ten more during Spring semester. All Broadsides are written by undergraduate WC students.

The Broadsides series, which has had a long tradition at Washington College, has always been one of WC's most visible publications. Two years ago a related tradition, the "Poetry Postcard" contest, was also started. The three winners of each semester's contest get to see their Broadside made into a postcard by Mike Kaylor and the students who work in his print shop. All Broadsides are considered in the contest, although preference is given to publications of poetry. The contest is judged by a professional poet. Last year's judge was the poet Lynne Doyle. A few previous winners of the postcard contest have been Tanya Allen, Alex Baez, Becky Bryant, Thane Glenn, Jennifer Reddish, Tarin Towers and Rudy Weitz. Broadsides has a rolling acceptance policy—submissions will be accepted anytime. They should be given to Tanya Allen through Literary House mail, campus mail, or E-mail. It would be helpful if writers put their room numbers and extensions on submissions, as the editor will need writers to proof their poems and give approval of design before final printing. Ω

For the Love of Sugar

The artist who couldn't draw hands

Jerome had always felt a love for the world which often manifested itself in strange affections. His parents, once very proud of his peaceful nature, had since become worried about him.

Lately, he had grown quite fond of a particular grain of sugar. He had named it Randolf. Took it everywhere. He loved that grain of sugar more than anything else.

One fateful night, while at Dennys, his friend spilled a packet of sugar on the spot where Jerome had put Randy.

His friend tried to console him offering him a packet of Sweet and Low, as there was no more sugar. Jerome simply swept into his hands.

was addressed by Dr. Peter Wakefield. "When I come to these meetings I hear you talk in general terms and it's all very polite and sincere," Wakefield said. "But when I walk out of here I hear comments. . . . Are you trying to sneak something by the Faculty, and how do you explain such a tough reception [of the Preliminary Report]?"

Wubbels responded by confirming the worst fears of the faculty. "Sue Huck, Chuck and me had a secret meeting on Kent Island late one night last spring," Wubbels quipped. "As far as I know, this came up in a public way. It sprang from wholly wholesome instincts to try to do better rather than worse for the College. That's the agenda."

Trout addressed faculty discontent more directly. "It saddens me. I think a lot of it's natural. You're moving along, living your life, teaching your classes, and along comes something which asks us to change what we're doing. The College is fragile, the future is not guaranteed," he said. Trout then emphasized that not moving forward is a luxury the Faculty can ill afford, ". . . because if we don't move here, our chances of prosperity are nil."

President Trout defends the Preliminary Report

Wakefield then asked about errors in the statistical section of the Preliminary Report which Dr. Gene Hamilton made public at a recent meeting of the AAUP. Wubbels agreed that there were "about six" errors which had crept into the Report. He also noted that the impact on the validity of the models used was minimal, and that "In my opinion, it has not changed the basic financial intelligence [contained in the Preliminary Report.]"

Wakefield said another source of concern was the $200,000 to be invested in promoting the College by hiring Communicorps, an Atlanta-based higher education marketing firm. Vice President for Admissions Kevin Coveney felt the expense was justifiable, saying "In the ten years I've been here, Washington College has invested almost nothing in marketing." Trout concurred, saying "The feeling on the part of the Trustees was that this is a moment for investment." He added that the $200,000 figure may be higher than the final costs of the marketing effort, and that the sum is to be paid incrementally.

The discussion then became more broad-ranging. Cades stressed the need for realism, affirming that the final plan ". . . shouldn't be pie in the sky, and that's why we want to have a lot of faculty discussion."

Dr. Tatum said that the Long Range Plan ". . . needs thoroughness, and time may be a factor in thoroughness. [The College should not] . . . rush with the idea that we must be finished at such and such a date." Trout responded that "It seems to me that a fourteen month period, certainly from a trustee point of view, is a really long time."

Another topic of discussion was the role of "under subscribed" academic departments See "Forum" page 11 were generously allocated and Plan C could probably get by with three Residence Life staff." By including five such staff in Plan C, expenditures were overstated in proportion to the lower headcount.

Thirdly, the student/faculty ratio is higher in Plan C, representing the hiring of a greater number of faculty per students, thus increasing expenditures in Plan C.

Fourth, the optimal capacity of the college is not reached as quickly in Plan C as in Plan A, and Plan C only reaches a Fall FTE of 925. Hamilton feels that a Fall FTE of 966 would not exceed capacity. Also, by growing to capacity at the same rate as Plan A, Plan C would grow to a headcount of 939, but a year later than Plan A, resulting in less revenue in the interim years. Additionally, increasing enrollment at the same rate in both models makes them easier to compare.

Fifth, Hamilton feels that the library doesn't need to be expanded to the same size in both plans. With more students, Plan A would need greater facilities, but C could manage without expansion. He admits that this is arguable, but would assist Plan C in being more competitive.

Sixth, debt service costs (the interest paid on loans) are less in Plan A's model than expressed on page 77 of the Preliminary Report. The construction of new dormitories are proposed to take place in 1996, 1999 and 2000, with the money to be borrowed the year before. The cost of these buildings would be $2.25, $2.5 and $2.75 million respectively, reflecting inflation. Hamilton: "Dormitories are reflected in Plan A as costing the same each time. Money is borrowed, but the increase in the debt service does not reflect the increased cost of the second and third dorms. The expense of dorms continues for 30 years. This error results in a $54,000 discrepancy from the year 2000 on." The Replacement and Repair reserve, usually 3% of the buildings' value, is also not included for new buildings in Plan A.

In examining the discrepancy between expenditures in Plans A and C, even when both were at the same number of students Hamilton found that more Financial Aid was given out in C, though less students were on room and board. "Plan C has same number of students than plan A, in addition it has less students on room and board, but was paying out more financial aid. Financial Aid is computed with room and board taken into account." Although both plans projected 75% of students to live in dorms, Plan A had more students living on campus for the first year. This resulted in an increased revenue for A compared to C.

Hamilton corrected the models to take into account the above problems he spotted. When re-projected, Plan C pulls out of deficits in FY1996 with a surplus of $193,000 and continues to grow. Plan A pulls out at the same time, but with only a razor-thin ($18,548) surplus. Plan A grows to a much higher surplus by FY2005 ($1,671,199 compared to C's $786,153), but Plan C's viability is present in that it does not go back into debt. Plan C has a better profit/loss performance for all but the last two years.

To summarize conclusions drawn from his corrected version, Hamilton says: "The big argument against Plan C, is that it will pull the College out of debt slowly but then go back in debt. The corrected version pulls out of debt much more aggressively, and doesn't go back in deficit. Additionally, most financial planners say you can't project out more than five years anyway — If you're just interested in getting out of debt, Plan C is better than Plan A."

After the initial stage of corrections, Hamilton set out to see how he could improve the plans. He examined ways to create a more realistic picture of the next eleven years. "When a deficit is run, models show no effect on the next year. Where does the deficit go? It is taken out of the funds functioning as endowment. (Money we're allowed to spend.) One of the revenues items is the endowment income, 5% of a three year moving average. What should have been done is to feed back the profit or loss of each year into the funds functioning as endowment of the next year. That's much more realistic.

When this is corrected for, Plan A has a really weak pull out and by the year 2000, has a razor thin ($2000) surplus Plan C however, pulls out in two years and continues to rise. [to a $1,097,959 surplus in FY 2001] In the beginning, both are hurt by the deficit. But, Plan C continues to grow and the surplus stabilizes in the last years."

Hamilton again attempts to improve upon these models by using the current estimated budget (based on 815 full time enrollment (FTE) rather than the projected 840 FTE) and by underestimating restricted expenditures and transfers. The LRPC projections used an estimate of $267,000 restricted gifts for this year, but more recently the Faculty Finance committee was given the estimate of $500,000 as more accurate. With a better picture of this year's budget, Hamilton's re-projection resulted in "Plan A having deficits until 2000, then pulls out. Both models were hurt by the real budget, but Plan C pulls out weakly in two years, then grows and stabilizes around a $1 million surplus in 2002."

All of these re-projections, Hamilton feels, decrease the argument in favor of the aggressive growth of the Plan A as clearly viable over Plan C which calls for only growth to capacity.

When re-projected by Hamilton, the plans are much closer than the 3 million difference in outcome the LRPC report suggests. The results of Hamilton's projections do not clearly indicate plan A as being as clear of a sign for growth as Wubbels claimed in the Preliminary Report. In fact, Hamilton feels that growth to capacity would better get the college out of debt and be more feasible. "To balance the budget in two years, balance in the sense of having everything fully funded, what should be done is get the enrollment up to 900 and the endowment up to 38 million. That would do it. You should get the enrollment up as fast as you can, whether or not you can raise the endowment. It just helps. After that if you want to grow, it is fine as long as you keep growing the endowment along at the same time. What is required is basically an initial push for endowment money, and at the same time, grow to nine hundred. After that increase enrollment in tandem with endowment growth."Ω

Mental Health and Wellness Lecture Series

The Mental Health/ Wellness Speaker Series began last Tuesday with a lecture by Leo Quinn on stress and time management. The new series is sponsored by Health Services, the Pan-Hellenic Council, Student Activities and Student Affairs.

Mr. Quinn's lecture addressed the need to rationally cope with the many conflicting stressors which can sometimes overwhelm us in a world where people can easily overload themselves with responsibilities.

These stresses often arise when people commit themselves to too many projects at one time. Mr. Quinn noted the need to prioritize activities, and advised that over-committed people need to "learn how to say no," to those who would seek to increase the demands on their time.

Another of Mr. Quinn's themes was time management. Procrastination is an easily eliminated source of stress. To prevent procrastination, one may plan ahead to effectively budget time and reduce stress, Mr. Quinn said.

Another technique for coping with stress is taking a break from stressful activities. According to Mr. Quinn, reading, watching television and sleeping are all effective ways to cope with stress.

Exercise is another important tool in any program of stress management. Regular exercise has been proven to prevent sleeplessness, lower blood pressure and decrease the biological impact of stress. Mr. Quinn also demonstrated how meditation can enhance relaxation.

The Mental Health/ Wellness Speaker Series has been organized by Maria Jerardi. Ms. Jerardi encourages students to attend, adding that "While the lectures are held during lunch time, you won't loose the social atmosphere of lunch. You can come in, bring your lunch and eat during the presentation." The next lecture in the series is on Wednesday, 20 October in Hynson Lounge at 12:30. The topic of the next lecture is co-dependency. Ω

Kappa Alpha and Alpha Chi Omega Assist Lions

Mark Murphy
Michelle van der Nat

Saturday was a great day for flipping chicken! Last Saturday the Lyons Club held their annual "Chicken Flip" at Trinity Lutheran Church in Chestertown. From 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., the Kappa Alpha Order and TWO Alpha Chis flipped and basted hundreds of chickens. Woo hoo!!! Everyone seemed to be having a good time and the chicken was delicious.

There was also a flea market, where Mark Murphy picked up an awesome Schlitz hat. It happens to be his second favorite type of malt liquor but his new favorite hat. Oh yeah, he also had his first and perhaps last gizzard. Have you ever had one?

Anyway, all of the proceeds went to a very good cause, but we just can't remember exactly what cause it went to. Probably the Lyons Club. Most important of all, it was a chance for some of the Greek Organizations of Washington College to throng with the Chestertown community. (Do you know what "throng" means? To crowd together in great numbers.)

Kevin Marshall seems to enjoy it. "We like it good. Real good," he says.

"The best part was actually flipping the chicken. . . No! Eating! Eating the chicken was best!" claims Caroline Jensen.

"We always do it in the fall and in the spring," Jeff Grafton says.

Even though there was not a multitude of AX's, at least one is expected to show up in the spring.

"I'd flip for the KA's any day," says Michelle.

"More AX's would have showed up had Michelle told us the right date," claims Becky Strauss.

"I was happy to see the two of them," says Mark Murphy.

Michelle and Caroline and the KA's got pretty hot and greasy, however they were glad to help. Ω

Internship Opportunities

Maryland General Assembly Internships

The selection process has begun for students interested in applying for admission to the internship program at the Maryland General Assembly during the spring semester. This program requires full time participation of interns on Tuesdays and Thursdays as well as class on Monday afternoon. Students must have an overall cumulative GPA of at least 3.0 and who have earned at least a B in forms of lit (if applicable.)

Preference will be given to students who are political science majors in their junior year or to students who will be first semester seniors in the spring. Preference will also be given to students who have taken pol sci 391, 311 and/or 401.

Final choice of interns will be made in Annapolis, however the Political Science Department will make the first cut.

The internship program counts as two courses. Students interested in the program should contact Professor Weissman at ext. 7764 or Professor Premo at ext. 7769 before 14 October. Students who have participated in the MGA internship program in the past have found it to be very demanding in terms of time, flexibility and effort, but have also found it very rewarding and instructive.

Benedictine School Internship

The Benedictine School for Exceptional Children is currently accepting applications for a paid internship position in public relations and fundraising. The position comes with a stipend of $2000 a year. Successful applicants will report to the Director of Development of the Benedictine School and need to be prepared to start as soon as possible.

The Benedictine School is a residential facility for mentally disabled children and young adults. It is located in Ridgely, which is about 35 miles from Chestertown.

Internship responsibilities include drafting a monthly newsletter, conducting media relations, planning of events, researching prospective donors and contacting individual and institutional donors.

Applicants must be either a junior or a senior, although a junior would be preferable. Some knowledge of not for profit fundraising is needed, as are good interpersonal skills. Applicants should also have an interest in helping children and young adults achieve their potential. Knowledge of word processing and desktop publishing programs is also required.

To apply, send a resume and cover letter to Chris Harman, Director of Development, The Benedictine School for Exceptional Children, 14299 Benedictine Lane, Ridgely, MD, 21660-9710. Follow up with a phone call to Mr. Harman at 634-2292. For more information, contact either Linda Cades (ext. 7890) or Vicky Sawyer (ext. 7892).

Second Floor Somerset Service

Chris Downs

The residents of second floor Somerset House are or- ganizing a major new commu- nity service initiative this year. The projects are entirely vol- untary.

These events are not limited to hall residents. We are willing to work with a wide variety of campus organizations who are involved with community serv- ice. Residents have worked with the members of Hands Out in one occasion already, and further activities with Hands Out are on the schedule for later in the semester.

On Saturday, September 25, members of the hall and hands will be painted at Camp Fairlee Manor.

This past Saturday, Octo- ber 2, residents of the hall painted parts of the exterior of the house at the Kent Youth Center.

The next event is to be in cooperation with Hands Out, and is scheduled for Saturday, October 23. The day will be devoted to repair work at Meeting Ground, which is a shelter for the homeless.

If anyone is interested in obtaining some volunteer hours, or just wants to come out and pitch in, please contact David George or Jason Myers at ext. 8849, or stop by Somerset 307. Ω

Virtual Reality

Sherry Menton

Lest the headline mislead you, I'm not talking about the cool ar- cade games with helmets and gloves, a la Lawnmower Man. I'm referring to the text-based virtual reality of Multi-User Dungeons, or MUDs. For those of you unfa- miliar with MUDs, they can best be described as online, interactive Dungeons & Dragons, combined with the social chit-chatting of bulletin board systems like the one run by U Iowa. Similar to the old single-user text adventure games like Adventure! and the Zork tril- ogy, MUDs allow you to create a playing character and explore a text-based world populated with monsters to kill, items and equip- ment to gather, and quests to solve, usually with the help of other players along the way. A wide range of social commands allow you to interact with other players much more flexibly and realisti- cally, than the numerous smiley faces of bbs-ing allow.

LegendMUD, running at telnet address 192.146.226.4 10358, is not your run-of-the-mill MUD, however. LegendMUD will con- tain areas based strictly on events in real-world history or mythol- ogy. Many WC students, past and present, are working to make this happen. Raph and Kristen Koster, Class of '92 and '90 respectively, are the most prolific area-builders so far. Raph has created Roman Britain, complete with Picts be- yond Hadrian's Wall, and an abandoned Druidic enclave on the Isle of Man. Raph is also in various stages of completing three different eras of Peruvian civilization, and is co-creating an Iroquois vil- lage. Kristen has just this week completed her Arabian area, which is where you'll begin the game when you log in. Mike Tarrant, a senior Sociology major, is creating Celtic Ireland, I am making St.Denis Abbey, and Katie Meadors and Katie Degentesh have helped. Friends that we've met over the Internet are also working on the MUD, and other upcoming or hoped-for areas in- clude WWII North Africa, 1908 Antarctica, Salem Village, the tex- tile factories of Lowell, MA, Dante's Hell, and Arcadia/ Olympus.

We make no claims that LegendMUD is fully functional and ready to play, but there IS a lot you can do already. Raph and Kristen and I are considering making a Washington College campus tour/replica using a MUD-like environment, and would love to hear from anyone who'd be interested in working with us. A playing area of LegendMUD, based on Chestertown, is also possible if we receive enough interest.

A double-clickable telnet launch icon is enclosed in mes- sages about LegendMUD in both Public email and on PacerForum. Ω

Leadership Seminar

On Saturday, September 25, 27 students participated in a day-long program in leader- ship training. These students had been nominated by faculty and peers, and at the seminar heard lectures by eight mem- bers of the Washington College faculty, administration and staff. The Campus Leaders Seminar was designed as an introduction to management techniques.

From an introductory message in a booklet prepared for the seminar participants, W. Dennis Berry, Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation writes, "There is no denying this is an ambitious project with quite a bit of in- formation for one short day program. However, I am sure that this management sampler will provide you with enough information to allow you to assume a more visible and poised leadership role on campus and within society."

Topics included "Goal Setting," from Vicky Sawyer, Assistant Director of the Office of Career Development; "Moti- vating Volunteers," from Dave Knowles, Director of Dining Services and Conferences; "Team Building," from Barry Barrell, Sociology Department Lecturer; "Time Management," from Athletic Director Geoff Miller; "Planning and Con- ducting Meetings," from George Spilich, Psychology Department Chair; and "Public Relations: Interacting with Groups," from Joe Holt, Executive Assistant to the President.

Response was so positive to the seminar that an additional one is in the works for second semester. Said Berry, "We're going after those kids and ask- ing what they want to see in the Level Two program. 24 out of the 27 seminar participants wanted to see Level Two be a half-day program that would be concentrated on one topic rather than an overview like Level One is." The second phase of the Leadership Seminar is tentatively scheduled for Feb- ruary, 1994.

Trout also spoke to the Faculty about the need to improve retention, noting that "Last June the Committee on Academic Standing dropped 27 students." Forty more students were placed on academic probation, and nineteen more remained on academic probation. About twenty additional students are held back each year because of failed courses and incomplete senior obligations.

To find academic problems as soon as possible, Trout advised professors to test their students early, and to use "extra vigilance, extra care."

Trout also said that of the last 250 students who left WC in the past three semesters, 21% left because of academic difficulty, 48% transferred to other colleges, 9% left for personal reasons, 5% left for financial reasons, 5% took a leave of absence and 16% left for unknown reasons.

Weissman offered a hypothesis in an effort to explain why some of the students for personal reasons. "I have spoken with several students who feel that they have not received the full support of the College in coming to terms with their sexual identity," he said. Weissman also indicated that certain of the Provost's remarks show that "... the institution has a ways to go in creating an environment where all students feel a part of the community, regardless of sexual orientation."

Wubbels reported for the Academic Council, commenting on a new course proposal form, the status of independent study and the senior obligation at Washington College, and the need to examine the criteria for completing a major. Tatum then said to Wubbels that "No one knows what's going on in Academic Council, except when you report it at Faculty Meetings." Dr. Cousineau agreed, adding that "a mere summary" does not replace a thorough accounting.

Elections for Committee positions were conducted, and Dr. James Locker was selected for the Appeals Committee. Jason Rubin was selected for the Honors and Awards Committee. Ω

Singing The Hockey Blues

The Washington College field hockey team hasn't won since its victory over Wesley College on opening day. Currently in a six-game winless streak, the Sho'women just completed an 0-3 week.

So what's wrong with them? They're only three years removed from a Division III national ranking of 14. There are still players on this year's team who remember what it was like to be the second-ranked team in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

So what's wrong this year? The team's tailspin has included losses to Gettysburg, Western Maryland, Swarthmore, Bryn Mawr, and Mary Washington. Currently, the highlight of the season is a tie to Haverford.

So what's up with this? Should new head coach Sarah Feyerherm get the pink slip seven games into her Washington coaching career? Does the team need to pick up all new players? Does the athletic department need to get rid of the field hockey program?

Sports Commentary

Not on your life. Not after Sunday's performance against Mary Washington.

Were you there to see the home team take on the top-ranked team in the South Region? Were you there to see history almost in the making? Were you at the game where Washington almost pulled off the biggest upset of the season?

If you said no to all of the questions above, you need to go support the field hockey team. While their record may be subpar, the team is just coming into its own, and the players are finally starting to jell with each other and the coach.

Additionally, three of their losses have come by only one goal, and the defense has been superb. In last week's three losses, goalie Peggy Busker had 56 saves combined.

The team is loaded with talented young players, and it is sending a message to the rest of the Centennial Conference that they are here for a while. While it may be frustrating to keep ending up on the short end of the score, the Sho'women are long on experience.

It may be tough on the seniors, but they watched their team rise to prominence during their freshman year. Now, it's a chance for the freshmen and sophomores to gain valuable experience so that they will hopefully be able to reach the top of the standings someday.

So you haven't seen a field hockey game yet this year? Check them out tomorrow at 1 p.m. against Dickinson. Maybe you'll see their first-ever conference win—and maybe it will be the start of something big!

--Matt Murray

Conference Announces Honors

Matt Murray

For the first time in Centennial Conference history, a Washington athlete was named as a conference Player of the Week in their sport.

Busker, a sophomore from Silver Spring, MD, made 55 saves in four games and held her opponents to five goals.

rolls.

WAC Notes

Last week, Jon Kostyal scored five goals with four coming in a 4-1 win over Ursinus, as he was named as the soccer player of the week.

Kostyal is also Newt's P.O.W. this week.

Also being honored in their respectives sports were Peggy Busker and Beverly Diaz, as they were named to the field hockey and volleyball honor

Diaz held her team together this weekend with 47 kills and 68 digs in the Washington Invitational.

Soccer Reaches Milestone

With their 4-1 win over Ursinus, the soccer team achieved the 300th win in its history.

The soccer program at Washington dates back to 1946.

WC Field Hockey Sticks With Top Team In Region

Renee Guckert and Jill Schultz fight for the ball in front of the net.

Matt Murray

It was your typical David versus Goliath contest last Sunday, as Washington College's field hockey team attempted to upset the South Region's top-ranked Mary Washington.

The Sho'women held the game scoreless for the first 60 minutes of the contest, but Leslie Pashinski's penalty stroke gave the visiting team a 1-0 lead which would prove to be the game-winner.

For Washington (1-5-1), the game went into the loss column, but it was a moral victory of sorts, especially since the team played without leading scorer Renee Guckert.

"It wasn't our best game, but defensively we did what we had to do to keep them out and we frustrated them," head coach Sarah Feyerherm said. "They (Mary Washington) were excited to get a second goal out of us and get out of her with a win."

All day long, Mary Washington pounded the goal with shots. The visitors totaled 43 shots—30 from inside the arc. Washington's Peggy Busker finished with 16 saves.

Mary Washington started pressuring the Sho'women early. For the first ten minutes of the game, the visitors held the ball on the offensive end of the field and forced three penalty corners.

Washington settled down and started to carry the ball onto the offensive end a little bit, but Mary Washington still dominated.

With 13:30 left in the first half, Mary Washington had their best opportunity of the game up until that point. With a crowd of people in front of the goal, Busker made one kick save, and when Suzy Chenault tried to follow up, defender Jen Hanifee saved the shot and knocked Chenault into the post.

At that point, Washington started to pick up steam and attack the Mary Washington goal with Kouri Coleman and Liz Olivere getting a couple of fast break opportunities.

"I think the difference was we

"It would have been huge. I don't think the players realize how big this would've been. I don't think the players realize how big it was to only lose 2-0." --Sarah Feyerherm stopped playing like we were afraid to let them score and started playing like they were going to score," Feyerherm said.

Washington's best chance at a goal came with 1:28 left in the half when Coleman's shot off a fast break opportunity was saved by Mary Washington's Stephanie Lowe, and Amy Barrell's follow up shot was stopped by defender Bridget Rooney.

At halftime, the score was tied 0-0 with Washington playing close against one of the top ten teams in Division III.

"To be 0-0 at halftime is not what they (Mary Washington) were expecting," Feyerherm said.

The second half started much as the first had with Mary Washington pressuring the Sho'women defense. Eight minutes into the half, Busker made two tough saves on shots from ten yards.

However, the game would be decided 17 minutes later when a pile up in front of the goal led to the penalty stroke which gave the visitors the lead. Mary Washington would score again on a Chenault shot with time running out to make the final 2-0.

In staying close with one of the best teams in the country, Washington almost pulled off one of the biggest upsets in school history.

"(The win) would have been huge," Feyerherm said. "I don't even know if the players realize how big this would've been. I don't think the players realize how big it was to only lose 2-0."

Midfielder Jill Schultz also felt the game had important ramifications for Washington's season.

"I think we stuck together and if we keep playing like we have been playing, we'll surprise some people towards the end of the season," she said.

Feyerherm was happy with the team's performance but was still disappointed in the outcome.

"I'm proud of how they played," she said. "They've been playing good hockey and we're still not winning, and right now I just have to ask myself why."

Washington Scores A Win, A Loss, And A Tie

Shoremen Tie Haverford In Double Overtime After 4-1 Explosion From Kostyal At Ursinus

Paul Kenny

Last week, the Shoremen soccer team played three key games which would give them a good perspective on the outlook for the rest of the season.

On Wednesday, the 29th of September, the Shoremen were disappointingly defeated 4-1 at Goucher. The actual game was much closer than the score-line suggests.

"They're a solid team all round, and they have a couple of good players," head coach Todd Helbling said. "They matched up evenly against us."

However, luck was with the Gophers. They scored their first goal in the first 45 seconds of the game. Their second goal was scored with a shot from 30 yards out which was deflected by a Shoremen defender, sending goalie Greg Miller the wrong way.

The Shoremen picked the pace up tremendously in the following twenty minutes playing some of their best soccer all year.

Although the Shoremen had the opportunites to score, outshooting the Gophers 15-12 for the game, they were unable to put the ball in the net in the first half. For most of the first half the Shoremen dominated the flow of the game.

To add to their frustrations, defensive sweeper Chip Helm sprained his ankle late in the first half and was unable to play for the rest of the game. Early in the second half, freshman Jon Kosytal scored the one and only goal for the Shoremen, off a through ball from Rory Conway.

The rest of the second half was a battle between the two teams. The Shoremen applied more pressure in an effort to break the Gophers down and may be score an equalizer.

However, the Gophers scored their last two goals late in the second half, quelling any hopes for the Shoremen.

Last Saturday, the Shoremen travelled to Ursinus where they would gain a key win in a conference game. This game proved to be the exact opposite of the Goucher game. This time, the score was to be 4-1 Shoremen in another evenly matched game.

Coach Helbling made some position changes in an attempt to maximize the strengths of his players. Whether the position changes had anything to do with it or not, the Shoremen played a superb game.

"It was the best game we've played all season, and we played all 90 minutes intense," co-captain Greg Miller said. "The team is starting to come together as a unit with the freshmen settling into the style of play."

The defensive unit played a superb game, marking their players tightly and shutting down the opportunites that Ursinus had.

Sophomores Chip Helm and Geoff Bley played great games and freshman Will Merriken played a great game at stopper for the Shoremen.

At the other end of the field, freshman Jon Kosytal scored all four of the goals for the Shoremen earning him the honor of Centennial Player of the week. Kosytal is the first athlete to earn this honor for Washington College in the new Centennial Conference.

Ursinus is a very similar team to Washington. They are young and match up talent-wise man for man with the Shoremen. However, the Shoremen got the breaks and capitalized on them. The overall record for the Shoremen is 5-5-1.

Greg Miller had 11 saves against Haverford on Wednesday.

This Wednesday, Washington (5-5-2) tied the Haverford Red Wave 0-0 in double overtime.

Greg Miller had 11 saves in the goal to anchor the defense which held one of the conference powers scoreless.

Haverford's last victim has been Western Maryland in a 6-0 victory, but Washington shut Haverford down.

Washington Volleyball Shows Well In Tourney

Erika K. Ford

After a fast-paced weekend of tough tournament play, the Sho'women volleyball team finished 2-3 in the Washington College Invitational. They are now 15-11 overall.

Friday night ended with an enthusiastic spirit when both Gallaudet and Scranton were easily defeated. The three games the next day proved to be more difficult however, and the team fell each time. In the last game of the tournament, sophomore Jen Dixon was downed after suffering an injury.

Volleyball coach Penny Fall felt that the team showed "their best playing all season" against Scranton.

"We had few errors and just good clean playing in both matches," Fall said.

Sophomore Michelle Chin had 13 assists that match-up while junior Beverly Diaz led with nine digs.

On Saturday morning, the Sho'women first faced Albright.

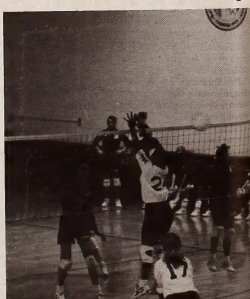
"We lacked a total focus situation," Fall said. "We were not good intensity-wise against them."

Albright won two of three matches.

In the next round of play, the team struggled against Salisbury State, one of the toughest schools in the region, and lost twice.

"They (S.S.U.) beat us clean. I would have to say they played the best volleyball overall that weekend." --Penny Fall

"They beat us clean," Fall said. "I would have to say they played the best volleyball overall that weekend."



In the final match-up against Catholic, Dixon suffered a knee injury and was forced to sit on the bench. Fall was extremely pleased at how the rest of the team rallied together, staying "intensity-focused and in the game." She concluded that the team had a "disappointing loss, but not a disappointing performance."

Co-captain Diaz was a substantial part of the team's force in the Invitational. She had 47 kills, 68 digs, four service aces, as well as six blocks in the tournament. Overall the team remains 3-2 and ranks fifth of the Centennial Conference's eleven teams.

In a late game on Wednesday Washington went up against Ursinus(1-5 coming into the game). This weekend they'll be away at the Gallaudet Tournament in D.C.

The volleyball team's next appearance on their home court will be Wednesday, October 13. At 6:30 p.m. when they'll face off against Hood, Salisbury State again, and Widener, hoping to improve upon their .577 winning percentage.

The team will then have six days off until their match at Hopkins on October 19.

Beverly Diaz goes up for the block.

Jordan Retires

Matt Murray

On Thursday morning at 11:00 a.m., basketball star and icon Michael Jordan retired from the National Basketball Association and the Chicago Bulls.

After winning his third consecutive N.B.A. Championship, Jordan felt he had reached the 'pinnacle of his career" and it was time to move on.

Besides the team championships, Jordan was the most popular basketball player in the world, and his exploits on the court were legendary.

Jordan was an all-star from the moment he entered the league in 1984.

His retirement comes only two years after Earvin "Magic" Johnson's retirement and one year after Larry Bird's retirement. All three are basketball legends.

Jordan also cited the death of his father this summer as another reason for his departure.

He said a comeback was possible in a year but unlikely.

Jordan's Bulls beat the Phoenix Suns for the championship in June.

In other news...

The American and National League Championship Series began this week in Major League Baseball.

In the American League, Jack McDowell leads the Western Division's Chicago Whitesox against John Olerud and the Eastern Division's Toronto Bluejays.

The Bluejays are built on hitting and speed with 19-game winner Pat Hentgen leading the pitching staff. The Jays won game one on Tuesday night.

Around the Nation

The Sox are built on power and pitching. Big bats Frank Thomas and Robin Ventura hope to balance their strong pitching.

In the National League, the series pits the fearless against the gutless. The Philadelphia Phillies haven't been afraid of anything all year, and they're not overly-concerned with the Atlanta Braves who face gut wrench time or the possibility of losing three straight World Series.

Philadelphia's offense of Lenny Dykstra, John Kruk, Dave Hollins, and Darren Daulton hope to beat up on Atlanta's super pitching staff of Greg Maddux, Tommy Glavine, Steve Avery, and John Smoltz.

All games are being televised on channels 9 and 11.

In N.F.L. action this weekend, it was Chicago over Atlanta, Tampa Bay over Detroit, Denver with a win over Indianapolis, Dallas with a blowout of the Packers, Kansas City over the Raiders, the 49ers with a win over Jim McMahon's Vikings, the Saints beating the Rams to stay undefeated, the Eagles taking first place in the NFC East with a win over the Jets on a 94-yard interception return, Seattle over the Chargers, Buffalo beating the Giants, and the Dolphins over Washington.

W.C. Alumni Scoring Machine Schools '93 Lacrosse Team

Dave Lipinski

This past Saturday, the Washington College Lacrosse Team had their first game of the fall against the Alumni. The Alumni won the match 15-7 in front of the familiar crowd on Kibler Field.

The Shoremen played with determination but could not seem to slow down the Alumni scoring machine.

"It was a great opportunity for our kids to compete against players who were not only talented but mentally tough," head lacrosse coach Terry Corcoran said. "The Alumni showed our kids that you don't let fatigue prevent you from executing."

Dave Slomkowski showed a little about what it takes to be a three-time All-American goalie as he dazzled the crowd with thirty saves.

"If it was not for Slom(kowski) they would have been right there with us," said two-time First team All-American and '90 grad Bob Martino who had two goals. "The game went well. That was definitely the best they have played us in the last couple of years. I think they are going to have an exceptional year."

For the Shoremen, the scoring came from the veterans. Two-time All-American senior attackman Jason Paige found the goal twice in the second and third quarters. Junior midfielder Christian Boone also tallied two goals. Starting attackmen Chris Sanchez and Bart Jaeger both scored for the Shoremen. Finally, All-American senior midfielder Chris Cote tallied once.

For the Alumni the scoring was generous. Bob Martino scored twice along with All-American Tim Hormes. Three-time All-Pro MILL and All-American John Nostrant netted three scores from midfield. All-Pro Baltimore Thunder standout Rick Sowell had two goals, while All-American Chris Dollar contributed with one. Additionally, 1993 graduates Greg Mouracade and Dave Taibl both scored.

This Saturday at 1:30 the Shoremen will host Division I powerhouse the University of Maryland. Corcoran is looking forward to the challenge.

"Maryland will be another great opportunity for us to measure our determination against bigger and faster people," he said.

So come out tomorrow to watch some good lacrosse and support the team as they take on the Terps.

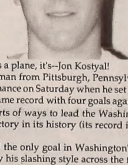
KA Takes D II Crown

Jason Kraus

On Tuesday afternoon, a fired up Kappa Alpha Order football team played arguably their best game of the year in defeating Phi Delta Theta 27-20.

This win gives the K.A.'s their first football title since the late 1980's and returns a little respectability to a group more well-known for their academic than athletic prowess.

The K.A.'s finally took control of a back and forth game when Andre Taylor busted into the endzone from about a yard out with less than a minute to play.



Taylor's touchdown run was set up by a deep pass to Division II player of the year Chuck Albrecht, who was able to get behind the Phi Delt secondary for the third time that day and bring his team to within one yard of a victory.

This touchdown nullified an outstanding effort by Phi Delt quarterback Giles Beale who singlehandedly had tied the game at twenty with his slashing running style.

However, in the end, it was a mistake by Beale that secured a victory for the K.A.'s as Maurice Freeland intercepted an errant pass with about ten seconds left in the game to secure the win.

NEWT'S CHESTERTOWN BAR

Look--it's a bird, it's a plane, it's--Jon Kostyal!

The amazing freshman from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania put on a incredible performance on Saturday when he set a Centennial Conference single-game record with four goals against Ursinus.

He scored in all sorts of ways to lead the Washington Soccer team to the 300th victory in its history (its record is 300-258-56 since 1946).

Kostyal also scored the only goal in Washington's 4-1 loss to Coucher. Defined by his slashing style across the field and his powerful shot, Kostyal now leads the team in goals with seven.

Honorable mention this week goes to Peggy Busker who made 55 saves in three games against Swarthmore, Bryn Mawr and Mary Washington

In other news...

Fan of the week this week goes to Greggi Miller who did a great job cheering at girlfriend Kouri Coleman's field hockey game. Coleman showed Greggi a thing or two in an awesome performance against Mary Washington on Sunday.

Cyclist of the week goes to ... Mark Murphy again. He showed off his awesome cycling skill once again. Most Improved Cyclist goes to Michelle Vandernat (Sorry Michelle... Mark put me up to it).

And by sports editorial decree, we feel Tara Rathel needs smaller uniform pants because the trainers always have to tape them (I think Kate whines too much).

Task Force Selected

By Charles H. Trout

In mid-July, I issued a response to the report of the Task Force on the Status of Gay Men and Lesbians at Washington College and pledged to appoint an Ad Hoc Committee comprised of faculty, staff, and students to monitor the implementation of the recommendations agreed to in my memorandum of July 13th. I am pleased to report the following members of our community have accepted appointment to the Committee: Dale Daigle-Chair, Linda Cades, Jeff Chaffin, Lionel Dyson '94, Rachel Fink '94.

I expect the Committee will hold an organizational meeting in the not-too-distant future to begin work on evaluating the implementation of the recommendations. I urge all members of our community to provide assistance to members of this committee. Ω

Students Present Honor Code Draft

by Abby R. Moss

The Honor Code Committee of the Student Government Association will present its draft of a new Honor Code to the Ad Hoc Committee on Academic Dishonesty next Tuesday. The proposal is the culmination of several years of student involvement in the reevaluation of the Honor Code.

SGA Vice President Max Walton heads up the SGA Honor Code Committee, and has been instrumental in writing the draft. Walton said that the draft was compiled using research material which has come from the Ad Hoc Committee, adding that "I firmly believe that this [the Honor Code] should be strengthened and useable. Everyone should understand what is meant by the Honor Code and what the consequences for violating it are."

"As it is, people sign on to the Honor Code their freshman year and never see it again at Washington College."
-Max Walton

The ten page draft is a far more comprehensive document than the current Honor Code. The current Honor Code is quite explicit on what constitutes an academic offence, but is vague on other forms of student misconduct. The student draft is equally specific on academic dishonesty, but expands in scope to include a broad array of misconduct, thereby becoming more of a code of conduct.

Among the new provisions of the draft are some which are implicit in the current Honor Code, but are not explicitly enumerated simply because the offenses did not exist at the time the current Honor Code was written. This modernization of the Honor Code includes such offenses as pirating computer software, unauthorized tapping into computerized records of the College or its students and the deliberate introduction or creation of computer viruses.

Additionally, faculty members would be expected to "file model papers, tests, lab reports and exams in the library so that the student has the opportunity to see what level of quality is expected of the student." This would also act as a disincentive for students to maintain files of past work or to solicit "samples" of work from other students.

Walton said that "I believe that if this is adopted as the Honor Code, it will be more visible. As it is, people sign on to the Honor Code their freshman year and never see it again during their time at Washington College." Ω

SGA Addresses Students' Concerns on

John K. Phoebus

Last Tuesday Student Government Association President Jamie Baker met with Dean McIntire, Student Activities and Campus Recreation Director Dennis Berry, Security Director Jerry Roderick and Sgt. Ken Haines to discuss the alcohol policy of the College.

Student concerns motivated Baker to call the meeting. "There were two things I wanted to address. One is the perception from students that Campus Security was cracking down, and the other was the alcohol policy itself," Baker said in a recent interview with The Elm.

Jerry Roderick has been making an effort to get the word out to students on how the College's alcohol policy works. Recently, Roderick attended hall meetings across campus to explain how security officers will be working with students to ensure that social functions are safe and in compliance with school policy. Roderick said that individual officers in the past have used their own discretion in handling alcohol related matters, but that Security is currently handing these situations in a more consistent manner.

In an interview with The Elm, Sgt. Lenny Thompson of Campus Security concurred with Baker's assessment: "In the past we tended to tell people to get it [alcohol] out of the public eye. But since we've had so many problems, we're trying to curtail problems before they happen. We're trying to have everyone enforce the alcohol policy in the same way. We're not condoning underage drinking at all. [If this is a problem] . . .what we do is take the the name down and refer it to student affairs for appropriate action."

This new consistency appears to be the primary source of misunderstanding for most students. In addition, Baker said that since Security has more officers on duty, some students have perceived that a crackdown is taking place. Baker said that one of the primary conclusions he reached during the meeting is that "The role of Security is to act as a buffer between students and outside law enforcement in a preventative way. The idea behind the alcohol policy is that it provides the opportunity for students to act responsibly, and that security is there to help students with this responsibility."

Baker also said that Security's primary concern is maintaining order. "If you're getting out of hand, making noise, breaking stuff or whatever, then Security will come. They're taking complaints from residents very seriously."

The SGA is currently engaged in an effort to revitalize social life on campus. Caroline Dorn Senator Elizabeth Likens said "I think that everyone is unaware of what they can do and what they can't. I think once everyone knows the policy -what they can and cannot do- people will have better parties." Likens said she is engaged in an effort to find out what kind of problems her constituents may be having with the current policy.

Baker said his work with school officials regarding the alcohol policy will soon culminate in "a forum with Dean McIntire, Dennis Berry, Security officers and the SGA on how students can have a successful party which complies with the existing rules. Ω

A Tale of Two Weeks

This has been an unusual week on campus, in that it is a week with two thematic designations. The week of October 18-22 has been "Timex/Ocean Spray/Cool Mint Listerine Fitness Week" and "Alcohol Awareness Week" simultaneously.

Two weeks for the price of one, and with seemingly related themes, at that. Both represent an effort to promote healthy behavior, and the Office of Student Activities and Campus recreation is to be commended for their efforts in coordinating the many activities which have taken place in the past week. The grand finale occurs today, with the Timex Fittest Student Contest" and a non-alcoholic social gathering in the basement of Hodson Hall.

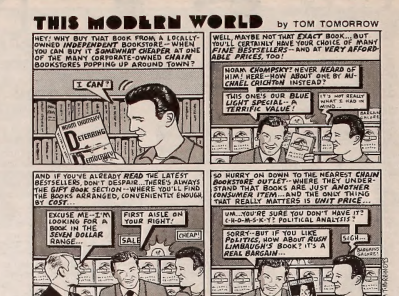
The main difference between the two-weeks-which-are-really the-same-week is the level of participation of the corporate sponsors. Timex Fitness Week has been accompanied by a high level of corporate support of activities on campus. Timex has generously donated a good number of sports watches to be awarded to the winners of the contests it sponsors, and the other Fitness Week sponsors have also donated their products.

Additionally, Timex has played a strong organizational role, which included orchestrating the massive, nationwide aerobics workout yesterday. Timex's sponsorship of Fitness Week has been a success in providing fun activities for students as well maintaining the company's good image and promoting its products. It has been a good example of how businesses and colleges can work together for the benefit of both parties.

Contrast this level of support with the level of support provided by Anheuser-Busch, the main sponsor of Alcohol Awareness Week. They provided no speakers, no non-alcoholic products (or alcoholic products, for that matter), and no activities. Basically, all they provided was a theme.

Yet Anheuser-Busch is the largest brewer in the nation, selling 86 million barrels of beer in 1991, which represents 44.1% of the total sold by the American brewing industry. It is a company far larger than any of the Fitness Week sponsors, yet they have chosen to spend less. Anheuser-Busch spent $2.13 billion on marketing, distribution and administrative expenses in 1991, which makes the company seem downright cheap for not donating a few cases of non-alcoholic brew.

Why does A-B sponsor Alcohol Awareness Week, anyway? Anheuser-Busch's public relations department would like us to think that it's because A-B is a magnanimous exemplar of civic virtue, but we all know better. Call me a cynic, but it seems clear to me that the company wants to avoid appearing responsible for the social ills often associated with immoderate alcohol consumption.



A-B is being more than a little disingenuous in all of this. The company sells beer to young men through ad campaigns featuring mirages full of (underage?) models in tight clothing while trying to look like a paragon of corporate responsibility. The 1991 Anheuser-Busch Annual Report states "There is simply no evidence of a relationship between beer marketing and abuse of beer products." If this is true, then Anheuser-Busch must be the only company in the world to annually spend hundreds of millions of dollars on ineffective advertising. Tens of millions will witness the highly entertaining "Bud Bowl" during the Superbowl this year, and hundreds of thousands will sleepily ignore the late night "Know When to Say When" spots. Anheuser-Busch speaks from two mouths. One mouth shouts "DRINK OUR BEER," while the other whispers "responsibly and in moderation."

Student Discontented with Board's Domestic Partners Ruling

To the Editor,

Sad to say, I am a bad WC student, only partially skimming the Elm, not realizing that important decisions were made at the last meeting of the Board of Visitors and Governors, as reported in your September 24 issue. The lights did not shine until I picked up the October 8 paper and read the article "Faculty Discuss Domestic Partners at Meeting."

I am heavily disappointed in the men and women who sit on the Board of Visitors and Governors. A college, to me, is an establishment which makes enlightened thinking, based on logic and experiment, its business. It is upsetting for me to see the people on the Board pass judgment on an individual because of their misunderstanding of that person's life.

A lesbian friend of mine recently lost a job for a rather suspicious reason, i.e. because she is a lover of women. The pay was paltry but it helped paid her rent and tuition. So I return from my hometown to my college and see that this ivy tower is no more enlightened in policy than the "real world."

On Gays and The Military

Gays in the military. This subject has been much debated this summer and I am about to drag the horse up off the ground to beat it again. First I would like to leave the topic of "gays in the military" and just focus on military.

Military a word which means "n. soldiers collectively" ok, so what is a soldier? Soldier n. 5. in zoology, any type of asexual white ants, having powerful jaws, which serve as fighters in defense of the colony. 6.one who tries to shirk work; one who pretends to do work but does little.[old slang] 7. one who works for a specified cause." These are the most specific definitions of soldier that I could find. I did not neglect the others; I read them and noted that they were obscure.

Tara Kidwell

The above defines military and those within its bound, soldiers all with the exception being the ants. I find it rather amusing that the definition of soldier does not encompass the following traits: fighter, accurate, skilled, intelligent, bloodthirsty, nationalistic, protective, heterosexual, megalomanical, or male (the first 4 definitions of soldier all refferred to men although I read it in the neutered sense of the word I knew it can be construed as MAN not mankind hence why they are not in my article.)

Now that military and soldier has been defined who does not fit the description, please raise your hand. The way the definition reads means that everyone of us is a soldier and we are all in some sort of military or another. War is a fact of life, therefore the need for the military follows. In order to protect and keep order in any country there must be some hierarchal regime which can be considered military. Do you want to be protected by someone who can be easily lulled into submission? Would you feel secure in the knowledge that there is a person out there with a gun who hates you because of the color of your skin regardless to where your loyalties lie? Isn't it reassuring to know that military soldiers up until last April had the ability to use rape as a method of submission and purging?

These questions lurk in my mind and they make me question our military. Are our soldiers the best people for the job? Do they embody what the general public thinks they do? Did you know that if one officer hears another officer make a remark about the president of our country-regardless of the fact that he chose to avoid Vietnam-has the right to arrest, if not seriously injure, the soldier making the remark. Our constitution gives us the freedom of speech, but why does it take it away from our military officers?

Satirist Tanya Allen Defends Madonnafesto

To the Editor,

I winced when I read the line "as most of the women at this school can attest to, or do it for them, time really takes its toll on the second sex" in Mark Phaneuf's "Madonnafesto". (Elm, 9/24). However, as a fellow satirist, I winced doubly when I read Dr. Beverly Wolff's response in the next Elm: "Goodness! So what is the value of a human life to you these days, Mr. Phaneuf? How much she entertains you? How much her physical self fits your very limited idea of beauty? ...If Madonna (died) would it make you feel more comfortable with her image? If she continues to prosper and succeed commercially well into old age, will that threaten you and your sense of human worth?" I also cringed when I read Sonja Wilson's letter of 10/8: "Whether or not you have to be politically correct is your business, but there is no excuse to forget the basic etiquette you should have learned when you were five. I don't appreciate insults aimed at any race, religion, or gender. Keep your derogatory comments (second sex, only other option is becoming a mother, and chick) and your personal opinions about women to yourself. The Elm should not be the place to air your grievances about women, whatever they might be. That is not news. Speaking of not-news, was there a point to your 'Do You Know Who's Coming to Dinner? Neither Do I!' article or did you just want to bitch about the lack of recognition that you feel you deserve?"

Ay yi yi. Something went wrong here. I consider myself a feminist, and I've known Mark Phaneuf since Freshman year, and so can attest both to the fact that Mark is a nice, conscientious guy and that he is not sexist. After having a professor whom I respect greatly ask me "Are you sure (Mark's piece) was satire?" and after having a few discussions with Mark about this controversy, I feel a need to come to his defense and reply (at the risk of putting words in his mouth) that the views expressed in "Madonnafesto" were not Mark Phaneuf's personal opinions. One of the things his feature did was satirize some common views that many men still have of women, and that the media perpetuate. When he wrote "...being that (Madonna) is not Sean Connery or Paul Newman, getting old is going to mean more and more people are not going to want to look at her body parts," and "The only other possibility options for the former Mrs. Penn is that she become a mother and devote her life to that...But if she doesn't want to become a mother, the only other career choice Madonna can make...would be death;" it is my understanding that he was using the medium of satire (defined in the American Heritage Dictionary as "irony, sarcasm, or caustic wit used to attack or expose folly, vice, or stupidity") to make fun of those popular views.

"Allen," from p. 3

I spoke briefly to Sonja about this, and she said that one of the points she wanted to make was that if comments such as the ones used in "Madonnafesto" were made about people of any racial or religious minority instead of a gender minority, the letters would not have been printed. This is most likely true. However, the views that Mark made fun of in "Madonnafesto" are indisputably common, constantly perpetuated by the media through advertising, stereotyping, casting choices, Disney movies, pornography, mixed messages in "Women's Magazines," and so on. We receive derogatory messages about women every day and usually don't even notice or think about them unless someone points them out to us. Mark's feature was controversial in that it did point out the messages, in that it put words to the subtle, softly sexist messages our society is still being given. It is sometimes painful to be forced to really see what we are constantly being shown.

I've always thought of satire as a way of having fun with writing.

Perhaps Mark—not having the sort of writing style that could allow him to hide behind the mask of a fly or angelfish—should have made it more clear that he was being satirical. However, perhaps the newspaper itself should have done something more to indicate that it wasn't a regular news article—maybe, instead of just tacking on the disclaimer that Scott Koon suggested, even doing something as blatant as printing "satirist" next to Mark's by-line. If Mark had been a woman, people probably would not have had any trouble recognizing his work as being satirical, but because of his gender, his work has been misinterpreted.

For the past few weeks, this episode and the response to it has been bothering me, because I too have at times been misunderstood and have received sometimes-harsh criticism for things I've written, simply by in my old column "Josephine the Fly" and in the short-lived publication "Beyond the Shadow of a Trout." At one time I myself was viciously satirized in the Elm by another humorist who misunderstood something that had been written in B.S.T. I was so hurt by the attack that I cried, then wandered around the rest of the day in a complete daze. Although unpleasant, having this done to me gave me a valuable lesson about how much satire can hurt, and made me more aware of journalistic and, for that matter, letter-to-the-editor-writing etiquette: attack ideas, not people; and when one does satirize or address specific people, keep in mind the difference (although this is tricky, because everyone seems to have different lines drawn for this) between attacking and criticizing.

In response to Sonja's suggestion that "It is my understanding that personal opinion is to be kept out of newspapers (save the Editorial)," I agree that personal opinions should be kept out of straight news pieces. Sonja is right in that those of us who write and edit for the Elm this year are going to have to take better care to make sure that we aren't writing biased journalism. However, satirical and opinion pieces do have a definite and needed place in newspapers. Personally, I've always thought of satire as a way of having fun with writing—of making people laugh and wince and look at themselves more closely and somehow, sneakily, nudge them into thinking and talking and arguing and getting upset about important issues, whether personal or campus or nation oriented. Although risky, satire is great fun to write, and when it's done successfully, it can do a lot of good. The way Mark pointed out common perceptions of females, for example, was valuable in that it confirmed Dr. Wolff's "...sense of the real need for a Women's Studies program..." and the resulting controversy is helping to draw more needed attention to what, (if anything,) WC students think of feminist issues. Sonja's letter itself shows how important opinion features are in that she felt a feature prompted her to write a counterpoint, which prompted me to write a counterpoint to her counterpoint, which will lead to God knows what. Public discussions such as this one we are having through the Elm promote private discussions among readers, and by discussing episodes such as this one we are learning to formulate our own opinions on things such as sexism and free speech and responsible journalism. Learning to think about things like these—learning to turn ourselves into critical thinkers, is one of the things we all came to a liberal arts college to do.

Sincerely,
Tanya Allen

Critics

by Scott Koon

In America today, practically no one is neutral on the subject of political correctness in academia. The rabid right often attack politically correct ideologues, yet the very vociferousness of their attacks reveal the strength of p.c. as a force in our society. The right is fearful of the p.c. ideology, and this fear can only stem from an instinctual perception that the American left has finally hit upon an idea which resonates well in the nation as a whole.

While p.c. may be an idea whose time has come, there are two reasons why it is easy to criticize in a way readily comprehensible to the person on the street. The first is that the principal advocates of p.c. are academics, who are easily stereotyped by the right as a cadre of goofy radicals desperately out of touch with the lives of average people. The second is that, while the academics agree on broad principles, they are bitterly divided against themselves when it comes to the specifics of their political program.

The reactionary monthly Campus report recently published a review of "Rage Across the Disciplines," which was a leftist conference held last June at the University of California, San Marcos. Observing the deep divisions between Blacks and Whites, gays and straights, women and men, Campus Report observed that "In retrospect, the conference might have been titled 'Whine About the Left,' because their [sic] was very little sense of real rage and most of what their [sic agita] was was self-directed. In their never-ending quest to be completely and perfectly PC, the Left is quickly dividing itself and is bound to fall."

This is a telling commentary which has been leveled at advocates of p.c. by leftist critics as well, yet the past twenty years show that the American left is a house divided beyond reconciliation. It is no accident that the liberal elite in America is profoundly split by divisions based on race, gender and sexual orientation, for the American capitalist establishment has cunningly exploited these divisions to prevent the emergence of a viable leftist coalition. Academic advocates of p.c. have been unable to transcend the psychological class divisions which result from economic class divisions.

These academics have erred in a more fundamental way as well, in that they have narrowly focused on one small aspect of what should be a comprehensive ideology. They reject the language of oppression, yet they level no real criticism at the most important issue facing the truly oppressed, which is the inequity of our current economic system.

Simply put, they hate the oppression of capitalism but like the benefits they receive from capitalism. To put it even more simply, they've sold out to the same men they so dearly love to criticize.

It is perhaps not surprising that in an individualistic society such as ours oppressed people have been largely unable to find solidarity with other oppressed people. Each feels "I'm oppressed because I'm Black," or "I'm oppressed because I'm a woman," or "I'm oppressed because I'm a lesbian," or "I'm oppressed because I'm Black, a woman and a lesbian." This category of oppression is existentially different from each other category of oppression, yet they all have the same cause. What these academics need to do is awaken (or reawaken) themselves to the fact that each oppressed group is oppressed simply because it is useful to the capitalists to oppress them.

This is a realization which leads to the ideological comprehensiveness and unity lacked in current p.c. advocates. To attack discrimination without attacking its cause is to have no effect: the struggles of minorities in America have proven this. To attack the language of oppression without attacking the capitalists who promulgate it is even less useful.

This is not to say that stressing language which emphasizes the equality of all is not an important part of any legitimate socialist platform. Indeed, it seems to me that many of the best "p.c." ideas were shamelessly stolen from Leon Trotsky. In his essay "The Struggle for Cultured Speech," Trotsky explicitly condemned slurs against women and ethnic minorities, writing that "The struggle against 'bad language' is a condition of intellectual hygiene, just as the fight against filth and vermin is a condition of physical hygiene."

The phrase

See "Crisis" on p. 7

The phrase "intellectual hygiene" may sound Orwellian to some, but it is necessary for language to mature as society matures. Language will change anyway; why would we not make a concerted effort to make sure that this change occurs in such a way so as to encourage the equality of all?

I would like to see a military of dedicated, intelligent, war loving women and men who have the desire to protect their country. As our military stands now, people who are qualified soldiers are being withheld from the pursuit of qualified soldiers are being withheld from the pursuit of ours. These denied soldiers are being supressed by the fifth definition of soldier. As any military strategist would agree with me a well oiled and trained battalion is your asset, and to have anyone whose desire is not to fight and "soldier" could cost you the war.

Expand your mind and understand that if you choose to be a part of the military which is suppposedly for the benefit of the society then it should not matter where your sexual orientation leads you, but rather how you do your job. Personally, I have been pondering Thomas Jefferson's words "if you don't like the way the government is going, rebel." As my friends know, I love a good war as much as the next soldier. Ω

An Addict's Confession

by Mark Phaneuf

The newspaper is a wondrous thing. One can use it to inform or persuade. It can bring down a presidency and give you the box scores. This is not my intent with this piece. Clinton is safe and you will have to find out for yourself how the women's field hockey team won their first game. I feel too much emphasis is put on the negative side of issues and I wish to appeal to that other segment of the reading population, those who are not interested in name calling and mud slinging. I only hope that one person was able to make it to lunch to pick up a paper. Our Washington College community is a sharing and caring one; we do not judge each other but accept and glorify the differences that declare our individuality. Our loving attitude accents the startling diversity of the school and is what prevents the student body from looking like a sick fusion of Coca and C. Crew. All of us have secret sins that we hide and I am at the point now where I am able to admit my failings and implore for your patience and compassion in dealing with this highly sensitive topic.

I am Mark Phaneuf and I am a passive smoker. I am addicted to secondary smoke. I hope that you can appreciate how hard it is for me to state this publicly. I understand society's stigma that I am somehow half a person. It is true that I do not like to smoke myself but I need that nicotine fix as much as any two-pack a day Marlboro man or Virginia Slim woman. My fingers and teeth might not be as stained but those are only a few of the negative aspects of passive smoking.

I first noticed I had a problem in high school. While most of the other guys went to the bathroom to smoke a few butts, I would just hang out with them breathing that beautiful aroma. My friends would ask me why I was down there since I didn't smoke and I had to lie. I was too ashamed to tell them the real reason so I made up the excuse that since those smokers were cool, I would be cool too by hanging out with them. As I refused to confront my demon, I just dug myself deeper and deeper into my addiction. When I would fine out, I would specifically request the smoking section. When I needed a quick hit, I would just go into a diner and order a cup of coffee or pie and suck up the smoke.

It has got progressively harder at Washington College to indulge in my smoke-lust. At first, I found myself fraternizing with people, not because I found them interesting, but because they smoked. Yet, it seems like everywhere smoking has become prohibited. To this day, when I go back to read the Atlantic Monthly or Entertainment Weekly in the library and think, with the risk of showing my age, about the old days when it was a smoke-full zone. These days I go there and breathe in that clean, though somewhat stuffy, air, and begin to hack and wheeze. Sometimes it just becomes too much for me. The cafeteria and the Casey Academic Center have become damned bastions of healthy air. Thank God for Dorchester parties. I know that I can go there for a few minutes and I won't be let down. The air is thick and smoky that I know that I will be able the take the scent of that lovely aroma on my clothes and inhale at my own leisure. I am not proud of this action and seek to find a method even as I confide in you now.

My Passive Smokers Anonymous meetings, I hear personal accounts that would clear your throat. Joe is a recovering addict. My gosh, the horror stories he tells. He said he knew he hit bottom when he found himself beating up an eighty-year old man after he refused to smoke a cigarette for Joe. Other people talk about trading their bodies in exchange for an unknown non-smoker to light up and exhale the forbidden scent. I never fell that far and I realize how lucky I am. I have to take it one day at a time. I still get the shakes and I find myself taking extra breaths out in front of the building I try to partake in some of the exquisite fumes.

I know my confession will not fall on deaf ears. I know there are many others who suffer in the reckless silence I have with me. I appreciate all of the support that I have been given during my ordeal. The first step is admitting that you have a problem, so the saying goes, and I never realized it until now. I am thankful for the opportunity to share my problem with the rest of the school, who I know will buoy me up on their broad shoulders of love and understanding. Drive safely. Ω

"So, what exactly is Washington College's alcohol policy?" said CHRIS TOPHR, (who the author doesn't know at all and whose name was suggested by a mutual friend who wishes to remain anonymous). For the lack of a better fish CHRIS TOPHR is a...um, a...an American Shad. Yeah.)

"Uh...I don't know—aren't there like, three of them?" said PAUL OBRECHT (another American Shad. Mmhm.)

"I don't know, but I guess we should find out, since we're helping plan this party for MARK MURPHY's coronation."

"But, like, if Mark Murphy is king of Washington College, then we don't have to go by the rules of the administration anymore!"

"Say....You're right!" said CHRIS TOPHR, a remarkably studly (—the author does not blush, even though she has never seen him) fish. "Dude!"

Meanwhile, a posse of fish, lead by PAUL BRIGGS, (an Alligator Gar) had surrounded the deans and PRESIDENT TROUT, and were herding them into Miller Library's fishbowl by jabbing at them menacingly with their fins. They carried Number 2 pencils, rolls of duct-tape, and several lethal-looking staple guns which they were all clutching in their mouths and fins. "But...but Paul," wubbled DEAN WUBBELS. "Why are you doing this to us? You, of all people—the son of one of our most esteemed Professors of Mathematics and Computer Science....Paul We thought you were our friend!"

"Back, you Wahoo! Back!" snarled Paul, threatening him with a protractor.

"Paul?" said DEAN WUBBELS. "Paul? Paul? Paul? Paul!"

Somebody call in Security!" screamed MISS SANSING (a dolphin) "They'll get here right away, in about an hour! They'll protect us!"

But despite their cries, all of the Deans were herded into the fishbowl. The doors of the fishbowl were locked behind them and the students jeered and gawked outside.

"That'll pay you back for not giving me a Cardinal!" (yelled a random senior fish)

"...for making me room with the Queen of dirty underwear!" (shouted a random sophomore fish)

"...for not informing the new Astronomy professor that Astronomy is supposed to be an easy course!"

"....for hiking up tuition after you trapped me here by giving me an academic scholarship!"

"...for trying to impose WC's ridiculous alcohol policy/cies!"

"...for putting all of those horrible freshmen in Caroline!"

"...for letting Queen Anne's remain a really crappie-looking dorm with nauseatingly 70's style decor!"

"...for the way my dorm's laundry machine keeps breaking down!"

"...for the way my girlfriend dumped me!"

"....for all the bad-hair days I had before I became a fish!"

"....for all the problems in Somalia!"

"Yeah! Yeah! This'll pay you back! This'll pay you back!" the students/aquatic sea creatures cried as the Deans and PRESIDENT TROUT swam back and forth inside the fishbowl.

"Mark," said JEN WALDYCH, (a Channel Catfish) "soon you will be king, and you will have ultimate power over Washington College."

"And ah can't even begin to tell you how pleased ah am about this latest development...." MARK MURPHY (the proud, but noble guppy) said contentedly.

"What's the first thing you'll do as king, Mark?"

"Well, —" Mark stretched back. "First thing ah'm going to do is get mahself one of those new-fangled-looking Club Cars and have another gahrage built on campus, just for me, so ah can be like that TOM WEBB guy, who lives in Worcester? You know you've got ultimate power when you have your very own on-campus garage. Yeah. Mah own garage. That's what ah'm going to have done first."

"Ah," said JEN WALDYCH knowingly. "And so...what else are you going to do, Mark?"

"Second thing ah'm gonna do is make sure everyone at Washington College starts learnin' how to love each other. Washington College needs more love."

"Washington College needs more love?" said Jen. "You think so, Mark?"

"Yes, ah do, Jen," said Mark. "Ah have found it is very important to love. Love just about anything that is any good at all especially your mama but also food, friends, and the things that you like."

"And what do YOU like, Mark?"

"Well," Mark said, "Ah personally like to fish. But...." his eyes bugged out. "Now ah AM a fish! Well, shee-eet! Ah guess ah'm gonna have to find a new hobby, now...." Mark paused for a while, thinking. "You know," he continued benevolently, "the next thing ah'd do is make it so all those new teachers who've become so important to the college—the ones who've pretty much revitalized this school and it's various departments—ah'm talkin' in particular professors like BETH McCOY, and DR. FESSLER, and JEFF HARLEMAN, and TEX ANDREWS, and there are some others in the other departments too that ah just can't think of at the moment.... all get to stay on here next year and in the years to come, no matter whether their contracts are up or particular review boards say they should be gotten rid of to save money...." Mark paused again, and nodded as best as a fish can nod. "You know what ah'm gonna do?" He winked at Jen. "Ah'm gonna make sure that they all get tenure. They deserve tenure—they're great teachers, and we've all grown to love them, and love is important. Ah like love." Mark smiled as best as a fish can smile. "Yeah. Ah'm going to give all those professors tenure. They deserve it." Ω

Student Profile: Anthony Hecht

"But how can I be the Student Profile if I'm always late for class?"

Cries of "woo hooooop" can be heard on Washington College's campus these days, inflicting smiles from all within hearing range. Who is responsible for starting this trend? None other than Anthony "The Hamster" Hecht, a Sophomore hailing from Baltimore, MD. Anthony is an easy going guy, who's love for fun probably began while still in high school. Graduating from City College high school in 1992, he came to WC with many varied interests concerning his major area of study. Finally settling (at least for now) for the collegiately acclaimed Hamsterology major (otherwise known as the Philosophy major), Anthony hopes to spend his next year abroad in one of the following countries; Austtaalia, Ireland, or England/Scotland, of course, Australlia being his first choice.

When not procrastinating ("I like to put off work til the last minute or beyond...") or busy with Klondike, Anthony says that one of his favorite activities is to "...hang out with my bestest buddies, Steve "Clide" Brown, Dave "Bam Bam" Johnson, Frank "Nalls" Frisble, Thane "PI" Glenn, and Joel "BJ" Brown. After I noticed his CD collection in his room in Kent House, I decided to ask about his musical interests. Anthony says that he collects CD's but he has specific tastes where music is concerned. He is a big PHISH phan, he hates country music,and is getting less and less satisfied with rap, save for De La Soul and Arrested Development.

DIRT

Better Late than Never

Professors seem to berate students over and over again for not working ahead, for writing many of our papers the night before the due date. Although many of them are understanding about emergencies, they also express concern as to why we havn't been working on this thing all along. They always tell us that if we hadn't waited until the night before, we could have averted this catastrophe or had time to deal with it.

midterm grades in by a certain date (today, in fact) and so they schedule all their graded assignments for the two weeks before.

Not all professors do this. Some have their exams, or response papers, or research projects, spread out over the semester. But if you were to use one of those nifty little chart-and-graph programs to plot out the due date for each assignment in every class, the majority would fall in the middle and at the end,

J. Tarin Towers

What they don't seem to understand is the nature of time for students. For me, personally, it's hard to remember that a paper was assigned, much less what date it is due, or if any of the other papers I was assigned fall on the same day. They often do.

A friend of mine involved in Damn Yankees had two tests on the morning of dress rehearsal, as well as a take-home due, and yet another take-home due the next week. Another cast member had two papers and a presentation due the morning after dress rehearsal, one of which he surmised from the wording of the syllabus was an in-class essay — it wasn't.

If I hadn't been to faculty meetings last year as Elm editor, I would swear, as I did in high school, that professors use the meetings to sit and plot how to hit the greatest number of students the hardest by scheduling the projects and tests for the same days.

While midterms, I guess, are an honorable tradition, the faculty do the same thing the accuse us of doing. They have to have with the added burden of finals and the temporal end of the semester.

And they wonder why we have trouble getting things in on time.

The student concept of time, which I mentioned before, doesn't revolve around week-long chunks of time left before a paper is due. There's MWF, there's TTH, and then there's the weekend, when people plan to spend the daytime doing work and sleep in or go on roadtrips instead.

In my experience, the paper (or whatever) is in the back of the mind, but it is not until anxiety sets in can I really think it's a project I have to worry about. Keeping up with reading (and art classes) bites out enough time without outside reasearch.

This isn't meant to be an excuse not to do work, but only to question how professors can expect a level of quality in projects which are due during stress season. I think this article written during production week and midterm week, is proof of that. Ω

"Crisis," from p. 4

"Intellectual hygiene" may sound Orwellian to some, but it is necessary for language to mature as society matures. Language will change anyway, so why should we not make a concerted effort to make sure that this change occurs in such a way so as to encourage the equality of all? The American Heritage Dictionary contains 71 words which are offensive slurs applicable only to women. Of these, 23 are synonyms for slut. Would it be so terrible if these slurs fell out of common usage? To pose the question is to answer it.

Yet some would maintain that it is necessary for freedom of speech and the press to keep these terms in usage. Poppycock! When was the last time you heard anyone use the word strumpet? Has the language suffered, have we lost our freedom, simply because we no longer commonly use the word strumpet? No, it is simply one less word in the verbal arsenal of misogynists.

In the struggle for social justice, we must all strive to follow the example of Trotsky, who unceasingly spoke out against the reactionary tendencies of even his own comrades: ". . . we often witness psychological contrasts in the same mind. A man is a sound Communist, devoted to the cause, but women are for him just 'females,' not to be taken seriously in any way. Or it happens that a very deserving Communist, when discussing the smaller nationalities, starts spouting hopelessly reactionary stuff. . . . . Human psychology is very conservative by nature, and the change due to the demand and the push of life affects, in the first place, those parts of the mind which are directly concerned in the case. . . .the problem is extremely complicated, and could not be solved by school teaching and books alone: the roots of contradictions and psychological inconsistencies lie in the disorganization and muddle of the conditions in which people live." To change language is not enough; to achieve lasting social justice, we must drastically alter the economic foundations of our society. Perhaps a few of the better-paid academics will have to drive Volkswagens instead of Volvos, but I'm certain they're all willing to put their money where their mouths are. Ω

Westerdahl Calls for Review of College Drinking Rules

Special to the Elm

Dean of Men Carl Westerdahl chaired a committee last week to study the prospects of changing the campus rule regarding the consumption and possession of alcohol .

The committee, composed of students and faculty members, met this week, and prepared a report which will be presented to the Board of Visitors and Governors at their regular meeting scheduled for this weekend.

The proposal is reported to recommend that the state law regarding the possession and consumption of alcoholic beverages be enforced, rather than the present rule which states: "Alcoholic beverages of any nature are not permitted on the campus..."

According to the proposal, any student who is found to be intoxicated on the campus will continue to be "subject to disciplinary action."

At present, the law as stated in the college handbook is not rigidly enforced. There is some question among Washington College authorities about the enforcibility of the present law. The adoption of this measure byt the Board would facilitate the change of the law into one which might describe as being "sensible." It would apparently remove numerous members of the administration from a potentially embarrassing postition, and indicate a more reasonable and mature attitude toward student responsibility and judgement.

Dean of Men Carl Westerdahl

The results of the Board's judgement on the committee's recommedation will be made known Saturday, after the meeting. If the Board delays passage of the measure at this time, approval could not come until the Board's next regularly scheduled meeting in January, unless a special meeting were called to consider the matter.

It is not known definitely what the reaction would be among the student body or the administration if the proposed ruling change were not adopted. Elm Editor Jeff Heymann commented that the reaction would "certainly be a negative one" and would "probably not to be confined to the student body."

He continued by stating that "I hope the Board will give every consideration to this important issue and approve the recommendation of the special study committee." Ω

"Damn Yankees" Hits Home Run

A star-studded cast accompanies the renowned "Devil's Trills" Pit Orchestra lead by Ciaran Sweeney to the Harris through the musical Damn Yankees! The play has had its share of tribulations and triumphs, but most of all it has heart, miles of it in fact. If you're looking for pre-party entertainment then Damn Yankees! is the place to be.

Given the short period of time that director Elisa Hale was allotted, she and her cast have come through with a delightful play. The play has a sinister dealings, seduction scenes sure to require a cold shower, and laughs galore. Still not convinced to see the play? Would your date rather be watching a game? Looking to see a romantic movie? Well, why not satisfy both urges by coming to see the play! 8:00pm Thursday, Friday and Saturday this week-end.

Jen Friedman gives an astounding performance as Applegate (the Devil), which is not to be missed. Bridgette Avant as the infamous Lola will make you give in to those carnal desires you've been having lately. Josh Buckman/Richard McKee play the part of Joe, (the Hero) multiple personalities? You have to come to find out. Eve Zartman plays the part of the devoted wife Meg, who stands by her man even when he's not her man. The only way to puzzle this out is to come to the show. Alex Nader and Tara Kidwell play the dynamic duo sisters who will make your sides split with laughter.

Meanwhile, back in the dugout, Will Smiley, Keith Daniels, Marshall Norton, John Phoebus, Erik Hammesfahr, Kelli Youngblood, Lisa Christie, Mari Endo, and Dave Powell are batting their way into first place and singing their hearts out.

Up in the office Marianne Culbertson,the hard-nosed reporter who won't stop until she drops, tries to uncover why Paul Briggs (Welch), Kate Sullivan (Lynch), and Billy Ball (the commissioner) are all backing a no-name player with a dubious past. All this while Wendy Kraus and Federico Da-Fiens give it all they've got to make certain that you are entertained and that things are said and in order. All the time these fabulous players are backed up by an incredible chorus of: Kelly Beckwith, Erika Fitzhugh, Thea Mateu, Namala Moss, Heather Noble, Kiyaa Washington.

The cast and crew has put time into making this play incredible and so, come check out the dance numbers choreographed by Billy Ball, Elisa Hale and their ever inventive assistant Eve "Angst" Zartman. And if the costumes and props catch your eye, thank Tarin Towers for keeping everything in line and from getting lost. The running crew Tarin Towers, Forrest George, Carey Kelly, Steve Fuchs, Brad Foster, Josh Buckman, Keith Daniels, and Billie Rinaldi help to make the evening go off without a hitch. Stage manager Bonnie demands your attendance because if you don't come Clyde has your name and will find you. Ω

Sweet Ring Of Victory

As I sat down to write this commentary, I heard it ring. The sweet sound crossed campus and made its way in my window. It was the sound of a victorious team. It was the sound of hard work, sweat, and the payoff for grueling practices. It was the sound of the Victory Bell.

For those of you who are not familiar with the Victory Bell, it is located outside of the Cain Athletic Center. It is large and encased in brick. You can't miss it, especially if a team is gathred around ringing it.

For years the bell has been rung as a symbol of athletic accomplishment. It has become a tradition for the athletes to ring it when they win. I think this is the nicest tradition we have here at Washington College. It symbolizes all of the time and effort each athlete puts in to his or her sport. It symbolizes the high of winning, when all of your efforts pay off.

The Victory Bell will always be here. Even after athletes graduate and new teams are started, it will be here. Sometimes I wish the bell could speak of the victories it has known. The bell is more than a trophy case, it is the athletes past and present. It is the spirit of competition, the soul of the game. The Victory Bell is Washington College athletics.

The first thing I thought of as a Washington College athlete was when I would be able to ring the Victory Bell. The first time an athlete rings the bell is a special one. There are probably people out there who are wondering why ringing a bell is such a spiritual experience, and why I am diving deep in to the Zen of athletics. However, I think the Victory Bell is an experience we can all share as a community. It is not just the team who has won, it is the college. Every time that bell rings we should all feel proud.

On several occasions I have heard the bell's ringing followed by interested non-athletes asking " Who won?" This shows a cohesion of our college community. The Victory Bell is not just a tradition for athletes, but something that can pull our community together.

I would like to congratulate all of the teams who have rung the bell this season and encourage each team to keep it ringing. Keep running, keep kicking, keep spiking and keep going. The season is beginning to wind down and now is the time to put in that extra effort. That extra effort is what will keep the Victory Bell ringing.

Sho'women End Streak

Field Hockey's 1-0 Win Over Randolph-Macon Breaks Washington's Nine-Game Winless Skid

Scott Steinmuller

After suffering through a tough series of games, including opponents who qualified for the NCAA tournement last year, and the loss of senior co-captain Renee Guckert to injury, the Sho'women showed resiliency in defeating Randolph-Macon1-0 to end a nine-game winless streak.

Leading the Sho'women to victory was senior co-captain Peggy Bowman who scored the lone goal of the game on a penalty shot.

Preceding the shot, the Sho'women put a lot of pressure on the Randolph-Macon goalie. During the continous pressure, the Randolph-Macon goalie batted a ball away with her left glove hand. The illegal maneuver gave the Sho'women a penalty shot which turned out to be the only score of the game.

"We played pretty well," head coach Sarah Feyerherm said. "Our attack played the best it has played all year."

"It wasn't just a hit and run attack, as we had played at times in the past. Rather, it was a build-up attack. We passed and moved the ball among three to four players on a series. We did a much better job overall of passing the ball. We finally clicked. And also once again the defense played well. We dominated the game. They got a lot of shots, but we dominated play."

Also on the schedule in the last two weeks were three of last year's NCAA qualifiers in Franklin and Marshall, Johns Hopkins and also Dickinson.

Against the Diplomats of Franklin and Marshall, the Sho'women lost 2-0.

"On the field I don't think we showed up for the first ten minutes, but once we got going we had alot of shots," said Feyerherm whose team outshot F&M 23-22.

"The difference was that they were able to capitalize on rebounds, something which we have had trouble doing," she said. "The statistics of the game were pretty even, but F&M just put the ball in the goal."

The schedule grew no easier during the next game as the Sho'women faced Johns Hopkins at their home field, who besides being NCAA qualifiers last year, are also ranked 12th in the nation and 3rd in the South region this year.

"We didn't look like we came to play," Feyerherm said. "We were probably a little intimidated by the turf, the stadium, and the fact that everybody knows that Hopkins is a good team.

"We didn't go out with the force we usually do. Also it was hard for Peggy (Busker), our goalie, to adjust to how fast the ball actually moved on the artificial turf."

"I think losing close, hard-fought games in the first of the season took a toll on us that had finally caught up with us. Then because of the time of the year with exams and papers due there was an additional mental strain, which made it hard to get up for games and win." --Sarah Feyerherm

The Sho'women fell short in the game 5-0.

Finally, the last opponent prior to the Randolph-Macon victory was Dickinson.

"It was the first game we really felt we were outplayed," Feyerherm said. "They had a very good game against us. Their right wing was really fast. She did an excellent job of carrying the ball down the field."

"It was the first time a good team stayed with their original game plan. We couldn't take them out of it and they beat us soundly," Feyerherm said.

"It was only1-0 at the half. We felt we would hang in there and give them a go. Yet, in the second half, Dickinson just took it to a higher level. We realized that even hard play can't always beat skill."

The final score saw Washington succumb to Dickinson 3-0.

Adding negatively to the Dickinson game was the subsequent loss of co-captain Guckert due to concussion complications. Guckert had incurred the concussion during the game against Swarthmore a couple of weeks ago.

"I think she pushed herself too hard when not fully recovered," Feyerherm said.

Though on the sidelines for the remainder of the season, Guckert will still be a vocal leader during the games.

Coach Feyerherm had some final thoughts regarding the few previous games.

"I think losing close, hard-fought games in the first of the season took a toll on us that had finally caught up with us. Then because of the time of the year with exams and papers due there was an additional mental strain, which made it hard to get up for games and win," she said.

The Sho'women overcame all of the strain and fatigue in defeating Randolph-Macon. Coach Feyerherm wishes that the next game for the Sho'women was not a whole week after the Randolph-Macon win.

"It's tough now because we got it going and we have to wait," she said.

The Sho'women's next game is Saturday at Muhlenberg.

The Sho'women will complete their season with a home game against the Catholic University of America on October 27 at 4:00 p.m.

Currently, the team's record stands at 2-8-1 with two games remaining on the schedule.

Sullen Shoremen Soccer Squad Suddenly Suffers Severe Suspenseful Scoring Slump

The Shoremen opened their season celebrating after a Brian Rush goal, but after 22 goals in their first 11 games, Washington has only tallied twice in their last four contests.

It was a rough couple of weeks for the Washington College men's soccer team.

After a 2-0 loss to Western Maryland last Saturday, the Shoremen dropped their second straight game in falling to 5-7-3.

On Saturday, the Green Terrors of Western Maryland visited Kibler Field for a Centennial Conference match. The Shoremen played a good first half, highlighted by strond defensive marking, and the score was tied 0-0 at halftime.

However, Western Maryland broke both teams' scoring drought midway into the second half when Scott Schoberg headed a cross from the outside midfielder into the net.

Washington pressed the Western Maryland defense in an attempt to tie the score, but the Shoremen defense was burned on a quick counter-attack, and the Green Terrors won the match 2-0.

Last Thursday, Mt. Olive visited Washington from North Carolina.

In a close contest, the visitors squeaked by the Shoremen by a 2-1 score.

The first goal was a fluke, as a Mt. Olive wing intended to cross the ball, and it bated into the side of the net.

However, Washington bouced back with under five minutes to play in the first half when Shawn McMahon scored the equalizer on an assist from Chip Helm. McMahon took a pass from Helm on an indirect kick, and placed the ball into the upper right-hand corner of the net.

Tied 1-1 at halftime, the game was tight throughout, but it was a Mt. Olive goal after a scramble in front of the net which decided the game.

At Allentown College on October 9, Washington tied its second game in a row 1-1.

McMahon scored the only Shoremen goal of the contest on a penalty shot early in the first half. However, Allentown tied the score twenty minutes later, and the score remained tied through the second half and two overtimes.

These three games present a recent trend for the Shoremen of being tied at halftime and coming away without a win. In their last four games, Washington has been tied at the half and has gone 0-2-2 over that time span.

Of their fifteen games, Washington has only played in four contests with more than a two-goal differential.

W.C. Volleyball Boasts 21-14 Mark Behind Chin, Diaz, Dixon, Smith

Erika K. Ford

In the last stretch of the fall season, the Washington College volleyball team boasts a 21-14 record. In the past two weeks they have won five out of eight games played.

In the Centennial Conference the team is 5-2.

On Wednesday, the Sho'women travelled to Baltimore and were victorious over Johns Hopkins. Winning three matches out of four, the players combined for 46 digs in all, with much help from junior Beverly Diaz and freshman Becky Stephens. Upon returning home, the celebrating team rang the victory bell outside of Cain.

Against Hopkins the team stayed alert, with over 100 total attempts on the court. Sophomore Jen Dixon led in kills, while freshman Tina Smith and sophomore Michelle Chin led in assists.

Four Washington players have the distinction of being ranked by the Centennial Conference as leaders in all matches.

Dixon leads all Conference teams in kills and attempts, while Smith is ranked third in ace percentage. Setter and co-captain Chin is listed in Conference stats for her assists. Co-captain Beverly Diaz leads all teams in total digs.

The volleyball team travelled to Washington, D.C. the weekend of October 8 and 9 to play in the Gallaudet Tournament.

They won two match-ups and lost two. Against Methodist the Sho'women lost two of three matches, but they beat Salisbury 2-0. They fell to Gallaudet by losing both matches, but were victorious over Greensboro 2-1.

Statistical leaders in the Gallaudet Tournament were Smith with 43 assists and sophomore Courtney Meyers, who kicked in 47 digs for the weekend.

On October 13 the volleyball team battled Hood, Salisbury, and Widener at home.

Against the seasoned Salisbury squad they came up empty losing two games out of three. They won against Hood, however, and also crushed Widener 2-1. Diaz added the most digs that night, and a strong team effort caused the night to be a success.

Tomorrow the Sho'women will play Franklin and Marshall and Bryn Mawr College away. F&M is a strong Centennial power, while Bryn Mawr is ranked below Washington in the Conference. Their season ends next weekend at home when they host the Washington College Tournament.

The next home game for the Sho'women will be Tuesday, October 26 at 7:00 p.m. against Western Maryland.

Fall Classic Opens In Toronto

Matt Murray

The World Series began last weekend with the Philadelphia Phillies travelling to Toronto, Canada to face the American League's Bluejays.

As of Wednesday, the Series stood at 2-1 in Toronto's favor.

Around the Nation

In National Football League action, the Steelers dealt the Saints their first loss of the season.

In other games, the Chiefs, Browns, Lions, Oilers, Cowboys, Cardinals, Giants, and Falcons were all victorious.

The Cincinnati Bengals fell to 0-6.

Washington Men's Lacrosse Wraps Up Impressive Fall

Dave Lipinski

The Washington College Lacrosse team had a busy couple of weekends as they wrapped up the 1993 fall season.

Two weekends ago, the Shoremen faced the University of Maryland at home on Kibler field.

Although they only trailed by a narrow 10-6 margin at the half, the Shoremen fell to the Terps by a final of 19-10.

In the scoring department the story was sophomore attackman Bart Jaeger, who managed to find the net five times and assist on one more.

Senior All-American midfielder Chris Cote tallied twice and assisted on another.

Senior face-off supremeinist Blair Muneses accounted for one goal and two assists, while senior attackman Chris Sanchez had three assists on the day.

Sophomore midfielder Andy Neville had an assist and junior midfielder Jamie Carver took three shots.

This past Saturday, the Shoremen took on two Division I powers in the University of Pennsylvania and defending National Champion Syracuse at Speer Field in Baltimore.

The Shoremen faced off against Penn first and quickly jumped out to a 5-0 lead. Jason Paige found the net first.

Freshman midfielder Greg Tomaso, assisted by Sanchez (who had four assists on the day), scored next to put the shoreman ahead 2-0.

Then, Jaeger found the goal for the first of his three goals on the day. Muneses and Cote both added a goal.

Penn quickly came back, and by halftime tied the game 5-5.

Despite stellar efforts at both ends of the field, the Shoremen could not hang on.

When all was said and done, Penn came out on top 10-7.

Immediatly following, the Shoremen took on the Syracuse Orangmen, holding them to an impressive score of 9-4.

It was a game of attrition and the Orangman exhibited one main attribute the Shoreman did not have- depth.

"Syracuse had alot of depth," Neville said. "They were able to run alot more midfielders, and we, on the other hand didn't have the luxerry of that kind of depth."

Despite the depth factor

Chris Cote scored twice against the University of Pennsylvania last weekend.

the Shoremen did not back down an inch and played a respectable game against a team of that type of ability.

"It was a good experience to play against Division I teams like Syracuse even though things didn't go our way," junior defenseman Jerry Davis said. "It was a great chance for us to challenge our skills and work together as a team in order to unite for the season."

"It was a good experience to play against Division I teams like Syracuse even though things didn't go our way. It was a great chance for us to challenge our skills and work together as a team in order to unite for the season."
–Jerry Davis

The Shoremen are a team light on experience.

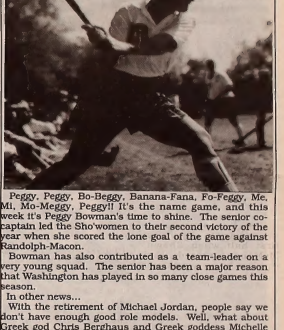
However, it did not stop them from holding one of the mpost potent offenses in Division I to just nine goals, a score that will undoubtably turn some heads in Division III.

Cote opened up the scoring with a goal and later added an assist. Syracuse transfer Jason Paige had a successful outing against his almamater, as he scored twice.

Jaeger found the cage once for the Shoremen while Muneses, who had a superb day facing off, tallied with an assist.

"Overall, it was a great experience to go against Division I teams like Penn and Syracuse," head coach Terry Corcoran said. "To get off the bus and play against teams like that was educational.

"I've learned a lot about what we need to work on and what direction we need to go. I think the players have all made improvements and the competition has shown us in what facets of the game we need to improve. On another note it was exiting for me to see the number of students and Alumni who came out to support us. I thought that was great."



When asked about the fall season as a whole Sanchez reiterated Corcoran's evaluations; "I think after this fall everybody has a good idea of what they need to work on over the winter. Simply put, we know what we need to do we just have to do it."

This spring, the Division III title is wide open. Last year's finsalists Hobart, Ohio Weslyan, Gettysburg, and even Salisbury State all have a tremendous amount of rebuilding to do.

Washington College has been rebuilding for the last few years. Last season's semi-finalist birth would be a great foundation from which the Shoreman could build for the '94 season.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

Peggy, Peggy, Bo-Beggy, Banana-Fana, Fo-Feggy, Me, Mi, Mo-Meggy, Peggy!! It's the name game, and this week it's Peggy Bowman's time to shine. The senior co-captain led the Sho'women to their second victory of the year when she scored the lone goal of the game against Randolph-Macon.

Bowman has also contributed as a team-leader on a very young squad. The senior has been a major reason that Washington has played in so many close games this season.

In other news...

With the retirement of Michael Jordan, people say we don't have enough good role models. Well, what about Greek god Chris Berghaus and Greek goddess Michelle Vandernat? Occasionally, the two of them come down from Mt. Olympus to share their infinite wisdom. (Michelle is also a great backgammon player!)

Our other role models can be found in this week's Honorable Mentions, who are Greggi Miller, Jen Dixon, and Stefanie Self.

Fan of the week goes to Doug Peterson (but the megaphone has got to go, big guy)!

Well, Happy Trails...

Volunteers Needed to Make Casey Day a Success

John K. Phoebus

Students curious as to the meaning of the signs recently placed behind Kent House need only wait until tomorrow to ascertain their significance. This Saturday morning the edge of campus bordering Washington Avenue north of the Fire Lane will be the site of a student/ alumni beautification project. Under coordi-nation by Sophomore Class President Mark Reyero and Sophomore Class Vice-president Jon O'Connor, approximately 75 student volunteers have signed up to help. According to Reyero, plans for the day have turned out better than aimed for. Alumni, led by an initial significant contribution from Brooke L. Frank '92, have donated over $1500 for supplies and plants.

Mrs. Casey with the CAC bust of her late husband

Casey Day will commence at 8:30 a.m. with coffee and donuts behind the Kent House dormitory. Students are asked to be at the site by 9 a.m. in comfortable clothes. The event is described by Reyero and O'Connor as "a service project initiated by the combined effort of Alumni and the SGA. After all of the Casey's donations (CAC, Swim Center, etc.) Betty Casey hoped students would be inspired to give something back to the school. This day is our way of doing that."

The embankment along Washington Avenue is targeted in the first of what Reyero hopes will become an annual Sophomore class project. The area will be refurbished with trees and plants, the unused paved driveway will be removed and the foundations for two walkways laid. Reyero is especially pleased that this area was selected because he not only lives in Kent House but says that theare bordering Washington Avenue north of the fire lane is currently a very unattractive site. "Improvement to this location will not only be appreciated, but extremely visible.

Work begins at 9 and is expected to last until noon. Students who have not already signed up are welcome to attend. O'Connor encourages students to attend: "The Elm, Kent County News, and Washington College Magazine will be there to take pictures, plus it's a great way to give back to your school." The officers also encourage Greek organizations to support the event as a means of donating community service.Ω

LRPC Open Forum

Tension Between Provost and Faculty

John K. Phoebus

At a forum open to all members of the college community, Gene Wubbels, Dean and Provost, commented on the state of the LRPC's Preliminary Report. This meeting was attended by only eleven professors and two students. Despite what could have been an informal setting, Wubbels stiffly presented the status of the LRPC's PR reflecting recent input on certain sections of the Report

The faculty members of the LRPC, commonly known as the "Gang of Six," have drafted and redrafted sections regarding faculty and the faculty program with the intention of putting it before a faculty assembly. Their work will be presented to the LRPC at its next meeting on November 13.

The financial projections have been redone to reflect errors spotted by Dr. Eugene Hamilton. Affected are models A and C. Wubbels feels that these changes "don't change the conclusion in the plan, just narrowed the margin from $3 to $2 million." Wubbels here refers to the surplus after ten years in favor of plan A. He stated that the committee should in its final draft propose a plan, rather than present several alternatives.

Wubbels reported on the meeting of the Executive Committee and the Finance Committee of the Board of Visitors and Governors which occurred in Baltimore on Monday. At this meeting a group of independent auditors presented their report on Washington College's financial status. Wubbels cryptically noted that in their verbal remarks to the committees of the Board, the auditors "pointed to very bad financial news in need of attention." Feeling this to be "a very scary meeting," Wubbels explained that at this time he realized the severity of the college's financial predicament which impressed upon him the necessity "for movement at the college to [handle] our academic problems." Faculty members pressed Wubbels to report more fully the business considered in the Baltimore meeting. Dr. Tom Pabon questioned the Dean. "When will you speak to the faculty about what [will be done] about the 'edge of the abyss'" which Wubbels had earlier used as analogy to the college's financial situation.

Wubbels responded: "I assess that the Board wants some kind of understanding with the College, with the administration, but primarily the faculty, that the faculty is able to participate in some kind of reform of the Academic Program. But if the inclination of the faculty is to say 'everything is okay,' that is not the spirit they are looking for. [The Board] wants to know the faculty is with them.

Candidates Come Clean

Scott Koon

Yesterday, the Elm interviewed the three candidates for mayor of Chestertown, Vito Tinelli, Margo Bailey and Richard Proctor.

Elm: In this week's Kent County News it was reported that you supported the notion of "adoptive families" for off-campus Washington College students. What would the "adoptive family" program entail?

Tinelli: This was suggested to me by a recent Washington College graduate, and my son, the three of us together were discussing this one day and, as I mentioned at the meeting I'm not smart enough to come up with this innovative kind of idea. They thought that if you had an adoptive-type family that would work both ways. If the student had a problem they could go to them or they would have the student in for supper once a week or dinner once a week, and put the student back into a family type of an atmosphere, and then if there was any problem the other way they would be notified to talk to the student. It was a kind of a suggestion that they thought may work, somebody might look into that. I haven't talked to anybody up at the College about it, I haven't talked to Dean Maxcy or anybody, it was just brought up.

Elm: So this isn't really a campaign issue, then?

Tinelli: Oh, no, no, no it's definitely not a campaign issue. This is something I've felt badly about because almost each year we get complaints from people from the town about college students, and each year Dean Maxcy comes in and explains the situation and how everybody is having their own little off-campus senate and the rest of it but each year we continue to get complaints because,

Lies, Damn Lies and Statistics on Halloween

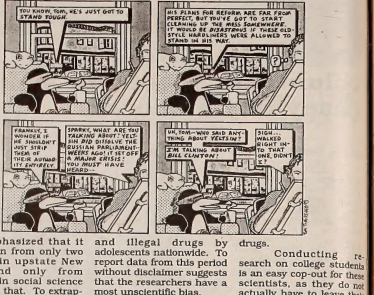
One of the most common complaints voiced by students is that Washington College is very much a "suitcase college," where students stay on campus all week but drive home on the weekends. At larger schools, this is not such a problem, because there is always a critical mass of students available for social activity even when a fairly large proportion opt to return home for the weekend. Here, if even a quarter of students decide not to stay, a marked pall descends upon the campus.

There are a few weekends when this is never the case, and Halloween weekend is one of them. Since Halloween falls on a Sunday this year, there should be several lively theme parties this weekend as students try to relieve some of the stress which they have been under since finishing their mid-terms.

It's really easy to understand-Halloween occurs at one of the most stressful times of the academic year, and therefore students use the holiday as a chance to relax, socialize and take their minds off of school. Yet to some social-psychologist-types out there, every social phenomenon is a conundrum worthy of profound examination and exhaustive meditation.

This is apparently the impulse behind "Dressing in Costume and the use of Alcohol, Marijuana, and Other Drugs by College Students," a most impressive bit of non-research conducted by Kimberly A. Miller, Cynthia R. Jasper and Donald R. Hill which was published in the Spring, 1993 issue of Adolescence , a scholarly journal devoted to the study of "the second decade of life."

The academic urge to research and publish is certainly laudable, but sometimes results in the publication of slovenly and methodologically unsound research, as in the case of the paper cited above. The researchers found "significant associations between dressing in costume and drinking alcohol, and between masquerading with a group and using marijuana and other drugs. No significant associations were found between disguise of identity and the use of alcohol, marijuana and other drugs." This statement of empirical observation occurs right up front in the abstract of the paper.



The real limitations of the study are only evident in the method section, which reveals that the data come from questionnaires administered to students in social science classes in two colleges in upstate New York between 1978 and 1982. The sample was a bad sample by anyone's standards, with women being over-represented by a margin of 805 to 448.

While the sample was quite large, it cannot be over-emphasized that it was drawn from only two colleges in upstate New York, and only from students in social science courses at that. To extrapolate from this to make sweeping statements about American college students in general is scandalously erroneous, given the lack of empirical data to support the proposition that students in upstate New York are somehow representative of students in the nation as a whole.

The most egregiously deceptive aspect of the paper is that it reports data from the period 1978-1982 as if it were somehow relevant to college students in 1993. Any social scientist who has studied historical patterns of substance abuse among adolescents knows that these years marked a historical peak in the reporting of use of alcohol and illegal drugs by adolescents nationwide. To report data from this period without disclaimer suggests that the researchers have a most unscientific bias.

The conclusion of the paper is less than breathtaking. It states that since use of alcohol and drugs sometimes occurs at holiday festivities, students "could. . . use alcohol and other drugs in an attempt to simulate the atmosphere of Halloween in other situations. To address this problem, educators could emphasize that dressing in costume can be a positive social experience-one that allows for creative expression of the self-and that alcohol and other drugs are not necessary to enhance this experience." In other words, the end result of all this ground-breaking research is to urge teachers to tell kids not to get drunk or use drugs.

Conducting research on college students is an easy cop-out for these scientists, as they do not actually have to leave their ivory tower to study the real world. Doing research on alcohol and drug use at colleges involves no risk to the researcher. It is an easy opportunity to moralize, to conduct demagoguery while hiding behind the veil of scientific objectivity and omniscience. Even laying aside the many fun-damental flaws of this particular research, there is a greater social danger in research of this type, in that it tends to make mountains out of molehills. It is political propaganda aimed at reinforcing negative stereotypes of college students, and constitutes a slur against all college students, here and elsewhere. Ω

WC Rumor Mill Grinds Out of Control

Marianne Culbertson

"Psst. . . Hey Fishbrains! Have you heard about Snakebite?"

"Wow, is this really true? I can't believe that he is doing that, what the hell is he thinking?"

I really have no idea. I personally think the whole idea is disgusting."

Oh, my God! There's Turtle!" (turns to Turtle and whispers) "Hey Turtle, have you heard about Snakebite yet?"

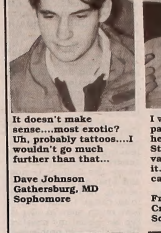
"No, tell me." (hesitant look appears on Orange Peel's face just to egg her on) "Oh, come on and just tell me! What's going on anyway?"

"Well, come over here, let's chat." (Fishbrain and Orange Peel lead Turtle off into a corner.)

This is something that happens everyday at Washington College because of the simple fact that people just don't have any R-E-S-P-E-C-T for other people's privacy. Simple conversations like the one above can really cause problems for the people being discussed. Rumors have always been detrimental to the small community in which we live. All they do is create chaos in our seemingly pleasant little worlds. When rumors get started, they break apart the community rather that pull it together in the way that it is supposed to be.

This kind of discussion occurs when people get scared of something that they see, or might IMAGINE that they see. Naturally, they tend to ask other people about the situations at hand in order to settle their own minds, or in some cases, to feed off all of the negative energy they can possibly dig up. "Dig up" being the operative term here. Wouldn't it be more logical to ask the person or persons involved in the situation that you are concerned about. It would be the more direct route to getting a truthful response.

These are a few questions that you should asking yourself in determining how involved you are in the rumor mill. How do you know that the snippets that you pick up here and there in conversation are true? Do you even care whether or not they are true? Are you the type of person that looks for differences in other people's lives just so you can talk about them? Are you confident enough in yourself that you could confront people about whom rumors are being spread? Are you so insecure that you have to draw attention to other people's lives so that yours will stay out of the limelight/rumor mill?



I personally would be offended if any one person or GROUP of people were talking about me in order to search for answers they are never going to find unless they ASK ME.

North American Free Trade Agreement

Paul Briggs

In case you missed it, the government of Canada has been overthrown. Kim Campbell, the Progressive Conservative prime minister, and two thirds of the parliament have been voted out of office. In place of this is a parliament dominated by the Liberal party, with the main opposition formed by two regional parties, the Separatist Bloc Quebecois and the western-based Reform Party.

Where does all this leave Canadian participation in NAFTA, the North American Free Trade Agreement? It is not yet known whether the new Prime Minister, Jean Chretien, wishes to renegotiate parts of the NAFTA deal. Clinton, thus far, has said that he is unwilling to renegotiate.

The problem with Canada has to do with wheat exports. U.S. farmers from Midwestern states are worried about competition from the wheat farms of western Canada. NAFTA is facing stiff opposition in Congress, and the Washington Post has reported that the President may impose import quotas on durum wheat in order to secure approval from western senators and representatives. This may have the effect of stirring opposition to NAFTA in Canada, particularly among the Reform Party, which now holds over fifty seats.

In addition to which there remains the question of whether NAFTA will mean a loss of jobs to Mexico.

As NAFTA's supporters have often mentioned, if labor costs were the only consideration in selecting a factory site, there are plenty of nations which are much poorer than Mexico, in which companies could pay even lower wages and less benefits. In fact, this does happen sometimes. Many industries (the textile industry in particular) set up "industrial zones" in desperately poor regions in which cheap, unskilled labor is easily exploited. In most poverty-struck nations, however, the roads, airports and shipping facilities are so minimal as to make transporting large quantities of manufactured goods out of the country impractical, if not virtually impossible. How Mexico fares in this regard is not yet known.

Whether or not NAFTA is passed, companies will probably continue to export jobs south of the border, as they have already been doing for years now. If NAFTA is passed, the Mexican market will be rendered far more open to U.S. goods, which, hopefully, will eventually result in the creation of jobs here.

The real problem with NAFTA is that very little is generally known about the details of it, still less about the separately negotiated labor and environmental agreements surrounding it. It's easy enough to visualize companies packing up and moving south of the border to take advantage of cheap labor. It's not so easy to visualize profits from sales in Mexico creating jobs in America.

As a result, this new controversy over wheat exports only complicates the situation. If Clinton has to renegotiate NAFTA or impose quotas in order to make the agreement palatable, Canada may back out. If he doesn't, the United States may back out.

Strange as it may seem to many of his supporters, President Clinton still supports NAFTA. In his presidential campaign, he said that he believed that NAFTA could work, if managed properly and given the proper side agreements

Rather than merely presenting facts to you this week, I have a discussion to cover. I was talking with a friend last week about environmental issues, and she brought up the fact that a lot of people worry about the environment but forget that humanity is a part of it. The environmentalist movement is, of course, based on people and ecological causes are also largely social. Although we may rant and rave about the greenhouse effect, and come up with complicated scientific solutions to complicated scientific problems, these problems exist within the context of our society and we must deal with them as a group.

It is interesting to note how the whole root of ecological/environmental evil was the alienation of man from his brothers and sisters and from his earth. The ties of respect were weakened if not lost. In ancient societies respect for the earth was part of their religion and respect for one another was fundamental. Native Americans are a more recent example. A large part of the Native American spirituality deals with the respect and loving relationship with the Earth. The concept of animism is also present, making nature not merely static but rather a living participant in daily life.

Our modern focus is on finding out what we can get out of our planet, what we can use. We are now looking at ourselves as Masters of the Earth rather than part of it. I don't want to get too deep into all these spiritual considerations, what I mean to say is that separation caused us to gradually lose our respect and "worship" so to speak of the Earth. Parting from that premise, there are a few things that we should consider about our current environmentalist movement that is becoming more and more militant, as are our social movements also. Separating and arguing won't help half as much as uniting forces and Respect will.

I am not trying to paint a "Shiny happy people holding hands" REM picture here, just suggesting that a little less attacking and a little more negotiating might be useful. We want to make the Earth a better place for us to live in as a society so we can't ignore the fact that we're in this together. It is interesting to note that our society tends to divide issues into narrow groups. Social problems and environmental problems are caused by a common enemy. Even social problems are divided into many categories; we have gender issues, racial issues, gay issues and so forth, but it seems that what we all want to do it to teach respect.

After 2 1/2 Years in Office, President Merdinger Steps Down

Kevin O'Keefe

When Dean Robert Seager resigned from the College last Spring, he ensured that his departure would be marked by the same controversy which accompanied his administration — Seager made public caustic remarks about his relationship with the faculty. Dr. Charles Merdinger, in his exit, is intent upon avoiding that same situation; whatever caustic remarks he may be thinking, he is keeping them private.

Merdinger, in an Elm interview Thursday, outlined his reasons for leaving Washington: "In general, I've reflected on where the College is now and what further use I can be to it. As I look down the long range I don't feel I have much more to offer it. I've completed my mission. The College had problems. . . as I tackled as many as I could."

Upon questioning, the President admitted that the campus unrest in the past year had affected his decision. "I didn't find things in the Presidency of situations," he remarked, "but I wasn't going to run away from anything." He added that he felt "No one ran me out on a rall. . .they just offered me encouragement to improve my position."

Where did his administration go wrong? "There were obvious difficulties in the wind before I came," Merdinger said. "The College has been having difficulties for years. It is a difficult question to answer — it's compounded of so many things. The administration was new with no foot on campus and it made it difficult. There was the problem of getting organized and finding people for positions. It was a desperate period for higher education in general. Action had to be taken immediately which might have been gradual." An example, he said, was the freezing of faculty salaries.

Dr. Merdinger refused to elaborate on his relationship with the faculty, explaining that any comments "could start things again. I should try to make as smooth a turnover as possible." On student relations he remarked that some students were hostile, but "others were a delight."

Explaining what influenced him to resign this month, over a year after students and faculty first requested his departure, the President commented "I knew I wasn't going to spend the rest of my working days here. When the College reached a stable state, I would leave." Has Washington reached that stability? "This period," Merdinger said, "should be viewed from the perspective of history. There were positive things. They may have happened because of me or in spite of me. This is a stronger school than it was in June 1970. The question to ask is 'is it in better shape?' I think it is. It's no great tragedy that a President has stayed less than three years. I want to leave on a happy note." The President said he was not embittered by the situation he faced. "My life has not been warped." He added that though there has been a strain on his family, a strain he is "happy is over."

Merdinger answered "no comment" when asked if any administrators will leave with him.

When questioned if he felt he was the right man for the job of President of Washington College, the soon-to-be Ex-President replied tersely, "no comment." He added though that he was enough of an optimist to "do it again" even knowing the difficulties he would face. From his experience, Merdinger proffered a suggestion for what the ideal Washington College President should be: he immediately cracked that it would be someone from Quantico, then added "seriously" that it takes someone with good scholarly credentials, goos administrative experience, a broad viewpoint, and "vigor and health to withstand the buffeting he is sure to get."

President Merdinger admitted that some plans and proposals of his remain undone. "We have not honestly achieved a long range plan. It's vital." He is particularly disappointed with the College's study of the implications of variously sized student bodies. "We don't know to this day what each of these sizes would mean to us. We have a start on this. But it hasn't been looked as thoroughly as it should."

The College must also face more "academic soul searching" on the four course plan, he warned. In fund raising, an area which in the last two years has been heavily criticized, the College must strive to sell than the fact that "this is just a nice little College," he said. "Again we have the beginnings. It's still in the embryonic stage." In association with other colleges, Merdinger emphasized that Washington has not gone far enough. The concept of consortiums must be investigated, he said. "We've tended to be too self-contained."

For the future, Dr. Merdinger explained that Washington continues to have the potential for further development of excellence; it was that potential for further development of excellence, he says, which drew him here. "Whether we realize that potential depends on a number of factors in the next years. It's still possible but independent colleges are up against the barricades."

What will Dr. Merdinger's future relationship with the College be? "I will do what I can to push the College. I don't want to see this place go down the drain. I want to see it prosper. I've enjoyed it here very much — it's a part of my life I'm not going to erase." Ω

Budget Crunch

Okay, this has gone too far. I enticed several of my friends to go to the Senior Dinner with the promise that we'd get senior gifts, a tradition of sorts. Last year they got nifty Washington College prints like the one hanging in the Student Affairs Office.

I was emeceing the little event, which basically meant I gave a stupid little introduction to each of the scheduled speakers. After to be re-pocketed from inside the college. Thus we don't get posters, or postcards, or postage stamps at senior dinners.

That's a small example of a larger phenomenon manifesting itself in the systematic shrinking of the administrative staff. These are not people who goof off. They were busy my freshman year. They've become busier as the length of time spent at their

the last such person, President Trout, I remained in my seat. I was waiting for Kathleen O'Donnell, the advisor of the Senior Campaign Committee, to rise from her seat clutching untold riches for us to reap as rewards for our last three years of work.

Nothing happened, and I slunked off the podium, feeling and no doubt looking foolish. I told everyone to have a good night, and was followed by seniors muttering at me, "what about our presents?"

I asked Kathleen, who bespoke the two dreaded words: "budget cuts." I muttered them back to my friends, who walked away muttering.

Not that we're all greedy. We appreciated the gesture of free food (except for those of us — at least one, at my table — who couldn't eat it because it had sugar in it). But what sort of thing is that to cut?

The answer is more practical places that a little extra cash could be used. The number of new books purchased per year in Miller Library is dwindling at a time when availability of information is becoming ever-more crucial to a student body which, we are told, will grow by at least five hundred students in the next ten years.

The Internet can tell you what books are available at a given library at the University of North Carolina, but if you wait three weeks for it to arrive on loan and find out it doesn't have what you want, it does you no good.

Right now, the information highway can give you titles — not contents of many books. Availability of articles is also piecemeal and subject to tastes of those willing to type them in. Current Contents listings, again, only give you title and subject.

But if we can assume that, for the financial moment, the amount of money in pocket isn't going to increase much any time soon, it has respective jobs has given them more duties. And they're even busier now that departing staff members' occupations are spread around to other, already full-time, workers.

A practice of administrative shufflers has been, in the past, to secure a job and get a free bachelors' and masters' degree. This process sometimes leads people to discover that what they really want to do is not to crunch numbers, or distribute financial aid, or coordinate events. And when this happens, they leave. In the past, however, they were replaced.

How much shuffling of staff and money will go on before a major change is noticed? Members of the college community can get their hands on all the swizzle sticks they desire, but not on resources, such as books and time.

Lord knows I barely manage to balance my checkbook in balance. I wouldn't want to — I couldn't — manage a business the size of a college. So I don't know where the discrepancies in budgetary management are. If I had a free month, a lot of patience, a business degree, and a copy of the last five years books — the ones they really keep, not the large categorized figures they print for the Elm — then I might be able to do it. But I don't have any of those things.

In the national financial crisis really responsible for shortages that crop up in odd places? Possibly. Is the situation dire enough to demand a lack of commemorative posters? Apparently. Will the administration keep re-distributing unfilled positions until those overworked assistants still in employ all revolt — and quit, not to be replaced, their positions distributed to the SGA? I hope not.

But what I want to know is: How many equivalents of $500 toilet seats are on campus? God only knows and Gene Hessey. Ω

Blub

by Tanya Allen

This author is heading off this week's column with a needed (so she's been told) synopsis for all regular readers — i.e. those who only read the first paragraph of Blub, then put it away, intending to finish it later but ending up using it instead to wrap things—fish, perhaps, and sometimes presents. This synopsis is also for those who only read Blub when they happen to glance down at it, see their name, and say "What the...THAT'S A REALLY UGLY FISH! I DON'T WANT TO BE THAT FISH! What's going on? Is somebody making fun of me? Um... So too, this is for those friends of the author (ahem) who only read Blub when the author whines loudly and makes them feel guilty. (Rachel, Ryan, KT....)

For those wondering what the hey Blub is: Blub is a long-time, amusing satirical column about Washington College, told through an ongoing fiction. What has happened in Blub so far: One typical Washington College day. THANE CLARK (hippie/writer/R.A. guy in Kent who bears a strong resemblance to Jesus) and his apostles were wasting valuable Casey time by throwing food. One of the apostles tried to carve a meatball at another apostle, but the meatball missed that apostle and hit the WC dining hall bread. For some reason the impact of meatball and disco ball caused everyone in the entire Washington College campus to turn into various aquatic sea creatures (picked at random by the author from a book of "American Food & Game Fishes"). So that the only other main plottish things readers have to know about is be able to follow Blub are: The Chestertown Sho'men want to catch and eat the WC students. The students of Washington College have decided to depose the WC administration and make MARK MURPHY (the K.A./Lit Haus sophomore guy with a southern accent) king of Washington College. The deposed PRESIDENT TROUT AND THE DEANS are currently locked in the Miller Library's fishbowl, where they are considering forming a rock group, with DEAN SANSING as the sultry lead singer, DEAN MAXCY on keyboards, DEAN WUBBELS on saxophone, DEAN McINTIRE on tambourine, and PRESIDENT TROUT on drums. PRESIDENT TROUT And The Deans have been driven into the fishbowl by PAUL BRIGGS and a band of loyal followers. The rest of the campus is busy planning MARK MURPHY'S coronation. When we left off, Mark was talking to JEN WALDYCH about the first few things he's going to do as king of Washington College. The first few things he's going to do are: give several of the professors who we need here but who most likely won't be kept on next year tenure; start spreading love all over campus; have a special on-campus garage built just for himself, and

"Fourthly," Mark Murphy, the proud-but-noble-guppy said, "Ah'm going to get mahself a queen."

"Ooooo!" many male fish on campus immediately started dressing up in drag because EVERYBODY wants to be Mark Murphy's Queen....

"Uh, no, guys, sorry," Mark said, turning as red as a fish can turn without being baked, "Ah don't mean that kind of queen....

"What? Are you a homophobe?" cried a male fish.

"No! Ah'm not, ah just...," began Mark, turning even redder.

"Ooooo!" many of the female fish on campus immediately started squealing. "Mark Murphy's queen! Mark Murphy's queen!"

"I want to be Mark Murphy's queen!" said JODIE CLARK, a banana fish.

"I'd make a better Mark-Murphy-queen than you would!" said PAULA DeSTEFANO, a strawberry bass.

"No you wouldn't!" said Jodie.

"Yes I would!" cried Paula.

"I think we're going to have to have a contest to see who would make the best queen!" said EVE ZARTMAN, a butterfly fish.

"I'll win!" said Lola, I mean BRUDETTE AVANT, the loro in her oh-so steamy, sexy voice.

"No, I'LL win." said TARIN TOWERS, Portuguese (wo)man of war. "Ah, yes...as Queen of Washington College I'll RULE this school! I'll have even more power than I have already! I'll have complete domination, over everything! I'll have...."

"Wait a minute," said TANYA Angelfish ALLEN, "A contest to see who would make the best queen for Mark Murphy? This is sick! Do you realize how sexist this is?!"

"Femifish! Femifish!" a number of fish chanted derisively. "Come on...lay off on the femifishism for just one Elm, would you?"

"No, really!" said Tanya, "Always remember: a woman needs a man like a fish needs a...."

Just then that guy—who no one knows but who wears spandex and sunglasses and when it's warm out bicycles to campus and shows off his impressive cycling tricks to any woman walking by who wears form-fitting clothing and when no woman in form-fitting clothing is around engages in some sort bizarre masturbatory ritual by bouncing his bicycle up and down and up and down and up and down on stairs or the benches in front of Caroline and Queen Anne for hours and hours and hours—rode by, in the form of an eel.)

"Kill him!" screamed Tanya, and a barracuda named STEPHANIE swam off to SLAUGHTER him.

"The contest wouldn't be sexist," said ladyfish AMIE, WISELEY, "If it was judged only by....women."

"Oh, how interesting!" said another AMY, TINGLEing all over. Ω

Senior Dinner

Seniors Urged to Donate

John K. Phoebus

Wednesday evening, Seniors attended a dinner in their honor, sponsored by the Senior Campaign Committee. Attending were approximately 90 members of the class, President and Mrs. Trout, Ed Athey, Kathleen O'Donnel and Robert Bull. Senior Class President Melissa Sullivan and Vice-president Andrew Evans spoke to the class after dinner.

Sullivan commented that "We're an eclectic group with different values and purposes, but we're more similar than we think." She then pointed out many experiences the seniors shared in common: "living, drinking and eating together," May Day, and memories of things that no longer exist, including the old "real" Coffee House parties, the Elm, and Miss Dee's. In conclusion, Melissa reminded the seniors they were graduating as a fully which has grown close and shared many good times." Evans followed with a presentation of appreciable qualities of Washington College as an institution. He commented on its size and how that facilitates an interactive community.

Proceeding the class officers, Ivette Carmax and Julia Scheid, co-chairs of the Senior Campaign Committee impressed upon the class the need and benefits of donations to the annual fund. "The cost of running WC is $8000 more per student than tuition covers. This amounts to a need for 1.4 million dollars needed each year to cover expenses." The goal of the committee is to raise $3000 and to achieve 100% participation from the senior class. "We hope that everyone can give something." Seniors who give $25 or more receive a t-shirt. Those donating $100 or more receive membership in the 1782 Society. While Society membership is normally constituted by gifts of $1000 or more, Seniors are eligible to join as an undergraduate and work up to this amount. One of the popular benefits of joining the 1782 Society is the invitation to the Spring Gala, a black tie affair held this Spring at the Baltimore Museum of Art. Pledge cards were collected at the dinner. Gormaz and Scheid introduced members of the Senior Campaign Committee who will contact each member of the class to solicit gifts.

Senior Eve Zartman presented a video mosaic of pictures, film and music of student life at WC. Combining past and present, the clip included before and after photos of the CAC and LFC. Of note were pictures of May Day, clips of Doug Hoffberger getting people to be on camera, and a Julie Lippke and Kate Towery's photo collection.

Ed Athey, current vice-president of the Alumni Council and President-elect for 1994-95, spoke to the seniors. He described the importance of the Alumni Association and its usefulness in networking through Alumni chapters across the country. He asked seniors to prepare to give back to the school.

President Trout, who arrived at WC the same year as the Class of '94, jovially quizzed the seniors on topics such as building construction, scandalous SGA presidents, and the World Series. While corrected on the last by baseball whiz Andrew Evans, Trout proceeded to impress upon the class the necessity of alumni giving. He mentioned that WC has one of the nation's highest alumni giving rate. Trout encouraged the class to "come back together" at the first year reunion to begin a habit of returning to WC. " While the college will continue to change" certain events will be hallmarks for Washington College: Parent's Day, the Birthday Ball, and Commencement. To these occasions, Trout welcomed the future alumni. Ω

Pabon replied that there is no conflict with the faculty and the board on this issue which seems to be in conflict with the "spirit of co-governance" [of faculty and Board]. Pabon felt it necessary to "get these two seemingly disparate groups to start talking."

To this Wubbels asserted that "the Trustees employ the administration for the purpose of talking to the faculty."

Dr. Nancy Tatum inquired "What efforts are being made to cope with the proposal sent by the faculty to the Board last spring on compensation and health benefits?"

Wubbels replied that while the subject of additional meetings has been health care benefits, "that one [the faculty proposal] has been resolved."

Tatum responded that rejecting the proposal was not precisely the same as resolving the issue. She questioned whether there had been discussion of salaries since the freeze. Wubbels said "I don't feel free to report on that" other than to say that the subject was brought up at the Monday meeting. In response to further inquiries on this matter, Wubbels stared off into the distance.

The faculty members present then discussed the process of academic revision, citing former years in which such things took place. Dr. Sean O'Connor and Dr. Al Briggs had much to offer on this subject.

Briggs emphasized that what is important is if "we get our act together and really believe that what we're doing is good for the students, not just what's going to sell." Wubbels stated that the one of the "axioms of the strategy for curricular change is that the process must be open."

Tatum criticized the meeting for not indicating a specific section of the Preliminary Report to be discussed. "There was a great deal of confusion [as to what the meeting was about]"

In response to a question by the Elm regarding the availability of material under consideration for the revised draft of the Report, Wubbels explained the changes that had been made, but gave little indication as to the availability of these for community perusal. Wubbels emphasized that in regards to financial models, the next draft will only include a single recommendation as opposed to the alternatives proposed in the first draft.

Andrew Evans, one of the two students in attendance, inquired whether the proposed growth in the size of the college would affect the academic standards of WC ten years from now. While Wubbels stated that WC's achievement of prestige of Swathmore's scale "not a goal I have for the college," he did agree that WC would hopefully be nationally known. Wubbels also agreed with Evans that increased average SAT scores of 1100 were reasonable to shoot for. Ω

We should respect our Earth as our home and Mother and in the same way we should respect one another as fellow human beings, and brother and sisters, sons and daughters of the Earth as ancient spiritual beliefs would have it. Pending words into people's heads and arguing amongst ourselves is not half as effective as uniting forces and working to communicate and educate would be. I don't mean to say that no groups do this, some groups are trying to make this their system. As a general rule we are all locked up into separatist narrow views; quite a paradox considering the goal is to broaden our scopes. Hierarchal focus also makes it easier to ignore the consequences that our actions will have upon our Earth. If we only concentrate on our today and even make the term "our" applicable to a select few that fill the requisites, we will get nowhere. The bottom line is to respect , unite and communicate instead of attacking. Ω

I always enjoy using the parallel that this college is socially structured like that of High School. This is our fault because we have chosen to act in this manner. What happened to the differences that I Expected to exist resulting from the transition from High School the college? Unfortunately, most people on this campus do not operate in a mature manner. There are a lot of people out there who still run around taking pleasure in immersing themselves in everyone else's lives. No wonder we have people freaking out in their rooms at night and contemplating suicide. I'm not surprised at the fact that some of the Freshmen have a hard time with things arriving here. Is this something that is so deeply embedded into our psyches that we cannot shake it? Or, is it possible that we might be able to start seeing ourselves as ADULTS who have enough problems in our own lives to be concerned about, rather than worrying about everybody else's.

I think it is possible for us to start seeing ourselves as adults. People need to change their mind-set a little. Learn to have RESPECT for other people's private lives. Just because you live in a dorm with someone or are in a class with someone does not mean that you are automatically privy to all or any information in their lives. I say if you are old enough to make a legal or illegal beer run, you are old enough to know when to control your mouth. Ω

Since then, U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor has negotiated agreements on environmental and labor policy.

It should be possible to work out this dispute without too much hassle. It is in the nature of democratic societies to change governments from time to time. If agreements negotiated between governments have to be abandoned or reworked every time there is a change of government, international order will lose what little respect it has. Ω

"Mayor," from 1

I guess they're out there really. It happens.

Elm: Through tuition alone each year college students contribute something like 16 million dollars to the local economy.

Tinelli: Oh, there's no question that the College is probably an economic block I personally have no problem with. I've seven children, and I live just behind Minta Martin Hall. Believe me, I'm accustomed to youth about, it doesn't bother me. Some people find it intolerable for different reasons, I don't know. It's a problem which always reaches us (town council) from the community. It's just something we can't ignore.

Elm: What about constituents who are college students? Especially off-campus students-if you're going to go to the trouble to sometimes buy a house, you'll often register to vote. What sort of things do you think might be done in the future to improve town-gown relations and prevent misunderstandings?

Tinelli: I think that you can always improve town-gown relations. Personally I think Chestertown, believe it or not, has one of the better ones. I attended a workshop on town-gown relations from the Maryland Municipal League, and found that I understand from them we have quite a working relationship. We have been very cooperative with the College in all ways which we can. We have given up parking for them, we have given up streets because we felt the College was probably in a brittle stage where they need to do a few things to stay competitive in the academic industry, really. We have cooperated with them all we can. We have had, I think in a couple of cases we may not have taken the initiative and I don't know whether how its worked out. For example we have taken the initiative in putting the crossing light on Washington Avenue. We felt that we needed it.

Elm: And the town paid for that?

Tinelli: Yeah-well the town didn't pay for it but we pushed for it, I mean that's a state highway and all. The state paid for it. We had to try something up there because it was a continuing problem. If nothing else, its slowed everything down, I believe. It's helped. I think we have a fairly good town-gown relationship, really. As I say, we always continually get complaints from people in the community that just are not used to having college students about. But if college students become constituents, they certainly are entitled to all the other benefits of the town. I mean, you talk about buying property in town and so forth, they qualify for trash collection, police protection, for lighting, for clean water, for sewage and the other types of services that we provide. As such, they are an equal member-not that we think that there is such a thing as an unequal member-of the community. I think that the big thing is that you have to communicate all the time. We talk town-gown, and that's great, but it would be nicer if these little neighborhood type disturbances could be worked out right at the neighborhood. That would be the nicest thing, and if there's any way we town could help in that area, we'd be glad to.

Elm: So you see the noise factor and the party factor as not being the exclusive town-gown issue?

Tinelli: Oh, no. You see, it's nice to have a college. It's nice to have a place where, for example, on Tuesday night they had a forum on NAFTA. It's great to have something like this within walking distance in your community to be able to attend. I think it's really a plus for the town, and I think that a lot of people should realize the benefits there are. And they should take advantage of it more.

Elm: Any other comments you'd like to direct to the college community as to what this campaign is about?

Tinelli: I'm really not campaigning hard for office. I'm really campaigning for a job that I see has to be done.

always like to maintain good relations with the College because I think academia really has something to offer a community in a good thing. Do you think you're getting a bum-rap as a student living off-campus?

Elm: I live on campus, actually. What I see happening right now at the College is that the College is going to get larger, and a lot of people seem to feel that that means students will go off campus to live, and I'm worried that that might adversely affect relations. Especially if it happens that another hundred, two, hundred students live off-campus.

Tinelli: That sounds like a really good reason to establish good town-gown relations at this point. Right now would really be the time to get things working together. Once you get the foundation established, if the College expands, if it gets bigger, it will do so in an orderly manner.

Elm: Basically, what do you see as occurring in town/gown relations right now? What are the burning issues for you?

Bailey: Ok, one of the major issues for me and I talked to Maureen McIntire the other day to have her do a survey, a pole, a what ever, talk to students and find out what students would like to see solving themselves. If you can improve jobs and housing, you can have places where kids can play and be safe and places where teenagers can go instead of hanging around on street corners.

Elm: That brings up another issue. I've noticed occasionally in the Kent County News you'll find letters which strike me as racist. The county is about 20% Black and so is the town. Do you feel that race relations, particularly in regard to people hanging out by Barker's on a Friday night, and pedestrians feeling uncomfortable walking past them, or drive past or whatnot, is that an issue for the town, or law enforcement, or what?

Bailey: I went down there one night, and ran into a couple of guys and asked them why they were hanging around on the corner, and they said it was a place to go, something to do, that they didn't want to sit at home and watch television, they like being outside. Whether they were telling the truth or what they thought I wanted to hear, for them it was something to do socially. One guy said, if you saw the size of my apartment, I can't get two people in there, I like lots of friends so the street corner is a place to gather. I guess it can be threatening to someone who says 'that's not my lifestyle' and they get tense. Race relations need a great deal of improvement. I find a lot of members of the Black community feel that we're not asking their opinions, that we're excluding them, and we've got to include them in town decisions, get them on town committees.

The upcoming elections of 13 December mark the first contested mayoral race in many years. Next week's Elm will feature the rest of the Bailey interview, as well as the Proctor interview in its entirity. Ω

The Fall Not-So-Classic

On October 20th a group of friends and I ventured to Veterans Stadium for Game Four of the Fall Classic—the World Series. We had hoped to see a good baseball game where supposedly the two best teams in baseball would be locked head-to-head in classic baseball fashion. By my definition that means good defense, clutch hitting, and most importantly good pitching. We had no idea what we were getting into.

Game four truly turned into the classic of all Fall Classics. It had everything the offensive minded baseball fan wishes to see—doubles, triples, homeruns, walks, hit-by-pitches, errors, and stolen bases. Unfortunately, the pitchers seemed to forget to bring their arms to the ballpark.

Anyone who witnessed game four knows what I mean. By the third inning, the scoreboard read, 7-6, in favor of the Bluejays. I knew by now we were in for a long night, and a long night it did turn out to be.

After seeing these two teams battle it out for yet two more long innings, we had run out of beer money and had nothing left to do but watch these clubs slug it out like slow-pitch softball teams. I honestly have seen better Little League games.

By the seventh inning it was 14-9 in favor of the Phils, and I found myself completely bored with the Homerun Derby being played on the field. So I decided to wander around the concession area and talk to some total strangers for the fun of it. This I figured would be much more exciting than the wiffle-ball game going on in the stadium.

As soon as I reached the concession area, I heard a marvelous sound. It was the Phillie Wiz Kids, a string-band consisting of two banjos and four horns. I talked to them when they finished their song, and asked them to play The Notre Dame fight song. They did. It truly was a relief from the sound I had heard for seven innings inside the stadium—the sound of bats smashing baseballs all over the Vet.

I then bumped into Philadelphia outfielder, Reuben Amaro, who was called up too late in the season to play in the play-offs, and asked him for an autograph. He signed my ticket stub, and I decided to go back and join Ron, Chad, and Chris at my seat.

The score was still 14-9 in the eighth inning and the Phillies seemed to have a big lead. Right? ... Wrong!

Phillie manager, Jim Fregosi, decided to go to their ace stopper, Mitch Williams, who proceeded to get tatooed all over the stadium like a batting practice pitcher with no curve ball.

I remember wondering if the Phils would ask Steve Carlton, who threw out the first ball, to come out of retirement to relieve "The Wild Thing." I honestly believe he would have had more on his fastball than Williams did or any of the teams' other pitchers did for that matter.

When the dust cleared, the Bluejays escaped with a 15-14 win. In all there were 29 runs, 30 hits, 3 long balls, 2 triples, 6 doubles, 14 walks, and 2 hit-by-pitches credited to 10 different pitchers. The game proved to be the longest in Series history and the strangest, as well.

Although the game had little to offer, there were some exciting things that made the trip worthwhile, like my drunk friend Chad who had to relieve himself so badly on the trip down, he went in a cup on the bridge that leads into the stadium; or maybe when Chad (still feeling good from the beer we had drank) hugged some old guy who had a cane after Dykstra hit his second homerun; or maybe it was when my friend Ron (feeling a little bold after his three beers) kept yelling, "Go JETS!"

Oh well, I did have a blast at the game, but it was no help from the two teams on the field. I guess I should be honored, having witnessed the strangest game in World Series history, but who cares? I just wanted to see a good game. Maybe I'll have better luck next year in Atlanta.

Parks plays catcher and first base for Washington College and he loves the Atlanta Braves for some unknown reason. Volleyball Spikes Way To A 22-16 Mark For Season

Erika K. Ford

With their season spiking to a close tomorrow, the Sho'women volleyball team will go into the Washington College Tournament hoping for a few more victories. Their current record is 22-16.

In the Centennial Conference Washington is 6-4. Their 600 percentage ranks them fifth in the league.

Tuesday night, the team took on Western Maryland at home and fell 1-3. They blew out Western Maryland in the second match 15-2, but were unable to repeat.

Co-captains Beverly Diaz and Michelle Chin helped lead the team effort. Diaz added 21 digs, while Chin had 18 assists for the night. Jen Dixon was a strong contributor with 14 kills and 43 total attempts at the ball.

On Wednesday Washington played at Wilmington in a late game.

Last weekend Sho'women volleyball travelled to Pennsylvania for two games. They went up against Centennial powerhouse Franklin & Marshall(10-0) as well as Bryn Mawr (2-0 and 4-6). They lost to F & M all three matches.

"We found out why F & M won the conference," head coach Penny Fall said. "They have a veteran team and they executed brilliantly."

Later that day, the team was victorious over Bryn Mawr, 3-2. Coach Fall was pleased with their performance.

"I felt they played particularly well, and played with heart against Bryn Mawr," Fall said.

"We got ahead in the first two games, but then we lost them both. We knew we were forced to win the next three in a row, and we did. We just fought and fought."

Tonight and tomorrow Washington will wrap up the season by hosting the WC Tournament. Marymount, Goucher, and Allentown have been invited to play in the quad-tourney.

Coach Fall is predicting success for WC in the final games of the year.

"This should be as even a tournament as I've seen," she said. "I anticipate we'll do well on the court if everyone stays healthy. Some very high-quality volleyball is going to be played this weekend."

Washington's games will start tomorrow morning at 11 a.m. in Cain. Show your support for Sho'women volleyball and come out to see their end of season play.

Team Falls To Muhlenberg On Saturday To Drop Ninth Contest

Matt Murray

The Washington field hockey team ended their season in exhilarating fashion on Wednesday when the Sho'women defeated the Catholic University of America 4-3 in overtime.

Sophomore Cindy Matalucci's goal with 7:10 expired in the first overtime gave the Sho'women their third win of the season.

"I don't think we played really differently, but I think we played with a lot more emotion."
–Sarah Feyerherm

"Jill (Schultz) hit it down, and the goalie went down," Matalucci said. " I was right there (for the rebound)."

The winning goal came after senior Liz Olivere crossed the ball from the corner. The resulting scramble in front of the net gave Washington the victory.

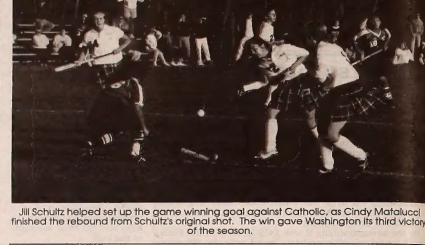
After a frustrating year, compiling a 3-9-1 record, the win was a relieving way to end the season.

"It just feels like we got all our frustrations out," senior Peggy Bowman said. "It would have been really frustrating going into another overtime game and losing. That would have just been a heart breaker to lose again but winning makes it all worthwhile."

Catholic scored first in the game, as Jennifer Muldoun converted their first real scoring chance 11:16 into the game. However, Washington struck back six minutes later when Olivere got the ball on the left post and flicked it back across the goal to tie the score at one.

Less than four minutes later, sophomore Kouri Coleman gave the Sho'women the lead. On a scramble in front of the cage, Coleman slipped and fell, but got right back up and knocked home a rebound.

Washington still led 2-1 at the half.



However, Catholic's Paula Settanni scored twice within a 15 minute span to give the visitors a 3-2 lead with only 5:49 remaining in regulation.

Jen Hanifee's goal with 2:56 remaining tied the score again and set the stage for Matalucci's game winner.

"I think we needed a confidence boost next year," Matalucci said. "We haven't scored that much at all, and we just needed this one to prove we could do it."

Said head coach Sarah Feyerherm , "We've just been having trouble scoring all year. But I knew because we had already scored three goals, they weren't going to let this one get away. I don't think we played really differently, but I think we played with a lot more emotion."

The Sho'women ended their season winning two out of their last three.

Jill Schultz helped set up the game winning goal against Catholic, as Cindy Matalucci finished the rebound from Schultz's original shot. The win gave Washington its third victory of the season.

Adam Poe

The Sho'Women field hockey team traveled to Muhlenberg on Saturday, only to be defeated by the narrowest of margins, 1-0.

The loss dropped the Sho'Women's record to 2-9-1 overall. It was the fourth time this season that they had lost a Centennial Conference game by a one-goal difference.

"It is one thing to come in last place in the conference and be the worst team, but it is something completely different when you know you're definitely not the worst," head coach Sarah Feyerherm said. "We just haven't had many breaks go our way."

The Muhlenberg Mules came out ready to play Saturday, as they took the opening pass-back and moved it up the right side of the field, to the end line where right wing April Poretta took a shot with little or no angle on the net. Somehow, the shot found the back of the cage, as Muhlenberg jumped out ahead 1-0.

That's where the score would stay for the rest of the game, as the Sho'Women were unable to capitalize on their scoring opportunities. The goal was scored twenty seconds into the contest.

"The quick goal forced us to wake up real fast," Feyerherm said.

The Sho'Women responded, creating a lot of scoring opportunities for themselves during the first half, including four corners. Each time, they were able to get off a strong shot. However, they were unable to put in a rebound and come away with a goal.

The second half was dominated by the 8-3 Muhlenberg Mules, as they held on for the 1-0 victory.

"Despite our record, I think the players know we are a good team, and that we have a lot to feel good about this season," Feyerherm said. "I don't feel we have to make any type of dramatic changes, we have to just try and change the little things, and we can turn the losses into wins."

The Sho'Women's last game of the year, was at home this past Wednesday, against Catholic University.

Speaking on Monday, Coach Feyerherm said: "It definitely would be a very good thing for us to end the season with a win. It's always good to win the last game of the year, especially when its at home. It gives you something to carry over until next year, and build upon for the future."

Soccer Goes 2-1 For Week

Sophomore Cliff Howell has provided tough defense for Washington all year.

Paul Kenny

The Shoremen won two of three games in the last week to bring their overall record to 7-8-3 and 1-5-2 for the conference.

Last Tuesday the Shoremen had a 2-1 overtime victory over Widener University. The Shoremen got goals from Chris Castello and Andrew King with goalkeeper Greg Miller making eight saves.

Both teams matched evenly over the soccer field. However, the Shoremen outshot Widener 20-11 for the game indicating their overall offensive dominance.

Both teams were scoreless at the end of the first half. The Shoremen came out strong in the second half and Castello scored his first career goal for the Shoremen assisted off a superb cross by King.

The Shoremen dominated most of the play in the second half. However, Widner had some good shots on goal and eventually equalized with seven minutes left sending the game into extra-time.

King scored the winning goal for the Shoremen assisted off a corner kick by Tommy Helbler.

Next, the Shoremen faced Johns Hopkins University, losing 2-1 in a superb exhibition of soccer. Hopkins is a little more experienced than the Shoremen and came into the game with a four-game winning streak behind them.

Early in the first half the Shoremen were able to take the lead when Rory Conway knocked one home for the Shoremen assisted off a cross by Will Merriken.

The Shoremen remained in front until the Bluejays scored an equalizer early in the second half. With 20 minutes remaining the Bluejays scored the winning goal off a penalty kick.

Washington had some good scoring opportunities in the second half, notably Brian Rush who had a great turnaround shot which had beaten the goalkeeper but was slighly off target.

The Shoremen and Bluejay goalies recorded saves of four and three respectively. This was due to the strong defense played by both teams rather than a lack of offense.

In Washington's second to last game of the season against Delaware Valley on Tuesday, Jon Koystal returned for the Shoremen after recovering from an injury to play a key role.

The Shoremen won 2-1 getting goals from Conway and Koystal. Delaware controlled most of the play in the first half but was unable to score. Towards the end of the half Conway scored scored his seventh goal of the season, assisted by Koystal, which put the Shoremen up 1-0 at half-time.

Koystal scored the winning goal, his 8th of the season in the second half. Delaware scored their only goal after defensive sweeper Chris Hahn went out with an injury.

"I'm pleased with our performance over the last couple of games," head coach Todd Helbling said. "We've only given up a goal a game over our last ten games. However, we will have a real test this Saturday when we play Dickinson in our last game of the season."

Bluejays Win '93 World Series

N.F.L. Expansion Derby Deadline Extended To November 30

Last Saturday, the Toronto Bluejays defeated the Philadelphia Phillies in game six of the World Series to give Toronto its second consecutive championship.

Joe Carter dramatically ended the game on a homerun in the bottom of the ninth inning to give the Bluejays the victory.

It was only the second time in major league baseball history that the World Series has ended on a homerun. The last time it happened was 1960 when Pittsburgh's Bill Mazeroski hit one over the wall to defeat the New York Yankees.

In only the second World Series played outside of the United States, come-from-behind victories were the standard for the Bluejays as they defeated the Phillies 15-14 in game four.

In other news, the National Football League promised to award two new expansion franchises this week, but they only named one.

Charlotte, North Carolina will be the new home for professional football. Another franchise will be awarded on November 30.

Baltimore, St. Louis, Memphis, and Jacksonville are the other cities in contention.

Around the Nation

In N.F.L. action this week:

Atlanta defeated New Orleans 26-15 despite Wade Wilson's 277 yards passing for the Saints. Buffalo beat the Jets with Jim Kelly throwing for 224 yards and Boomer Esiason adding 187. Detroit barely beat the Rams, as Jason Hanson kicked a field goal with four seconds left to spoil T.J. Rubley's impressive debut as the Rams' quarterback.

Green Bay was victorious over Tampa Bay by a 37-14 score behind Brett Favre's 268 yards passing. San Francisco topped Phoenix despite Steve Beuerlein's 334 yards passing. The Oilers beat the Bengals to send Cincinatti to an 0-7 record.

Seattle's Rick Mirer beat the Patriots with 25 seconds left on a 11-yard pass to Brian Blades to make the score 10-9. Cleveland took first place in the A.F.C. Central division away from Pittsburgh when the Browns beat the Steelers 28-23 behind Eric Metcalf's two punt returns for touchdowns.

On Monday night, Jim Harbaugh's last drive ended with an interception, and Jim McMahon's Vikings held on to beat the Bears.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Placé to Unwind

NEWT'S CHESTERTOWN BAR

Jen, Jen, Bo-Ben, Banana, fana fo-fen, me, mi, mo-men, Jen! At the expressed request of our esteemed athletic director, Geoff Miller, the name game is back. Miller, who said he "really liked it" in last week's issue, is apparently a big fan of both names and games, and he just happened to like the combination.

Well, anyway, back to the business at hand...

This week's P.O.W. goes to volleyball's Jen Dixon. Dixon must have been starting to think we were snubbing her after all of those weeks passed without her receiving the coveted award. Well, Jen, we weren't snubbing you; we were just waiting for the proper moment for you to step up to the stage.

Of any of the athletes on campus, Dixon has perhaps been the most valuable to her team. She has been named to the Centennial Conference Honor Roll several times and was once a conference co-player of the week. Dixon, hailing from Glen Burnie, MD and Archbishop Spalding High School (by the way Jen, the best school in A.A. County is clearly Old Mill), was an All-MAC selection her freshman year, and her sophomore year statistics show that another all-conference year is probably on the way.

Honorable mentions this week go to Cindy Matalucci, Greg Miller and Jon Kostyal. Matalucci had the winning goal against Catholic. Miller was stellar in the soccer team's net once again, and Kostyal had a goal and an assist against Delaware Vally in his first game back since his injury.

We also take this time to honor those dedicated Washington athletes who are playing their last season this fall.

Rory Conway is playing his last year for the soccer team. Conway has seven goals this year.

On the field hockey team, Liz Olivere, Peggy Bowman, Maria Jerardi, and Renee Guckert all walked off the field for the last time on Wednesday. All four have been dedicated players for the Sho'women.

So goodbye and good luck y'all. Thanks for the memories guys...

Andrews to Leave in Spring

Popular Professor Ousted as Curricular Priorities Shift

Tex Andrews

This is a turbulent time here at Washington College. We've had external reviews and internal reviews, and it seems as if every policy or common practice has come under scrutiny. And there will be some major changes as a result. Some of these effects will not be felt by the students, but some most definitely will. For example, the changes in the Art Department will be felt, and will be felt as soon as Spring Semester '94. Specifically, Tex Andrews, long time professor of art, alumnus and director to fledgling art majors, is leaving.

The report of the external evaluation team that was on campus last year recommended that the department be expanded to four professors, two to teach studio art and two to teach art history. But in light of the financial problems that the College is faced with, that action has been postponed indefinitely. Instead, they recommended that the emphasis of the department be shifted from the studio to art history.

According to Andrews, the department has been requesting a second art history professor for years. He believes that such a change would be "beneficial to the College as a whole and to the Art Department." However, when considering the details, there is some question as to the effectiveness of the proposed change. Andrews wonders whether or not the recommendation will change the art history offerings much at all. Andrews stated that, to his knowledge, there are two possible areas in which the new professor will be teaching, either 20th century and contemporary

President Trout Affirms Accessibility to Faculty

Scott Koon

President Trout began the faculty meeting last Monday by addressing concerns that the administration did not communicate sufficiently with the Faculty. Trout said "I feel caught between a rock and a hard place. You don't want the administration taking up too much time at Faculty meetings. . ." Trout said that at the same time, he did not want his administration to be faulted for inadequate communication with faculty members. In a survey conducted as a part of the Middle States Self Study, about 60 percent of the Faculty felt the administration did not communicate effectively with the Faculty. "That really hurts," Trout said, "we're not trying to withhold things." Trout also expressed the hope that the steps he has taken to rectify this problem would prove to satisfy faculty concerns.

In a lengthy report to the assembled professors, Trout then outlined the steps he has been taking to improve the College's financial situation. Trout said he hopes to encourage the Board of Visitors and Governors to increase its beneficence by mobilizing its Development Committee. "Generally it's [the Development Committee] been a more passive body," he said, adding that he hoped committee members would "go out soliciting." Trout asserted that, with a few exceptions, Board members have not accompanied him on his fundraising visitations, and that he Smokeless Student Center?

With the Hodson renovation project nearing completion, the problem of adopting a smoking policy must be dealt with. The present policy, according to SGA president Jamie Baker, is that there will be no smoking in the dell, but smoking will be allowed in the large, multi-purpose room. But this tentative decision is subject to change. The SGA will decide this issue before the end of the semester, and the senators will, of course, be soliciting input from the student body.

The orchestration of the student center falls under the domain of the office of Student Activities. In an interview with the Elm, Dennis Berry stated that the new student center will be "one hundred percent managed, operated,

On Monday, October 25, the Executive and Finance Committees of the Board of Visitors and Governors met in joint session to receive a report from a group of independent auditors. The report concluded that the financial records of Washington College for the past year were in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles. In reporting briefly on that meeting the next day Dr. Gene Wubbels, Dean and Provost, said "I have seen the abyss, I walked to the edge of it and there is an abyss there." In order to find out more about what prompted the Provost to react in such a way, the Elm conducted interviews Tuesday, November 2, with Mr. Mike Macielag, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and Mr. Gene Hessey, Sr. Vice President for Finance.

According to Mr. Macielag, the deficit from FY 1992 (1991-92) was $771,000 and from FY 1993 was $522,000. " Macielag said "We have gotten out of equilibrium." Macielag said what the Board now expects from the administration is a plan of what to do over the next three years on how to get back to where expenses do not exceed revenue. This plan will be presented to the Trustees at their December 3 meeting.

Questioned about the financial models presented in the Preliminary Report of the Long Range Planning Committee, Mr. Macielag said that the Board seeks a "comprehensive plan, one that is fleshed out." In response to inquiries to the accuracy of the model in light of errors discovered by Dr. Gene Hamilton (see the Elm October 8), Macielag stated that "every financial model depends on assumptions, the farther you go out, the more difficult it is to predict accurately." He also pointed out that at an institution our size, small changes from projections can result in great fluctuations in our $21 million yearly budget. "we're not in dire straights by any means, we have an imbalance [of revenue and expenses]"

"Our basic problem is over the past four to five years, net tuition revenue has not gone up. Thus, the cash the college takes in has not increased while our expenses have," Macielag said. When asked about the feasibility

End of an Era

The decision to fire Tex Andrews is an ill-considered one. Tex has long been an outstanding instructor of Art at Washington College. Does he have his Ph.D.? No. Does that mean he is any less valuable to Washington College? Not by any means.

Tex Andrews is a practicing artist who is just beginning to come into his own. To exclude such a man from the Art Department is analogous to eliminating a clinical psychologist from the Psychology Department and instead hiring a specialist in the history of Psychology.

The decision to let Andrews go has broad implications which go far beyond the Art Department. If it can happen in the Art Department, it can happen anywhere. Any area of study which is not seen as "pulling its own weight" at the College may see one of its untenured faculty yanked away, in favor of hiring an Instructor in another field of study.

Who will replace Andrews in his role in the studio? Ph.D. candidates and grad students at nearby institutions, most likely. These part-time faculty will teach here for one or two years, at most, before departing for other institutions which value the practical aspect of artistic endeavor more highly.

Replacing Andrews with part-timers is, in effect, saying that Art History is now more important at Washington College than the actual creation of new artwork. This shift of emphasis from the practice of art to the history of art is highly ironic in light of the fact that more emphasis is being placed on publication and practical research at Washington College.

The decision to hire an art historian and fire Andrews is not a decision which should be handled by the Appointments and Tenure Committee alone. It has curricular implications as well. Andrews has nearly a decade of experience of teaching Studio Art classes at Washington College. He utilizes this experience to the utmost, holding up the examples of artwork provided by previous students to students currently enrolled in Art classes.

The decision to terminate Andrews is in violation of the spirit of the American Association of University Professors' Statement on Government of Colleges and Universities. The Statement is widely recognized and accepted in the field of higher education as a tool to clarify "the respective roles of governing boards, faculties and administrations." It emphasizes the need for consensus in decision making at colleges, and states "Such matters as major changes in the size or composition of the student body and the relative emphasis to be given to the various elements of the educational and research program [emphasis added] should involve participation of governing board, administration and faculty prior to final decision." Clearly, the question of whether a given course of study is taught by a full-time member of the faculty or a number of part-timers is a decision related to the "relative emphasis of various elements of the educational program," and as such needs to be examined in a formal way by the faculty and student body.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the dozens of students and staff who participated in last Saturday's Casey Time project.

A special thanks is owed to Jon O'Connor, Mark Reyero, and Max Walton for their efforts in organizing the project.

On the occasion of the dedication of the Casey Academic Center, Betty Casey asked the students of Washington College to remember her husband, Gene, and to give back to the College one day of service each year in his memory. The willingness of our community to embrace this vision is most appreciated.

Sincerely,
Charles H. Trout
President

To the Editor,

I want to write a note of support for the President on his recent decision to rescind a recent AOJ ruling. The case was a difficult one and was blurred by a number of factors. But the real issue is whether or not a college judicial system should 1) uphold the principle that education is the best course for habitation and rehabilitation, and 2) that a judiciary should operate with at least a minimum level of humanity. Unfortunately ours maintains neither.

In my opinion, our judicial process thoroughly abrogates the rights of students and faculty. This is why students and faculty at all levels refuse to use the system. Until today, I

WC Student Studies Abroad

Bonjour!! Greetings from France to all of the Washington College-ers out there in Chestertown, U.S.A. Allow me to introduce myself, my name is Lisa Brown and I am spending the 1993-1994 academic year, my junior year, abroad.

Washington College has had in the past (and still does) language assistant exchanges with the University of Paris Val-de-Marne (Paris 12). But in addition to the language assistant exchange, this is the first year for a student exchange between Paris 12 and WC, and the two guinea pigs are Christelle Dumont (from Paris 12 to WC—you've probably seen her around) and me (from WC to Paris 12).

Since I have already been over here for two months, there are two reasons for me writing this article now. The first is that I just started my classes on October 18, so to me it is still the beginning, and the second reason is that I received the first six Elms and the first Collegian yesterday, which made me feel in touch with the campus again. I just wanted to write a little about my experience so far, for anyone interested in a future junior-year-abroad program and for anyone else just wondering what I was up to (that latter group in small, I have a feeling, and there are some people who will realize that I am gone as they read this).

I could write a lot because so far I have really experienced, as well as the major differences, a lot of little things that make everyday life a new adventure. I will highlight a few examples that should paint a picture of some of the differences between Washington College life and my life(so far) here in the Paris banlieue.

As opposed to Chestertown, I live ten minutes by metro from Paris. Where I live (Cachan) is at least an hour commute each way to where I have classes (Creteil). It is not a possibility over here to roll out of bed at 8:25 a.m. and make it to Paris 12's version of Bill Smith by 8:31. And those little cat naps between 10:30 and the following 11:30 class? Out of the question, I'm afraid. Speaking of my classes, contrary to you over there who began on August 30, we just began classes on October 18 (which inevitably means that our second semester exams will be held during the last week of June). My room in Cachan is small—smaller than even the smallest room in West Hall—and then add in a bathtub, a sink, shelves, and a closet, to take up the space that the bed and I've known Nicole since last year and she is an easy-going person that likes just about everyone she meets. Always up for car trips to Taco Bell, Nicole is a ZTA and holds the Social Chair of her fraternal organization. In the Greek Games of 1993, she claims that she was the "true" Jello eating champion. As you can tell, Puddin' is a connoisseur of anything edible. She is also a Psychology major who has many different interests. Nicole (#8 for Cal Ripken) is a catcher for softball, and is the co-assistant director of entertainment with Jason Myers.

This 19 year old Gemini says that this is the Year of the Dolphin—the ones in Miami, she adds. Her favorite loves are David Bowie, Ecto-Cooler and Slimer, and she LOVES to play Caps with her ZTA sisters, especially her little sister, Kelly Eakin. Nyeernt!

Frank Tipler Presents a Humanistic Physics

Brian Matheson

My excitement last week on hearing that Frank Tipler was going to deduce the mass of a quark from the fact that human beings exist in the Universe met with some degree of skepticism among my friends. While it is true that of those of us who drove an hour to see the professor of Mathematics and Physics from Tulane University could easily have been confused with card carrying members of the nerd club (can we get SGA funding for that?), having perused his book when I was in high school, I could not pass up the opportunity to see him speak. Tipler's lecture Wednesday afternoon on the applications of the Anthropic Principle in modern Cosmology enjoyed an admirable turnout, considering the subject of the talk. I suspect that most of my readers are, by now, reading something else or demanding an explanation.

The most general assertion of the Anthropic Principle (AP) is that the world appears to us the way it does because if it didn't, or wouldn't be here. That is, if certain things were not true about our universe, then human life never would have evolved in the way it has. As we know that human beings have evolved in a certain way, we can limit the possible values of certain physical constants. This limitation reduces the number of possible worlds. This allows us to make certain predictions – some quite accurate, others very vague – about the things we will find in our world.

In his book The Anthropic Cosmological Principle, co-authored with John Barrow (and presently collecting dust in Miller Library), Tipler formulates several different versions of the AP. The Weak AP can be summarized by the assertion that the values of physical constants are restricted by the condition that they allow the possibility of sites where carbon-based life forms are able to, and have had time to, evolve (p.16). The Strong AP states that "The Universe must have those properties which allow life to develop within it at some stage in its history (p.21)." The Final AP states that once intelligent information-processing comes into existence it will never die out (p.23). These three formulations are presented (both here, and by Tipler) in order of increasing controversy – the WAP being undeniable, and the FAP being unverifiable.

The lecture itself focused on the use of the AP, in various forms, to predict the values of certain physical constants, and to forecast the end of the universe. Tipler began by using the Weak AP to successfully calculate the age of the universe (within a reasonable margin of error). He then went on to use the Final AP to predict that the universe must end (if it does, indeed, collapse in on itself) by shrinking to a single mathematical point. Interspersed throughout the lecture were deductions of the properties of various physical entities, and calculations of constants.

I would describe these calculations for you in detail, but they were simply impossible for me to follow in the context of his lecture. The good doctor's pace threatened to break Einstein's universal speed limit, c. While quite obscure, and a bit too specialized for this armchair physicist to comprehend, Tipler's lecture presented an interesting view of the cutting edge of theoretical cosmology.

The Anthropic Principle seems to be gaining respect among members of the scientific community. It inspires great interest among those who recognize the usefulness of teleological science. Although the idea

Freedom Riders in Chestertown

Walt Marschner

On Saturday, February 3rd, 1961, approximately 150 Freedom Riders protested against segregation in Chestertown and the nearby area. Seventy-two of them were from the New York area: New York University and Brooklyn College. Twenty were from Swarthmore, four from Yale, and the rest from Baltimore. The Riders were under the direction of Phillip Savage, Philadelphia Regional Director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Assisting in the project was the Baltimore Civic Interest Group directed by Clarence Logan.

All the Riders had received an instruction sheet which read:

"Ours is a non-violent peaceful movement. Therefore we request that you obey the following instructions whenever you demonstrate with us. We ask: 1. that you speak softly at all times; 2. that you enter and leave restaurants in a peaceful and orderly manner; 3. that you let your group leader do all the talking; 4. that you direct all questions which you are asked to your group leader; 5. that you obey the basic tenets of non-violence which requires that if you are cursed you will not curse back, and if hit you will not hit back. In brief, we ask that you be prepared to return love for hate, kindness for evil, and understanding for evil."

Each Freedom Rider was also given a copy of Section 577, Article 27, Annotated Code of Maryland. This reads in part:

"Any person or persons who shall enter upon or cross over the land. . . of any person or persons. . . may be committed or fined. . . more than a hundred dollars, and shall be committed to the jail. . . until such fines and costs are paid. . . It being the intention of this section only to prevent any wanton trespass upon the private land of others."

'Restaurant' is herein used to include not only the serving or dining room of any restaurant but also the entrance areas which are wholly on private property and in the control and possession of the restaurant management.

. . . it shall be necessary for the restaurant owner or manager to read the whole of section 577 above to the alleged trespasser. . . and direct the alleged trespasser. . . to leave the restaurant property. . . . If the alleged trespasser properly identifies himself, then the police officer shall refuse to arrest such person until after the restaurant owner or manager first obtains a warrant for such arrest. . . provided the owner or manager indicates his willingness to accompany the police officer and arrestee to the police station to prefer charges. . . ."

A plan of action listing all the establishments to be integrated had been prepared; the people were informed of how they should conduct themselves, and then they were sent to their respective places. Trouble was expected in two places.

This is the countdown for trouble. This is how your reporter experienced and witnessed the developments.

11:00 Two big Greyhound buses arrive at the Bethel A.M.E Church; nine or ten carloads of persons arrive at about the same time. People enter church.

11:30 Town is unusually full of people shopping as today is a major sale day. Police cars, each with four men, drive into town and drive out to the Armory.

11:45 Twenty-five police cars at Armory. Lom's has large sign outside, saying "OPEN." About 80 cars are parked near Bud's Restaurant, and a large crowd is standing outside, mostly [White-Ed.] men drinking beer. Many high school boys and even wives are present to witness "watch all the excitement."

12:00 Special duty local police are handling the traffic in Chestertown; 'No Parking' signs are placed around the police station, and police cars are patrolling all the streets, and are parked at the Tally Ho.

12:15 More police cars arrive, stop at the Tally Ho, move on throughout the town acquainting themselves with the location of potential trouble spots. Still no action by the Freedom Riders. More and more cars coming to town.

1:45 Thirty-nine police cars at the armory. Four police dogs and their handlers are standing by. Two o'clock is the hour for action. The crowd at Bud's is getting larger and drunker.

2:00 Freedom Riders are still not ready to leave.

2:30 Freedom Riders walk into town. One group goes to Lee's Restaurant, is refused admittance. Sets up picket lines outside. Another group goes to Stam's Pharmacy, and is served. Another group goes to the main street, High Street, and is refused service. Picketing begins in the main section of town, near Gus's Pool Hall. Eight police control the crowds of above one hundred. One out of every five picketers is Negro.

2:45 The crowd at Bud's is getting restless. Local newspaper station wagon arrives, drops tailgate, and their cameraman stands on the back of the wagon and gets ready to take pictures. Several people comment that most of the crowd is from Rock Hall, and are personal friends of Bud. One had a large police dog on a long leash. Police pass by every few minutes. No police are stationed on the spot. A few local Negroes watch developments.

2:50 Two police cars stop at Vita Foods. [Now the location of Dixon Valve and Coupling Company-Ed.]

2:55 Reporters from U.P.I., Baltimore Sun, Afro-American, television cameramen and others are prepared. The men hurl angry epithets at Negroes who pass by in cars and Negroes shout the same out in reply.

3:00 The Freedom Riders are coming! Walking down the street are a group of perhaps eighteen Freedom Riders. Two State Police are walking next to them. Some of the Freedom Riders are carrying signs. The leader, a small, mild-mannered looking fellow, carries extra signs. A crowd of town Negroes follow them as far as the top of the hill by Vita Foods, and then stop. About five of the Riders are Negro. One is the local Negro Minister's daughter, a nineteen year-old sophomore in college.

3:10 The lead policeman clears a path nearly to Bud's door. Bud comes out. He reads section 577, and tells the Negroes they must get off his property. A White attempts to butt the White leader of the procession. The policeman keeps him away. The crowd presses all around the Freedom Riders. All traffic is stopped in front of Bud's. The crowd swarms across the street.

3:15 The pickets turn around to leave. The policemen are at the head of the line, keeping the crowd from attacking the pickets. One tries to rip the signs from the hands of the last picket, who has been distributing them to the other pickets. Several White persons swing at a picket in the front of the line. Others begin shouting, and striking the pickets from behind. The foremost pickets break into a run, and begin to run the entire way back to Vita Foods, being hemmed by the mob the entire time. Still, only two policemen stand between the Freedom Riders and the mob, despite the fact that nearly a hundred policemen are in town.

3:20 Seven policemen run down the road from Vita Foods to Bud's Restaurant. The last of the pickets escape back to a growing group of angry Negroes near Vita Foods. Five White attackers are driven off by a large group of young town Negroes.

3:30 A crowd of over one hundred [White-Ed.] people gathers at the Tally Ho, but the Freedom Riders don't show up. Forty local Negroes stand across the street, and express their sympathy for the Freedom Riders.

3:35 The Freedom Riders who had been at Bud's return to the church. One is taken to the hospital with a cut nose. Several have been struck on the head and body but do not require attention.

Freedom Riders with police protection arrive in Centreville, and picket the two restaurants there. Two are Negroes and fourteen are White. They may only picket in twos, because the side walk is narrow. No local support is evident.

How to be an environmentalist in the 90's. This is a tough question. How do we turn a decade-long record of abuse to our planet? We can't. It can not be done, and this is the reality that we must confront. Within the continuum of history and human life, it is not possible for us to turn back the clock and rewrite all the wrongs we have done to each other or the Earth. Too much time and energy is spent on analyzing and talking about the past; it is important now to look towards the future. When I talk to people seeking reactions and suggestions for this column, a response often get is "oh, I'm not into environmentalist issues." This attitude is unrealistic. It is impossible, or at least very difficult, in our modern society to escape exposure to environmental issues. Our mass media jumps at opportunities to make us aware of our social, ecological and political responsibilities. Large campaigns are directed toward consumers with products competing about who is more environmentally safe than who. Even in the movie industry we can see the effect of environmental consciousness. Even children cannot escape from the effort to "save our earth," as they come out with books written for younger people and fun experiments and stuff to do, even movies like "Fern Gully" (Disney). A lot has changed already since I was a child (shh.. the good old days). I remember once seeing the process of recycling described on one of those educational shows for kids and thinking that was a really neat ideal. In our time it is impossible for children to be unaware of these possibilities.

Being concerned with environmental issues does not mean rushing out and joining Greenpeace. If that is your path, then more power to you, but it can mean something as simple as walking an extra 4 feet to throw a can in the recycling bin instead of the trash. There are many little things one can do to help: Walking places instead of driving your car, disposing properly of your trash, not wasting water, not using aerosol products, using cleaning products without damaging chemical agents. In the long range all or most of the things that we can do to help our Earth are also beneficial to us as individuals because we are natural creatures and part of the Earth. Walking never hurt anyone, unless you're going to DC or something, carpools are convenient and save you money also on the car, and although some environ-friendly products can be more expensive a lot of the chemicals in a lot of the alternatives can be harmful to you.

Being an environmentalist in the 90's simply means awareness and action. Hark! There's hope yet! (I desk do not already occupy. Personally, I have decided that I prefer the tiny single with a private bath to the crowded shared room (with no offense directed toward Karla or ADW).

Some other differences? How about before I turned twenty-one in the end of October, I could go into any bar anywhere and order anything that I wanted provided of course my language skills were accurate enough to ask for a drink), with no looks of suspicion or a barrage of ID from a bartender as to my age. Because of you who do not know me, I am petite, and look maybe about sixteen or seventeen. So to go into a bar and not be hassled is a pretty nice thing. I have gotten some weird looks when I try to ask for a drink, not because I look young but because they cannot figure out what the heck I am saying!

Those are just some of the different-ness tip of the iceberg—of what I have seen so far. Not bad or good, just different. I want to say that I am pretty happy here and that my French has already improved by leaps and bounds. I have made friends from all over the world, and I enjoy exploring and living the differences in lifestyles. I do miss the close campus atmosphere of a small college which is one of the reasons that I chose Washington College in the first place, but I know that over here I am learning and experiencing things that Chestertown cannot teach me.

New Weekly Synopsis: The WC campus is having a contest to determine who should be Mark Murphy's Queen and co-ruler of Washington College. Also, last week the author synopsised everything that's happened in Blub so far. If you missed it and are mystified, but intrigued, by "Blub"—a-column-so-deep-that-if-it-had-hair-it-would-be-dyed-black, then run, run, run to the Miller Library—there should be a copy or two there left over from Tuesday.

It is 10:00 pm Friday night. Night has fallen on the Washington College Campus. All of the Washington College students/aquatic sea creatures are asleep, as is usual for Washington College students to be on weekend evenings. The gentle sound of fishes snoring fills the campus.

Suddenly, there is a little muffled cry. "Ag!" says JAMES BAKER (a Great Tunnie) as a GIGANTIC BLUE WHALE SWALLOWS HIM WHOLE. "Eel" says MAX WALTON (a pompano) as the GIGANTIC BLUE WHALE SWALLOWS HIM WHOLE ALSO. "Yarg!" says SONJA WILSON (a pink salmon) as the GIGANTIC BLUE WHALE SLURPS HER UP TOO "No..." says MEGAN WARD, a amber-fish and the last member of the student government executive board so SHE TOO IS CONSUMED BY THE GIGANTIC BLUE WHALE. The Gigantic Blue Whale proceeds to eat the entire student government, while the rest of the campus sleeps. MARK MURPHY sleeps soundliest of all, dreaming of who might become his queen. "Who...Who...?" he mutters in his sleep. "Who will be my queen? Perhaps it will be DR. WOLFF... or NANCY TOY...Who...Who?" The Gigantic Blue Whale swallows Mark Murphy, says "Blub," and swims away. Red Tape Morality

"If this thing's been held every year for the last fifty years, why was there so much outcry about it being a problem?"

Good question. The Lit House Halloween Party — excuse me, annual Halloween Party — went off without a hitch. There were no fights, no broken chairs or even broken bottles, no ears bitten off, no rapes, no fires, nothing bad at all. If there had been a problem, Lenny Thompson stopped by twice, at 9 p.m. and near 1 a.m., and he didn't have any problems to stop either time.

The quote at the beginning of the article is from Director of Campus Activities and Recreation, Dennis Berry. I apologize if your comments the other day were meant strictly off the record.

It's true that we didn't move on the

J. Tarin Towers

we had no less than eight rather large guys who volunteered to be on-call bouncers.

A rough count taken at the door showed about 150 people in attendance between 9:30 a.m. and 2 a.m. Alumnus Arvie Wrang, who does work as a professional DJ for parties, weddings and the like, volunteered his service as DJ in exchange for gas money. There was much rejoicing — in the form of dancing the night away in costumes ranging from your average cats and gypsies to a suppository and Mucous Man.

It was a good party, and, just as the past three Halloweens have shown, it was not a party Security had to worry about. We even shut it down ourselves with no assistance from Security. I had it clean by 4 a.m. for a reception the next morning at 10.

Why, then, was there such a big stink about registering it?

Apparently there were so many parties this weekend that Security wanted extra help. But paperwork until a couple of days before the event. The rules do say that it has to be a week before. But the rules also say "no kegs in residence halls," and if you want to go by the letter, then kegs should be legal in buildings like the Lit House. But that doesn't fly either.

If you're not going by the letter anyway, and a group tries to register an event which has happened every year in recent memory with negligible problems, then why not let it happen? Especially when it's made perfectly clear that it is not an all-campus event, that there is an intricate network of internal security established by the students, and that the Lit House, a 24-hour front room for a large number of students, is not a building that anyone is going to be allowed to trash.

Yet Security, for some reason, didn't want to let this party happen. It's odd, considering that the Lit House and the people in it usually have a pretty good working relationship with Security as a whole.

First they thought it was scheduled for Friday, and we told them it was on Saturday night instead. Yet up until the last big of wangling between Student Affairs and Security, they seemed to think it was scheduled for Friday.

Then there was the business of the monitors. They thought that for such a large event, monitors should be present to make sure underage people didn't drink. Hmm... last time I checked, "BYOB" meant that the liability for underage drinking is taken off of the organizers of the event.

And, as I've said before, the idea that "invitation only" did not equal "all-campus" never seemed to sink in, and neither did "two people working the door each hour" or "eight bouncers."

What ended up happening was that Security told us they didn't want to have this party happen, and that therefore they would not sign the registration form. We could, however, go to Dennis Berry and beg his approval.

We naively did as decided to meet at 12:30 and talk to him. However, he wasn't going to be in at 12:30, and he told me that, should the party be busted, we'd be sent to Dean McIntire for disciplining anyway, so we should try to get her approval, and then he'd approve it.

As the knot of red tape grew ever-larger, we wondered how anything got done on this campus, if three different offices have to consult each other over a simple party.

of the projections for growth presented in the Preliminary Report, Macielag stated "I don't believe we have any choice but to grow. Economies of scale can only be taken advantage of if we have more students. . . . We have been gradually growing, we need to keep doing that. . . . The good news is that growth doesn't have to [be a lot of students] to have results. Small differences result in a great impact. Ten to twenty more students (FTE) every year would have a huge impact."

On the process of submission of the potential solution to our budget woes, Macielag explained that the Long Range Planning Committee's work ought to be done in six to nine months. "Everybody needs to be involved in the process, which is ongoing." Regarding the roles played by the LRPC, the administration and the Board, he said "it is primarily the administration's job to pull together the information, to synthesize the vision and offer direction. Then it is the Board's job to evaluate [the plan] to see if it's realistic, makes sense and is sound. . . . We will look at the plan, ask tough questions and approve the final document."

Regarding the specific proposals contained within the LRPC's Preliminary Report, Macielag states "As far as the model or what it tells you, you can quibble about assumptions – I'm sure it will get improved. Regardless of that stuff, it is clear to me that the only way out of this problem is to grow net tuition revenue. The only way to do that is to bring in more students. We can't stand still." However, on the issue of whether to grow to 1150 FTE or 950 FTE, Macielag felt the first goal was to grow to capacity. "It's not like we're leaping off a cliff and can't change course. . . .the idea that you develop a plan and stop, with the plan in place [not to be changed after adoption] is erroneous."

"There are all sorts of scenarios, but growing from where we are now to capacity is really going to be the same. There shouldn't be deviation until capacity is reached. I would rather focus on the short end of the plan, growth to capacity."

On the subject of endowment, Macielag commented "the biggest single impact you can have in the future of Washington College is to grow endowment. This will make WC financially impregnable. If you really think about Washington College 100 years from now, focus on the endowment. Endowment money is the hardest to raise, but will have the largest impact." Mr. Macielag feels "there is a proper focus on it. The President and the Board in addition to steps already taken to rectify the problem, the Elm would soon be seeking an increase in the student fee which funds the Elm. It was decided that Mr. Hessey be given a standing position on the Board of Publications.

Dr. Scout of the Honors Committee announced the approval of five honors courses for the spring semester, and said the committee would be examining ways to strengthen the honors program at Washington College.

Dr. Cades of the Faculty Finance Committee addressed budgetary concerns. He said that there needs to be better coordination between his committee and the Board on this issue, adding that "I've asked Mr. Hessey to schedule a joint meeting with the Board's Finance Committee as a first step towards next year's budget."

Dr. Dickson then spoke as the representative of the six faculty members of the Long Range Planning Committee. He said that this group had written a preliminary revision of pages 30-39 and pages 55-71 of the Preliminary Report of the Long Range Planning Committee. Dickson also said "We see guidance from you as are committed to this."

The Board expects a plan from the administration to handle the continuing deficits the college is running at its December 3 meeting. In anticipation of this plan Mr. Macielag is confident that Washington College has "an outstanding chief financial officer in Mr. Gene Hessey. He's first rate."

In an interview with Mr. Hessey following the Board meeting, the Elm inquired as to the current financial situation facing Washington College. "We have now run out of surplus of current revenue [and are unable to cover the FY 1993 deficit of $522,000 with such funds]. . . . We are looking at tapping funds functioning as endowment to cover this." Hessey says The Board is saying that they want assurance of reversing the trend of having excess cost over revenue. They want a balance." Hessey feels that the key to achieving this is essential," and that there would be a faculty assembly to address these revisions on the tenth of November at 7:30 p.m. in the Sophie Kerr room of Miller Library. In the concluding minutes of the meeting, President Trout thanked Dickson and his five colleagues on the committee for their efforts in drafting the revisions. Ω and programmed by the students." Berry stated that other concerns of completing construction have pushed the issues of policy to the "back of our minds."

In the days of the old CoffeeHouse, there had been many complaints about smoke, which have been taken to heart in the renovation plans. The new CoffeeHouse will feature more open space, as well as windows to provide ventilation.

Given the present discontent with the social situation on campus, and the hopes that the completion of the Hodson renovation will improve that situation, this should be an important issue with the students. Talk to your dorm senators. The SGA is your voice to the administration, take advantage of that voice, express your opinion. Ω hopes to change this situation. He also stated that "The Board will be actively involved in soliciting their fellow Board members."

Trout cited the decision to retain the Communicorps marketing firm and the additional staff member to work with both the Admissions and Financial Aid departments as an example of the Board's willingness to invest in the College's future. But he also anticipated difficulties: "Some of the spirit of Wye — which I use to refer to our September board meeting — some of that had certainly gone out the door in light of our projected deficit of over $500,000, [for the 1993-94 academic year.]" He remains hopeful, however, that "The Long Range Plan provides a way of emerging from this wilderness."

Trout then anecdotally explained how the College's small size is an impediment to solicitation of institutional donors. Trout said that the Mellon Foundation had expressed an interest in the College, but later decided not to donate because the College has a student body smaller than 1000. He said "That's not the first time I've gotten this sort of response." He also said that various institutions would become more interested in donating if the Long Range Plan is approved by the Board.

Trout then handed the floor over to Registrar Dr. Jack Hamilton, who explained the new computerized registration procedure. "With any luck, we'll wind up with no need for arena registration," Hamilton said.

The meeting then turned over to reports from committee chairs. Dean Wubbels of Academic Council said that body has "decided to begin to study the question of independent study," adding that a questionnaire on the subject would soon be distributed to department chairs.

Dr. Striner of the Board of Publications affirmed the need for a standing position on that committee for Gene Hessey, the Senior Vice President for Budget and Finance. He said this move is necessary "because there have been problems in the financial management of the Elm." Elm Editor Scott Koon acknowledged these difficulties, and said that, enrollment. A number of assumptions about this year's revenue were lower than expected: gift income, FTE enrollment estimates, and additions to and interest derived from endowment.

Regarding the projections presented in the Preliminary Report of the LRPC, Hessey said the Long Range Plan attempt to demonstrate in financial modeling what effect an increase in net tuition revenue would really be. It must necessarily make assumptions about this." The Elm questioned Hessey about the errors in the models presented by Dr. Gene Hamilton to the LRPC. "Dr. Hamilton has identified flaws in the assumptions and calculation errors. We're adjusting [the models] to reflect those. . . . The first five years are the crucial post [to pass], after that we keep monitoring and update the plan to reflect changes." Ω

Fellowships

The James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation, a federally endowed program designed to strengthen instruction about the Constitution in the nation's schools, will award generous fellowships in 1994 for masters-level graduate study of the framing and history of the U. S. Constitution. College seniors and graduates who intend to become secondary school teacher of American history, American government, and social studies are eligible for awards.

Through nationwide competition, James Madison Fellowships will be awarded to at least one legal resident of each state, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the other U. S. territories. After completing study under a fellowship, James Madison Fellows are required to teach American history, American government, or social studies in a secondary school for a minimum of one year for each year of graduate assistance they receive.

art or 19th and 20th century art. Both of these areas are already covered by the current curriculum. Areas not covered extensively include Greek, Roman, Egyptian, Mesopotamian or early A.D. art, none of which will be covered under either possibility. In addition to this, Andrews says that the recent evaluations do not offer "any clear justification," for this particular change. "Where is the back up? It's like writing a term paper and not having a bibliography or footnotes," Andrews said.

Tex Andrews will not argue with the decision to increase the number of art history professors by one. "But robbing Peter to pay Paul? That is an interesting question." His post is not a tenure track position: "However, de facto, there is a full time position in the studio," Andrews said. Due to this change, studio courses that can't be covered by Tessem will have to be taught by "part-time, adjunct professors." The recommended changes will not effect the catalog offerings, only the people teaching those courses. Part of Andrews' disappointment with the recommendation of the review committee is that it is "a realistic appraisal, but a cynical appraisal." It is true that any number of people can be found to fill a part time post, but what Andrews calls this the "dirty little secret of academia." Nationally, more and more positions are being filled by part-time employees who receive no benefits and can be let go at any time.

In addition to this, the decision to implement these changes have come not from the faculty or even the administration as a whole, but rather from the Appointments and Tenure Committee. As of this date the department "has had little input," says Andrews, "very, very little." The head of the Art Department, Susan Tessem, was given less then five days to respond to a report that was five months in the making. Andrews feels that there are "serious procedural questions" that must be dealt with, not only concerning the Appointments and Tenure Committee, but also the external evaluations as well.

The student body has also had no input concerning the changes in the Art Department, and many are not pleased. Andrews has long been a favorite of art majors, as a professor and mentor. Ω Tarin Towers, a senior majoring in English and Art, is very upset by Andrews' leaving. "I think the way the administration handled it was completely unprofessional. I was under the impression that the evaluations were not handed down from Mount Sinai. Tex's post in the faculty was just finalized last spring and now they're taking it away. The administration seems to be acting like a conceptual art piece: a lot of talk and planning but nothing actually has to get done."

Andrew Stone, also a senior art major, said "I personally feel that Tex Andrews is a direct influence upon my major field of study. I don't see why the administration feels the need to disregard the studio art major." There is also outrage among the underclassmen who find themselves about to lose their "cheerleader," as Becky Bryant, a junior art major, calls Andrews. "As a freshman I was undecided between art and English, and because of Andrews' enthusiastic teaching I chose art. Tex opened my eyes to art theory and contemporary art. He is always available for guidance and support both in and out of class. Tex is a working artist and is very schooled in contemporary art. It seems strange to me that the College would let go one of its own. What does it say when the College fires alumni?" Towers ended her commentary on the situation with a very powerful message, "Many of us wouldn't be art majors if it weren't for Tex Andrews. He has profoundly influenced my life and my future. If I were an undergraduate, I would transfer."

Trout Discusses Fundraising

Elm Interviews President on his Efforts to Boost Endowment

Scott Koon

Last Monday, President Trout reported to the Faculty on his activities in soliciting donors on behalf of the College. In a follow-up interview, Trout outlined his activities in this area to the Elm.

Elm: What have been your priorities in raising money for the College this year?

Trout: The Preliminary Report of the Long Range Planning Committee has been very valuable to me as I go on the road. There's no question it has helped identify those things most in need of external support. In addition, it's clear that foundations respond well to colleges that have a clear sense of their futures.

Elm: What impact has this year's budget deficit at the College had upon your efforts?

Trout: If we are going to need to draw from funds functioning as endowment to cover this year's estimated deficit of $500,000, then the zeal [of the Board] to draw further [from these funds] to make investments is understandably less intense. This is not to say that the Board is not willing to support some items from our prioritized wish list. These include the new retaining a marketing consulting firm to help sharpen our image and improve admissions publications, adding a position in Student Aid and Admissions, and bringing another person on board to bolster Development. Moreover, the Board has encouraged us to tap plant reserves to take care of maintenance projects, the Hodson Hall roof, new dimmers for the theatre, lighting for Minta Martin, and external painting.

Elm: You remarked on Preliminary Report of the Long Range Planning Committee at the Faculty meeting on Monday. Would you care to elaborate?

Trout: I was glad to have something to say about the Preliminary Report of the Long Range Planning Committee and the way foundations regard it. We've got to get on with this thing.

Elm: What about your efforts to solicit institutional donors?

Trout: We got a wonderful grant from the Arthur Vining Davis Foundation in Jacksonville, Florida. They completed a pledge of $125,000, which matches money from the Christian A. Johnson Endeavor Foundation. This $250,000 endowment secures forever our junior faculty leave program, and we hope that these same donors will contribute to this fund again in subsequent years. When donors ask what's happening at Washington College, I often talk about the diversity initiative. The Hodson Foundation is creating a new endowment to support minority scholarships in addition to the $700,000 for the merit scholarship endowment. In addition, they have given $50,000, fully spendable, to support what we're already doing in minority scholarships. Ω

Donald Justice and William Bowie Come to Washington College

Donald Justice, a Pulitzer Prize winning poet, and William "Chappie" Bowie, winner of the 1992 Arkansas Poetry Award in Poetry by Justice, will appear together on Friday, November 5th, at Washington College in Chestertown to read from their work.

The poetry reading will begin at 4 p.m. in Norman James Theater, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

Justice, who has published several volumes of poetry, was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for his Selected Poem (1979) and was co-winner of the 1991 Bollingen Prize for lifetime achievement. The author also of a book of prose, a libretto, and four collections, he is professor of English at the University of Florida in Gainesville.

Bowie, the 1975 winner of Washington College's Sophie Kerr Prize, is the author of The Conservator's Song, a book of poems that won the Arkansas Poetry Award. Bowie's poems have appeared in magazines and periodicals through the years, and his poetry has earned him the Kenneth Patchen Award and the Christopher McKean Award for Poetry.

Bowie operates a publication production business in Baltimore and serves on the editorial board of the Literary House Press at Washington College.

The reading is co-sponsored by Washington College's Sophie Kerr Committee and the Alumni Office. Ω

Mayoral Candidate Interviews Continued

Scott Koon

In last week's ELM, mayoral candidates Vito Tinelli and Margo Bailey were interviewed by this reporter. What follows is the rest of the Bailey interview, and the Proctor interview in its entirity.

Elm: Do you think that, being in the position that you are, having a spouse who's a faculty member at Washington College, you would be in any way able to better utilize the students as a source of volunteers?

Bailey: I would hope so. Three years ago I was cochairman for building the playground, I spoke to the SGA, and talked to the head of the Athletic Department. I think it's important fro the college students to get involved with the community since they're a part of it, and we need their strengths, since they're younger and stronger. Whether it's an advantage for being a professor's wife, I don't know. My advantage is that I'll make a telephone call to anybody, and say 'well, who do I talk to about this?' I think the College is a very untapped resource, the students are bright, energetic people, and if they want to get involved, this is a great way to start.

Elm: What about the students living in town, the dual role they play as students and constituents? What about the roots of the College in the community, do you think that's something which is underemphasized currently?

Bailey: I think I'd like to see a stronger commitment on both sides to the town. Getting a student representative to the council to find out what's going on-the decisions made there affect the College, one way or another, and their lifestyle. I think there's been too much of a separation, I'd like to see them work together a little better. If you stay apart, it becomes adversarial, rather than just solving problems.

Elm: Are there any other issues or questions which you think are important?

Bailey: To me, the whole issue of drugs which you see talked about now in the paper. There does seem to be a drug problem in this town. We need a better way to solve it, we don't seem to be making inroads. I'd like the town to take more active role in getting areas cleaned up, we have some buildings now which are empty which become a lure to people who are dealing.

Elm: What got me started interviewing the mayoral candidates was something Tinelli said about having doptive families for students who live off-campus-are you familiar with that at all?

Proctor: Did Tinelli say it, or did Margo Bailey say it?

Elm: It was Tinelli's proposal, Bailey thinks it's a not a feasible idea, actually, it wasn't Tinelli's idea, but he was bandying it about publicly, and now at this point says it's not a campaign issue, just something he considered.

Proctor: That's my position that I will put on both of my opponents is that I feel that they tend to waffle on all issues as to how they may see it politically advantageous to their situation at the moment. I think that that is a poor characteristic of anyone who I would even consider remotely being a representative of me on my behalf, or anyone else.

Elm: I talked to someone today who said that, although your opponents are more politically experienced in terms of town council, that he felt that you were more in touch with the mood of the town.

Proctor: I would like to think that too, as far as being in touch with the mood of the town. While political experience may be seen as being lacking in one form or another, my introduction is 'thank God for that.'

Elm: That brings us to another question, and I don't mean to be personal, but no one I've talked to seems to know what you do for a living. I know that the business are you in-you obviously live quite well.

Proctor: Thankfully. Yeah, well, fortunately, the Lord has been very good to me, although he has recently chastised me-which he has a right to do, and I accept it, and appreciate it because I've learned a great deal from it. But what do I do for a living, what have I done for a living, I think it was quoted in the paper that I was a project manager for a construction company, a national construction company. I've been a project manager, a superintendent. I do own some of my own businesses. I've been a consultant to the State Department, the FBI, I've done work for the District of Columbia on a consultant basis, for the VA, in construction analysis, and so on and so forth. I have built apartments, high rises, shopping centers, multimillion dollar homes, small town houses, I built a log cabin for myself on my farm in Minnesota. I am currently the vice-president of about two or three companies, which I own in conjunction with my brother and some friends of mine, and instead of calling myself the president I call myself the vice-president. And those businesses vary, like I said I do and have done a lot of construction managerial work and or consulting work, O.K? For U.S. embassies throughout the world, for the State Department, and one of the things we have done and are doing is building a sailboat which my brother and I designed, and we own the company.

Elm: It's safe to say that you're self-employed.

Proctor: Yes, I am self-employed.

Elm: Do you think that gives you enough time for the position?

Proctor: Certainly, I think so. I have on occasion worked for Core Production Services, which is a local company here, just doing menial tasks, and that's only been a part-time type thing. Like I said earnestly, to be frank and blunt, my financial situation is not what it used to be. That is on one level. It matters not whether I can be mayor or not and whether I would have time to do the duties and tasks. One of the things I hope I've learned in life is that an individual person, whoever he or she may be, needs to learn who they are, what they are, and what they can and cannot do. What are their capabilities, what are their expertise. And when you understand that, and then can understand others, then you know what you're best at doing, and you know what responsibilities to delegate to others, because they can do it either more expedientaly than you or better than you as far as the fine points in whatever it might be. And I hope and believe that my experience in life has taught me to understand where I can give and where I can't give and what I need to do. To answer that I think that I can, and do have the time to be mayor, and if it would require me to dissolve or rid myself of some other burden, be it business or whatever, that maybe will sell a company or discontinue the company, or whatever is necessary to give me the time that I would find required. The position of mayor as I see it, however it is used or could be misused, requires as I see it a certain amount of respect and admiration for what is required to do the job-not that it is impossible for anyone to do, it's just that you have certain tasks to do, you need to realize what those tasks are and then you need to do those tasks.

Elm: What about town-gown relations.

Proctor: What about what?

Elm: Town-gown relations-Proctor: Town?

Elm: Gown.

Proctor: Gown?

Elm: Town-gown. um. . .

Proctor: I don't understand what you're saying.

Elm: Generally, I mean, you know how they wear those caps and gowns at graduation-

Proctor: Oh, oh, oh, oh. The relationship between the town and the College?

Elm: Right. A lot of people seem to feel that off-campus students particularly cause a lot of noise-related problems for their neighbors. What's your take on that-do you feel that the College is a resource?

Proctor: Here's my position, I think that this applies a lot of things. I believe that one, every person, I don't care who they are, whether they're a five-year-old child, or a ninety-five year-old man, whomever is responsible for his or her own actions. And you cannot group together, necessarily, an individual or individuals and pass that blame to others for one person's actions. If there is one a student that happens to be rowdy in a town, in an apartment or wherever it might be, if he is rowdy to have caused a disturbance that people are finding objectionable, then those people who find it objectionable should call the police, and the police should come and arrest him, and that person should be tried, and, if found guilty, convicted of is, then he should serve the just, due punishment. That's one thing. And if we find one, two or twenty students being rowdy about town, we should say that all students are bad. I went to school, I know that as a young person, I was feeling and thinking if you can use those expressions-it doesn't justify it, by any means, it might explain it, and I am glad, and I hope I learned, that I don't need to be rowdy next to my neighbors. I want to have a good time just like the next man. But when my good time becomes detrimental to the next man, it is no longer a good time. And life is black and white, it is only in the hearts and minds of men that we find shades of gray. So there is a line, and if you cross over it, I'm sorry. You have to be responsible. that is part of becoming and being either a man or a woman. I think that a five year old child that's acts up in a grocery store, their parent is responsible for that child, and that parent is the one who should be punished, as much as the child. For if he or she has failed to discipline that child, or whatever the situation might be and that's what you've got to get into, there could be a thousand situations of why this and why that, you know, and that's why you have courts and juries to decide and, hopefully, the grace of God.

Elm: Given that, then, I posed a question to both Tinelli and Bailey, and I pose it to you as well, there's a lot of volunteer activities that go on at the College in conjunction with the town, such as the target tutoring program. What do you think could be done better for city hall to utilize that volunteer spirit which exists for civic projects?

Proctor: There's really probably a lot of things that could be done. While the College can be a vast resource, I do not wish to enforce anybody to be a volunteer, because they no longer become a volunteer. Those people that do seek to help others, and by like you said may have students in there who a desire to be a teacher, so it serves a twofold purpose. In educating students in elementary or junior high or high school, it serves as an opportunity for someone to be a teacher, to help them learn to teach, to understand from firsthand experience what kind of situations you may come across, and the town can certainly cooperate in cooperation with county education for the schools and whatnot, or maybe a daycare center, whether the care be for children, the mentally retarded, aged adults in retirement homes or at least pass on knowledge. And that certainly can be explored and expounded, if you will have it. And that's just one example. There may be many more, whether it's helping the financially deprived, at lesser odds or those who don't have clothing or food or whatever I don't know, whatever the situation may be. I will state that I believe people must first learn to do things for themselves, before they can even help another. You can continually give, and continually give and continually give to someone, and that person may then therefore become dependant upon you, and not learn any self-responsibility. Therefore you have not helped that person, you have hurt that person. You must learn the difference, and there is a black and white difference, and it varies from individual to individual. Ω

The upcoming elections of 13 December mark the first contested mayoral race in many years. The ELM encourages the entire College community to get out and vote. Ω

Concern about MSSS Surveys

Drafts of Faculty and Academic Support Chapters Presented

John K. Phoebus

Dunning Lecture Hall was once again host to an open forum for the College Community regarding the Middle States Self Study (MSSS). On the agenda for the day were drafts of the Faculty Chapter and Academic Support Chapters of the report which will be given to Middle States. In attendance were approximately 30 faculty members. The floor was open both to suggestions and minor corrections. As Dr. Steven Cades put it, "the more eyeballs, the fewer mistakes, and the better we look to Middle States]"

The MSSS process involved the formation of task forces which empirically and analytically studied certain aspects of WC. The reports of various task forces have been synthesized into the several chapter drafts. The two chapters presented in the open forum were the drafts. The purpose of the meeting was to receive comment on these drafts. While many comments elicited from faculty were typographical and grammatical in nature, a few serious points of contention came up. Most of these comments dealt with either one of the representation of certain aspects of the college in the draft of the Faculty Chapter

The major points brought up concerning the Faculty Chapter were:

- the history of revisions to faculty evaluation forms.
- in survey responses to equity in the faculty was felt to not indicate, due to the lack of a gender breakdown in statistics, that men might feel women are treated with equality, while women could disagree.
- references to minorities in the sections regarding goals of hiring professors from minority groups.
- the lack of inclusion of Physical Education and library professors in statistical references to the entire faculty (of which they are a part.)

President Trout generally felt the Task Force was "getting a collection of feelings from the faculty, not an overreaching view. . . . On the matter of communication for instance, would you say it's better now than in the 80's, or not? This view is pretty dreary, pretty awful. I'm not sure that's true. . . . The questionnaires were filled out long before the Long Range Planning Committee was formed." Trout felt that this dated some of the empirical results from the survey. He specifically mentioned the 60% of the faculty who felt WC was not doing much planning and wondered whether this was still the case in light of recent efforts to increase planning.

An interesting point of contention arose regarding the reporting of President Trout saying that scholarship was a factor in consideration for salary increases." This point included in the draft was derived from personal correspondence between Trout and Dr. Rosemary Ford, a task-force chair. President Trout at the meeting felt more comfortable phrasing that such activity is "a consideration, not the consideration." Dr. Cades stated that he must check that against the source. Another faculty member subsequently cited a specific source which corroborated this statement, rather than leasing the authenticity of the quote on personal correspondence. Dean Wubbels came to Trout's defense, stating: "it would be accurate to say that [Trout] has included scholarly research [as a component affecting] salary increases.

In response Cades stated that this issue is "one the Task Force is going to have to look at. One of the jobs of the Middle States Self Study is to report the status of life at Washington College and evaluate it. At that level, Chairs make sure to represent things as they are, not as we wish. If evidence shows "the" exists, instead of "a", this will stand. Otherwise [it would be] an editorial change by the chairs of the Task Force. . . If the Task Force found itself confronted with two [conflicting] sources of a criteria [for salary increases], it would face a dilemma. . . . [This is] either no problem, or a serious problem."

The faculty proceeded to discuss the issue of quantifying teaching ability as a criteria for salary increases, generally feeling as Christine Pabon put it, teaching is an art. President Trout agreed the "process is more art than science. Specifying [of criteria] is something the Task Force might want to reconsider."

After discussion of the Faculty Chapter, Dean Sansing opened the Academic Support Chapter for comments. The only substantial discussion surrounded a proposal to give computers to incoming students. As this idea is merely in its formative stages, it was thought to be inappropriate to include mention of it until approved and discussed by appropriate institutions at the college. Sansing commented that "the performance of support services has really been adequate; [it is] just budget cuts which have affected it." Trout expressed his satisfaction with the draft of this chapter: "it's in good shape. I commend those responsible." Ω

Physicist to Speak

Dr. Ronald Mickens, theoretical physicist and Callaway Professor of Physics at Clark Atlanta University, will be conducting a lecture on 7:30 p.m., Thursday, 11 November, at the Dunning Lecture Hall.

Dr. Mickens' lecture is entitled "Bouchet and Imes: The First Black Physicists." Bouchet, (1852-1918), became the first Black scholar to earn a Ph.D. from an American when he was awarded his Ph.D. in physics from Yale in 1876. Bought distinguished himself in his long career as a college professor and administrator.

Imes, (1883-1941), received his doctorate in physics from the University of Michigan in 1916. In addition to his work as an instructor, Dr. Imes did groundbreaking research, using spectral analysis to examine the rotation-vibration spectra of gases.

Dr. Mickens received his undergraduate degree from Fisk University, the very same institution where Imes taught from 1930-1941. He is currently researching non-linear, single-oscillator systems, non-linear difference and differential equations, and the modeling of the electromagnetic form factors of the nucleon. Ω

Trout Hesitates

Committee on Gays not given Mission

Rachael Fink

Last year there was much fervor created by the Gay and Lesbian Task Force, yet after the report was issued little else was heard about any of the issues connected with it. Very soon that will change. President Charles H. Trout, following a single recommendation given in the Task Force report, has established a committee, the "I hesitate to call it a committee" committee as he termed it in the letter to the president of GALA, Rachael Fink. This committee had its first meeting Tuesday morning; all but one of the members was present and a new one joined. The committee, consisting of Prof. Dale Daigle, chair, Dr. Linda Cades, Jeff Chaffin, Lionel Dyson '94, Dr. Jason Rubin and Rachael Fink '95, got off to a wonderful start, discussing many issues that it felt must be addressed with action in the near future. Dr. Ed Weisman was also present to lend his voice to those present.

Issues discussed included: establishing a means by which hate crimes are recorded and statistics kept, increasing the educational efforts of the College aimed at increasing acceptance, getting a trained counselor to deal specifically with gay, lesbian and bisexual issues among the students, and getting the Inter-Fraternity Council and Panhell more involved in these issues. Jeff Chaffin agreed to investigate other universities with an eye to seeing how they deal with similar issues and problems, thus giving the committee some ideas for possible action. The domestic partners benefits proposal was discussed and, according to Weissman, it failed to be passed the first time through because "it didn't go far enough." The original proposal had been amended by the administration and the Board sub-committee on benefits felt that a stronger one was needed. Weisman is confident that a new, better proposal will be passed soon.

The largest problem that the committee faces in the future is understanding its powers and limitations. Trout was very vague with respect to what was expected of the committee and what its legislative and enforcement powers are to be. The committee is operating under the assumption that action is called for and that the committee should be responsible for coordinating efforts in a variety of different directions, all aimed at increasing tolerance for non-traditional lifestyles and making Washington College a safe, happy and equitable place for people living those lifestyles. In the landscaping business, certain things are taken for granted. One is that landscaping workers will not work on days which are cold and rainy, for to do so would expose them to the risk of becoming ill and missing days of work. Last Saturday is a perfect example of these conditions, yet extensive landscaping work was done on the area behind Kent House.

Dozens of dedicated students risked pneumonia to come out and donate their labor in support of Washington College. The Casey Time project, which drew support from students, fraternities, alumni and staff, was an unqualified success in drawing the College community together.

The project, which was originally conceived of by SGA Vice President Max Walton, was organized by Sophomore Class President Mark Reyero and Sophomore Class Vice President Jon O'Connor. In light of the success of Casey Time, there are plans to make it an annual event. "I'm very happy that it went off so well despite the rain," Reyero said. Reyero has already volunteered to help again, and felt that the event was fun for the participants despite the rain and the chill. "A couple of SGA senators even began a mud fight at one point. There was a relaxed atmosphere, and everyone had a good time doing it."

Fraternities played a leading role in the day's efforts, with KAs, Phi Delts, and Sigs conspicuously present to donate community service. Others had other reasons for helping: Sonya Wilson said "I'm here to help out with a project that recognizes and honors the well-deserving Caseys." Paul Briggs said "I'm here because I needed something to do this morning and I enjoy messing around with dirt and plants."

Some students, obviously overwhelmed by the festive and ebullient atmosphere, gave more humorous reasons for coming. Gibby Semmes said he was there "because I am not too hung over to help my school." Doug Hofberger said "I am here for the women!" Whatever individual student's reasons for attending were, a good time was had by all, and the students did valuable work in service to the College. Ω the Tally Ho disperses. A larger crowd forms on High Street in Chestertown. A Washington College student carries a sign with the pickets. Several Chestertown Negroes carry signs. Several of the Negro picketers are men, several are women. A White man swings at a picketer, and the police separate them. Generally the crowd is tense, but no widespread violence breaks out.

"Riders," from p. 4

4:30 Freedom Riders arrive at Kent Island, about twenty miles from Chestertown. They are served at two places. Police protection is inadequate, and theyt do not try picketing several places.

4:35 An angry mob of fifty Chestertown Negroes marches on the Whites congregated in front of Bud's Tavern. Angry words are passed." The police finally arrive in force, with sixteen police cars, forty-two officers and two police dogs keeping the crowds separate. Violence is averted. Two Negroes are arrested for carrying concealed weapons. A White man is arrested for attacking a police photographer. The crowds disperse. The cars leave Bud's. The Negroes head back, many into town where picketing continues. Many to the Uptown Club, where they mill about outside.

5:00 Hot dogs are served to the Freedom Riders at the church. the word from Kent Island. The picketing continues downtown. The other groups return. No one seems in charge, and there is much confusion. Many Chestertown Negroes are present at the church. Several Washington College students stop by. Four members of the College Faculty are present at the church.

6:00 The Riders grow apprehensive over what has happened at Kent Island.

7:00 The Kent Island crew is safe! A cheer goes through the church. The Kent Islanders are being fed at a Negro church in the area, and will return shortly. No one was hurt.

7:10 The Freedom Riders form a modern version of an old Negro spiritual. The room is packed with emotion. A small, attractive Negro girl named Phillis Hendricks led the singing. "Keep your eyes on the prize, keep your eyes on the prize. Hold on, hold on." The people sing, clapping hands in the rhythm of the Negro spiritual. Then the tempo increases slightly, as "Marchin', marchin', tryin' to make freedom our home" is sung.

The people form a snake dance around the room. Many are too exhausted to march around the room, and sit sleeping or resting on chairs.

7:30 The Kent Island crew returns, and everyone cheers. A few minutes later, the Freedom Riders decide to leave for their homes, and the meeting breaks up.

8:30 Rev. Jones of the church shows several Washington College faculty members and myself through the church, and its very attractive upstairs meeting room.

During the evening we had an opportunity to talk to several interesting people connected with the Freedom Riders. Mr. Parks Logan reported to the Riders that, the "Committee of the Outside" was in need of funds to "keep the buses rolling from Baltimore." They needed about $100.00 per bus. Figuring there were two buses, plus the cost of feeding 150 Freedom Riders, previous legal assistance, the NAACP man's pay (if any), transportation costs, etc., the affair probably cost over $300.00.

Several local Negroes present at the meeting said that they would no longer consider the principal of the local Negro High School as a spokesman for the town's Negroes. This was because he had opposed the Freedom Riders, and had refused to meet with them. In fact, he had left town on Saturday rather than be around during the demonstrations.

We also learned of a program of intergroup relations being carried out in Chestertown which is trying to both the Whites and the Negroes working together to solve the many problems of housing, education and unemployment.

The last announcement, made before the Freedom Riders left, was that they would be back the following Saturday. Undoubtedly, they will be back many times. Ω of a final cause has been notably absent from science for centuries, its resurgence into the realm of cosmology is most encouraging in an age where science seems to be edging out philosophy. The continued use of end-directed arguments in the hard sciences may elevate teleology to the respectability it enjoyed in ancient times. Although it can hardly be said that this kind of theory is sweeping the sciences, nor can we expect a revolution on the order of importance that, for example, Quantum Mechanics induced, the Anthropic Cosmological Principle adds something new and valuable to the physicist's toolbox. was one of them. Now I have some hope.

President Trout hasn't fixed this abusive and unethical system. I hope he will give the orders needed to fix it. Still, he gives the judicial process a new tone of humility and humanity. Maintaining this tone won't be easy. I have lost a close friend over this issue, and the president may have to lose friends as well. But fixing our judiciary is absolutely necessary. We can't revise, write or implement a workable honor code if our system of prosecution continues to proceed void of honor.

Thank you, Chuck, for taking this important step.

Sincerely,
J. W. Wright.

To the Editor,

I am writing to bring your attention to some personal comments and inside jokes that have sprung up periodically in the Elm.

The usually informative Newt's Player of the Week column in the October 29th edition of the Elm contained an apparent continuing joke between the author and Jen Dixon. The sentence was about Old Mill High School being "...the best school in A.A. County." The sentence even included a salutation to Jen Dixon. More than likely, a reader of the article who is from another state would not have known where Old Mill High School is or that A.A. really stands for Anne Arundel County, Maryland. And for that matter they probably wouldn't have cared.

Other sections of the paper such as "Blurb" also contain numerous inside jokes that only serve to amuse a few readers. I suggest the Elm restrict its articles to entertaining and informative news that appeals to a broad spectrum of readers not just one small group of people. Washington College is already a somewhat divided campus and if any institution can bring us together, it is the Elm.

To the editor:

We would like to respond to last week's "Dirt" column by Tarin Towers. First off, the Senior Campaign Committee, of which Tarin is in fact a member, was told approximately four weeks before the Senior Dinner that there would be no "untold riches for us to reap as rewards." For those of you that were persuaded to attend this dinner because you believed you would receive a present, we're sorry Tarin was so misinformed. Yes, it is true that there were budget cuts so we were unable to pass out goodies this year. Oh by the way, another fact that Tarin was not aware of and the rest of the committee was, is that the gifts in past years had been surplus items, they were not bought specifically for the Senior class.

We know that all of you would have treasured greatly the gift, which for your information was going to be a ballpoint pen, something we are sure you would have passed on from generation to generation. But, alas, your last four years here will go unappreciated and unrewarded. We are sorry that all you will leave WC with are a few random, unimportant memories and friends. God, for all your hard work here all you got was a lousy college degree! Man, that sucks; what a rip-off! Life would have been so complete if only we had gotten those damn pens.

Our sincerest regrets,

Interested In Improvement

Back on September 3, I said, "It's hard not to notice the sense of optimism prevalent around campus, especially when it comes to Washington's three sports teams."

On October 1, I said, "This year, it's hard to find skeptics around campus. After all, what could any doubters have to say about this season...this fall's sports season has not been a time to wish for the coming basketball season. Fans are beginning to show up in large numbers for athletic contests, and maybe there will be even more to cheer for at the end of the season."

Well, I don't know about there being more to cheer about, but there's definitely plenty to cheer about. For the first time in recent memory, all three sports have shown signs of improvement from the previous year, and while the field hockey team's record did not improve, that probably has more to do with the new conference.

The Centennial Conference showed Washington College's teams that it was going to be a little tougher to win games than in the past. Teams such as Franklin & Marshall, Muhlenberg, and Gettysburg have been added to the regular schedule (a trio by which the soccer team was outscored 7-1).

But still, the key this year has been improvement. The field hockey team only won three games, but they played strong teams such as Western Maryland and Haverford very tight.

The soccer team's seven wins may not appear impressive on the surface, but when you look at the fact that seven is more than Washington has won in the past two year combined, it's a good statistic. Also, when you look at individual games such as a 0-0 tie to Haverford (who Washington lost 4-0 to last year) and a 1-1 tie to Swarthmore (who the Shoremen had not scored on in 10 years), it's obvious that the Shoremen are playing closer to the level of the competition.

However, the poster child for improvement this season has been volleyball. The team was very young and inexperienced last year and finished with a 12-20 record. However, this season has been a 180 degree turn, as the team finished the year at 26-16.

"I think it's been a very positive experience for the team," head coach Penny Fall said. "The Washington College community should be very proud."

Behind the strength of Jen Dixon, Beverly Diaz and Michelle Chin, the team has drastically turned its record around, and the scary thing for the rest of the conference is that Washington will not graduate any seniors.

As a whole, the fall sports teams will not have graduation as an enemy, as only five seniors (field hockey's Liz Olivere, Renee Guckert, Maria Jerardi and Peggy Bowman and soccer's Rory Conway) will graduate between the three teams.

Therefore, if last year was the year to say "wait until next year," this year is the year to say next year could be awesome.

Think about all of the star players who were underclassmen this season.

Newt's P.O.W.s Greg Miller, Jon Kostyal, Brian Rush, Jen Dixon, Bev Diaz, Michelle Chin, and Jen Hanifee are all underclassmen who had stellar seasons.

The soccer team will bring back its whole defense next year in junior Miller, sophomores Chip Helm, Geoff Bley, Cliff Howell, and freshman Will Merriken.

The field hockey team will bring back offensive threats Rouri Colemen, Amy Barrell, Jill Schultz and Cindy Matalucci.

And, of course, the volleyball team will bring back EVERYONE!

It could be a great year next year, and this year wasn't so bad...

I guess everyone's allowed to start thinking about basketball season now. But don't forget about swimming...

Volleyball Hits 26-Win Plateau With Three Late Wins In W.C. Tournament

Erika K. Ford

The Washington volleyball ended their season by posting three wins last weekend. Their final record is 26-16. In the Centennial Conference, their 6-4 record ranks them fifth.

Washington's 26 wins give them their largest win total since the late 1970's–the last time they won 26 games in a season.

Last year's final record was 12-20.

Last weekend the team hosted the Washington College Tournament. They took second place with a 3-1 record. Although they lost to Goucher, Washington defeated Marymount, St. Mary's, and Catholic University.

Head coach Penny Fall was enthusiastic about the team's performance in the tournament.

"Our only loss was to Goucher," Fall said. "When we played them, they were 39-4. Two of the three games we played each other were very close—we gave them a run for their money!

"A most enjoyable aspect (of the tournament) was the fact that all of the teams were at even competition levels. This made the play especially good."

Fall feels that Washington ended the season with a strong comeback too, following mid-season illnesses, injuries, and a stressful mid-term week.

Last week, sophomore hitter Jen Dixon was a key player. Contributing 18 kills, five aces, 43 digs, and 18 blocks, the strong conference player helped boost the Sho'women to victories. In all matches, Dixon is ranked second in the conference with 394 kills. She is ranked for her substantial hitting percentage and total digs also.

Again in all matches, co-captain Beverly Diaz leads all conference players with 478 digs. Co-captain Michelle Chin is ranked for her 491 set assists. Tina Smith is another conference leader with 73 service aces, and ranks for set assists too.

Becky Stephens ranks for her 94 blocks, while Courtney Myers ranks among conference leaders with 53 aces. Washington is second in the Centennial Conference for team service aces, with 106. The Sho'women rank fourth for team digs, with 623.

Coach Fall was happy with the team's season play.

"We have very dedicated athletes who played 42 games in two months," she said. "With so many contests, of course there will be highs and lows, but we got very nice results.

"Considering the great physical impact of volleyball and their overall success, I think it's been a very positive experience for the team. The Washington College community should be very proud."

Red Devils Fry W.C. Soccer In Finale

Loss Gives Shoremen 7-9-3 Mark For Season; Conway Finishes College Career

Paul Kenny

Last Saturday, the Shoremen soccer team played their last game of the season against the Red Devils of Dickinson.

Going into the game, the Shoremen's record was 7-8-3, so a .500 season record was at stake. No soccer team has achieved a .500 record at Washington since 1979.

The match was also senior co-captain Rory Conway's last game for the Shoremen.

Despite the horrible weather, students and parents alike came out to support their Shoremen.

"It was great to see so much support for our last game," head coach Todd Helbling said.

In the first half, the Shoremen dominated most of the play but found themselves unable to create shots.

However, the Red Devils scored early off a set free-kick from out-side the 18 yard box with 10 minutes gone.

"Although we may have dominated most of the possession in the first half, we were not getting shots on goal," Helbling said.

The playing conditions got worse in the second half to the extent where the Shoremen defense was finding it tough to keep their footing.

The Red Devils scored three more goals in the second half to go away with a 4-0 victory over the Shoremen.

Conway finished his career for the Shoremen leading them in scoring with 17 points (7 goals and 3 assists).

Throughout his two seasons for the soccer team, and especially this season (as he was the only senior), Conway stepped up as a leader both on and off the field.

"I was glad to be a part of this years team," Conway said, "We didn't reach all of the goals that we set out for, but we did reach most off them. The team has a lot of potential for the next two years with a lot of the younger players gaining experience."

Although the Shoremen didn't have a winning season as a team, they did improve in every statistical category over last year accomplishing the main goal that they had set out to achieve.

Co-captain Greg Miller and sweeper Chip Helm provided the backbone of the defense this year with Miller posting a 1.47 goals against average per game for the season.

Shawn McMahon and Will Merriken added a lot to the Shoremen midfield and attack.

According to Helbling, the outlook for next season is very good with a winning season for the Shoremen just around the corner.

Will Merriken (17) and Geoff Bley (3) were strong at defense for Washington this year.

Cliff Howell and the rest of the Shoremen took off their uniforms for the last time this season on Saturday.

Will Merriken did a great job as stopper, gaining a lot of experience which will be to the benefit of the Shoremen next season.

Cliff Howell did a great job pushing the ball forward from the defensive end of the field, and along with Tommy Heibler's hustle on the wing, they both added to the Shoremen offense.

Andrew King and Jon Koystal had great seasons displaying a lot of potential which Helbling hopes to exploit next year.

Intramural Basketball Begins 1993 Campaign

Ten-Game Regular Season Started Tuesday

Matt Murray

Intramural basketball action began on Tuesday with eight teams competing on the Division I level and six more playing Division II.

Nearly 140 men are participating in the league which includes seven teams from the three recognized fraternities, six other miscellaneous teams, and one team comprised of Washington College coaches.

Division II games are played at 7 and 8 p.m. in the Lifetime Fitness Center on Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday nights with Division I games following at 8 and 9 p.m. The regular season continues through November with the playoffs slated for early December.

Pre-season rankings have been released for both divisions, and Tuesday night's games give some indication of how competitive the league will be this year.

In Division I, defending champion Showtime is the team to shoot for once again. On Tuesday, Showtime slipped past top challenger Coaches by a 47-43 score. The Coaches finished last season in third place, and are ranked second this season.

The new team on the block, K7 is ranked third in Division I and opened its season with a 47-31 thrashing of eighth ranked Kappa Alpha.

Last year's Division II champions, the Cornhuskers are ranked fourth in Division I this season. They started their season with a win over sixth ranked Theta Chi by a 59-51 score.

In an upset of sorts, seventh ranked Phi Delta Theta rolled over fifth ranked High Street 45-30. High Street is coming off a sixth place 1992 campaign, while Phi Delta Theta is hoping to rebound from a seventh place finish last year.

In Division II, Gisihp, Kappa Alpha 2 and Phi Delta Theta 2B opened their seasons with victories.

Gisihp, which is dropping down from Division I after a fifth place finish last year, is ranked number one in Division II and started with a 24-19 win over Phi Delta Theta 3B.

Second ranked Kappa Alpha 2 narrowly defeated third ranked Theta Chi 2 on Tuesday night by a 29-26 score. Kappa Alpha is hoping to recover from their 28-point drubbing in the Division III semi-finals last year.

Phi Delta Theta 2B was the other winner on Tuesday night with a 25-22 squeaker over LPD.

Shula Ties For All-Time Wins Lead After Miami Defeat Of Kansas City

Dallas Beats Philadelphia For First Place In N.F.C.'s Eastern Division

Don Shula coached his Miami Dolphins to a 30-10 win over the Kansas City Chiefs on sunday, and it was the 324th win of Shula's career. The mark tied George Halas' all-time wins total.

Scott Mitchell threw for 324 yards and three touchdowns to secure Shula's landmark victory.

In the N.F.C. East, the Cowboys beat the Eagles 23-10 behind Emmitt Smith's 237 yards rushing. The victory gave Dallas first place in the division.

In other action...

San Diego beat the Raiders 30-23 behind a ground attack which gained 177 yards on the day. Los Angeles lost despite Jeff Hostetler's 424 yards of passing.

The Packers beat archrival Chicago 17-3 behind a Green Bay defense which sacked the Bears' Jim Harbaugh seven times.

Tampa Bay held on to beat the Falcons 31-24 with the Bucs' Craig Erickson throwing for 318 yards in the winning effort.

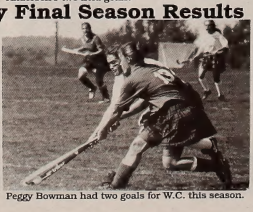
Around the N.F.L.

The 49ers stomped all over the Rams 40-17, as the San Francisco defense forced three turnovers and sacked Los Angeles quarterback T.J. Rubley seven times.

The Saints slipped past the Phoenix Cardinals 20-17 behind Morten Andersen's two field goals.

Denver's John Elway led the Broncos to a 28-17 win over Seattle..

Despite Scott Secules' 276 passing yards, the Patriots lost to the Colts 9-6.



Detroit beat Minnesota 30-27, as both quarterbacks had good days. The Lions' Rodney Peete threw for 273 yards while the Vikings' Sean Salisbury tossed for 234.

On Monday night, Jim Kelly threw for 238 yards to lead the Bills to a 24-10 win over Washington. Reggie Brooks rushed for 117 yards for the Redskins, but Thurman Thomas countered with 129 of his own. The Redskins fell to 1-6.

Your Place to Unwind

NEWT'S CHESTERTOWN BAR

For the second week in a row, the Newt's P.O.W. is a volleyball player from Archbishop Spalding High School in Glen Burnie. Well how about that. Last week, Jen Dixon graced this page. Dixon was a Cavalier at Spalding from 1988-1992. This week, classmate Michelle Chin gets the honor. You know you've come a long way when you go from Catholic school to an advertisement for a bar.

Well, anyway... Chin finished up the season in strong fashion with 49 assists and 25 digs in last weekend's tournament. As a setter and hitter, Chin helped pace Washington to its first 26-win season in over a decade.

Now, Michelle is getting pumped for softball season where she started in centerfield for the Sho'women last season.

Honorable Mentions this week go to volleyball's Tina Smith and Becky Stephens. Smith had 29 assists in last weekend's tournament and she leads the team with 74 aces for the season. Stephens had 13 kills over the weekend.

We can't really have a soccer honorable mention because it was hard to make out what exactly happened on a rain-soaked afternoon. Maybe if it had been a fair weathered day, we could have found some exceptional talent to mention, but all we saw was MUD.

However, we could HEAR what was happening at the soccer game, and we think a BIG honorable mention goes to the fantastic crowd that could be found in a torrential downpour. Unfortunately, I can't repeat most of what they were saying to the Dickinson players during the game, but the last thing heard from the Washington faithful was, "All we are saying, is give Dorst a chance!"

Well, it's been a fun fall season for players of the week, and we're looking forward to a fun season of picking them in the winter.

Students React Strongly To Andrews Dismissal

Rachael Fink

On the front page of last week's Elm was a story whose headline read "Andrews to Leave in Spring; Popular Professor Ousted as Curricular Priorities Shift." For some this was not new news, but for others it came as a big shock. And regardless of when the information reached interested ears all were very upset. The student reaction was swift, angry, and now organized. Tuesday night a group of concerned students, including many art majors and some prospective art majors, gathered together in the Literary House to discuss group action. Many possibilities were discussed and several things planned that will demonstrate to the administration the dissatisfaction of the student body. In addition to this, The Elm was able to conduct several interviews to determine personal reactions to the situation.

When contacted with the news that Andrews would be terminated, Jim Crawford, a recent graduate of the Washington College Art Department, expressed shock and dismay. Crawford said that the decision to eliminate Tex Andrews' position is tantamount to cutting "off the college's nose to spite its face. In an age when the college is looking to get more students, effectively destroying the art program is not a good way to go about it." Crawford mentioned the fact that in the not so distant future both Tessem and Janson-La Palme will be retiring, and "having to rebuild the Art Department without Tex, using part-time substitutes, will take years."

Many current students feel the same way. Holly Dolewski '94, a senior in the art program, voiced shock and anger when asked how she felt about Andrews' leaving. "As a senior art major I am extremely disappointed in the administrative decisions that have been made, not only because one of my professors was fired, but also because I feel that these decisions have been made with a severe lack of input from the faculty as well as from the student body. Without another full time professor in the Constance Stuart Larabee studio it will be extremely difficult, after this year, to fulfill the studio portion of all that is required of art majors." Currently, studio art majors are required to take a minimum of three or four art history courses, concentrating in a particular era, and studio courses, including visual design, beginning drawing and beginning painting. There is some question as to whether these and other courses will be offered as often as in the past, making it difficult to fulfill the studio portion of the requirements.

President Snubs Judiciary

Trout Pardons Two-Time Honor Code Violator

Scott Koon

Last week President Charles H. Trout overturned a ruling of the All-Campus Judiciary, igniting a lively debate in the College community concerning judiciary procedure.

The decision in question involves a student who stole from the Bookstore earlier this semester, and who was later caught. The student, who had earlier violated the honor code by committing an act of plagiarism, was found guilty by the Student Conduct Council and sentenced to suspension. The decision was appealed to the ACJ, who, after hearing the evidence presented at the SCC hearing, upheld the ruling and sentencing of the SCC.

Trout's overturn of the ACJ ruling has incensed student members of the ACJ and SCC, who feel that his decision undermines the role of students in the judiciary process. The judiciary process for students is driven by the spirit of trial by a jury of peers. The ACJ and the SCC is appointed by the SGA President, and, through approval by the SGA, is confirmed as a servant of the interests of the student body as a whole. The other two students are members of the Sophomore and Junior classes, and are appointed by the Student Academic Board and the SGA respectively. The other members of the SCC are a faculty representative and an administration representative, both of whom are appointed to the SCC by the Executive Committee of the SGA. The ACJ is composed of four faculty members and five students, all of whom are selected by the SGA. The chair of the ACJ is the Associate Dean, who is a non-voting member of the committee. The Vice-President of the SGA serves as vice-chair on this committee.

Despite the fact that all voting members of the judiciary bodies are appointed by representatives of the student body, the Student Handbook states that "the President is the final voice in any judicial procedure." Yet members of the judiciary committees, in the past, presidential authority has been limited by precedent. Max Walton (who as SGA Vice-President is a non-voting member of the ACJ) contends that "This is the first case, to my knowledge, which has been overturned by the President on grounds not due to procedural irregularities." Bridgette Avant, chair of the SCC, said Trout's decision "basically undermines our authority."

The authority of the judiciary bodies of the campus is drawn into question by Trout's decision. Another important, and related, issue is how seriously the President takes the authority of the duly constituted judiciary committees of the College. Last Thursday, Professor Jay Wright submitted a letter to the editor of the Elm which praised Dr.

Boiler Plant Breakdown

At 9:26 p.m. Sunday, November 7, the boiler plant spewed clouds of black smoke skyward as the furnace, receiving too much fuel, shut down. The fire department was called, but without finding an actual fire, left the problem in the hands of Maintenance employees, who by 3 a.m. had repaired the offending boiler. The college has two backup boilers which kicked into action, preventing a loss of heat.

Coffee House Update

Brian Matheson

The anticipation surrounding the new student center in the basement of Hodson Hall has been discolored by the fear that its completion will be put off once again. The student center was originally expected to be in use by the beginning of this semester. Students were then told that the construction would be finished by fall break. We are now looking forward to seeing it when we return from Christmas break.

In an interview with the Elm, SGA President Jamie Baker commented, "I really want to see it open on the 21st [of January]. It was scheduled to open in September, then Fall Break, now in January. The students have been let down twice. If it's not open next semester, its going to be damaging to . . . the general morale on campus."

The student body strongly feel that the new student center must be completed on time. SGA Vice-president Max Walton vehemently expressed this sentiment in an interview

Lack of Communication

The past months have demonstrated that, despite claims by the administration of openness, there are no substantive efforts by the administration to involve the College community in the decision-making process.

The recent decision to can Tex Andrews is a prime example of this disinclination on the part of the administration to achieve the goal of a College ruled by the spirit of co-governance. The Committee on Appointments and Tenure is an advisory committee to the President, and has no authority except in advising the President. It is an illogical leap to terminate a studio instructor simply because an external review committee recommended increasing the department to two history professors. It might follow that the department needs more of a focus on history; it does not follow that the department needs a correspondingly smaller emphasis on studio work.

As noted elsewhere in this issue, this decision bypasses the established channels of decision-making at the College. It is highly disturbing that a committee of six members can order a change in the entire curriculum of a department without even consulting the department in question. That a president would even consider circumventing the Board of Visitors and Governors, the Faculty and the student body on an issue so important to the College is shocking, and can only lead one to question the possible ramifications of the agenda of the current administration.

The Long Range Planning process is vital to the future of the College, yet the manner in which it has been handled by the current administration leaves much to be desired. The Long Range Planning Committee consists of many varied constituencies of the College, yet when it came to drafting the Prelliminary Report of the Long Range Planning Committee, only two people's input mattered: the Provost and the President.

The Dean and Provost, in defending the document which is largely the result of his labors, often cites a "consensus" on the committee as the basis for the particulars of the report. Yet if this is the case, why is it that the six faculty members of the committee found the need to completely overhaul all of the sections which have curricular implications? One can only conclude that they felt that the "consensus" which the Dean speaks of is spurious in nature.

Finally, the decision by the President to overturn the ruling of the ACJ and the SCC in the matter of a two-time honor code violator shows an alarming lack of sensitivity to student concerns about ethical standards at WC. In an effort to do away with exactly the same kind of arbitrariness displayed by the President in the recent proceedings, WC students of the sixties and seventies fought hard to make sure that the student body plays a dominant role in judiciary rulings at the College. Must we, as students and future alumni of WC, stand by as the administration blatantly ignores the decisions of the institution's past which students struggled to create? Is Dr. Trout so desperate to improve net tuition revenue that he is willing lower ethical standards to such an extent that common thievery will become common practice? If so, what other standards is he willing to lower in the interest of retaining more and more moral and academic mediocrities at WC? Only time will tell, but we, as students, will have to fight hard to ensure that our Washington College degree is respected as a mark of high esteem, and not low standards.

THIS MODERN WORLD by TOM TOMORROW

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

This is addressing the latest Blub in which Tanya described, "a contest to determine who should be Mark Murphy's Queen and co-ruler of Washington College." I want to know why there would ever be such a contest when I do not want a co-ruler. I don't want Hillary Clinton. I just want some sweet little thing that'll swim along side of me and keep me company. It doesn't have to be the most beautiful fish in the sea - just somebody who'll rub my aching back every now and then.

But as far as ruling the kingdom, I think I'm doing all right by myself. Thank you very much. At least I was before that damn whale came along.

And another thing, do I have to be a guppy forever? I want to be a piranha. Or could I at least get some teeth?

--the proud but noble,
Mark Murphy

To the Editor,

Over the weekend, someone decided to add some paint to my van. What they painted isn't important, but that they painted it without my permission is. I realize that on the surface, the yellow Ford with the smiley face looks like I probably don't care about what I drive, but I do. I chose this vehicle as my very first car, and I like the way it used to look. As a matter of fact, the reason it was even on campus in the Kibler lot was that I was going to be gone recruiting for several days and I didn't think it would be safe parked on High St. near my house.

So, here's the bottom line. I don't care who painted it or what condition they were in when they did it. I would like them to repaint the whole area over with yellow. It was Red Devil enamel, they can buy it at Service Star Hardware. A pint should do the trick. I'll even leave the van at the boathouse all weekend, so they don't have to worry about being seen.

I am not happy that this happened. I don't want to spend time hunting the culprit down. I'd just rather it were fixed and over with.

Sincerely,
Glenn Merry

Coffee House: The Next Generation

Upon a visit to Central Services last week, I noticed a box on the counter requesting suggestions for the name of the new student center. The possibility of playing a role in the affairs of Washington College filled me with excitement. I came to the conclusion that if I were to make a suggestion it should be representative of more than just my personal opinion.

The name of the student center should appropriately reflect the service it provides to the students at the WAC, that is entertainment. And what has been that greatest source of universal entertainment over the past twenty-seven years? You guessed it, Star Trek.

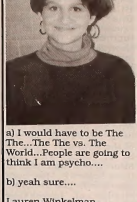
Think about it, how ingrained in American culture are the phrases "Live long and prosper", "Damnit, I'm a doctor not a calender" and of course "Beam me up Scotty". Why, Star Trek is so much a part of our society that the first space shuttle was renamed Enterprise after a massive letter writing campaign organized by fans of the show.

While I think the James Tiberius Kirk Student Center would be a fine name, I realize that all might not agree. A more appropriate name might come from Star Trek: The Next Generation's U.S.S. Enterprise 1701-D. The lounge where the crew gathers to relax and enjoy some company over a glass of synthehol is known as Ten-Forward. Why couldn't Washington College follow this lead and likewise name its lounge Ten-Forward? This also presents the possibility of Whoopi Goldberg and Patrick Stewart coming to campus to serve and drink the first ceremonial beverage at our new facility. Hey, it could happen.

So come on all you Star Trek fans of the world, unite and lobby your SGA senators to give our student center a name that represents the interests of not only Washington College but our great nation as well, Ten-Forward.



Even if you disagree with my opinion, I nonetheless encourage you to involve yourself in naming the new student center.

[Ed. Note: Dorm senators from the SGA are currently soliciting suggestions for the name of the new student center. Recommendations can also be submitted in writing to the SGA. The winning suggestion will be recognized in the Elm and by the SGA in future student center related events. Ω

Democracy in Africa and Demagoguery on NAFTA

Paul Biggs

At Professor Shad's talk on moves toward democracy in sub-Saharan Africa, Professor Premo suggested that there were certain parallels between post-colonial Africa and Latin America in the 19th century, roughly twenty-five years after independence. On Tuesday afternoon I discussed this with him. He informed me that at first, the nations of Latin America had tried to hold democratic elections. However, they had had no real experience in self-government. Political instability was widespread, with various groups engaged in what Premo described as a "zero-sum" fight for control of the state and its resources. Elections were frequently tainted by charges of fraud. Much of the population was uneducated, particularly the large numbers of unassimilated Native Americans. These factors led to a turn towards authoritarianism and the rise of caudillos. After this, there were cycles of attempts at democratization and returns to authoritarianism.

If Premo is right, this doesn't seem to bode well for Africa's prospects for democracy in the foreseeable future. Shad, in his talk, had seemed more hopeful, particularly when describing the changing international environment. This illustrates the different results that can come from extrapolating future developments from current events and from examining historical precedents. At the time when Latin America was first struggling with its newfound independence, Britain, France and other European nations were busy amassing empires, and the United States was at best indifferent to democracy and political pluralism in what was to become its "backyard." African democrats, with allies in the international community, may stand a better chance. It is too early to tell.

It is certainly true that without consensus, strong institutions and a democratic tradition, stable democracy will take a long time to achieve. Nigeria's difficulties have been in the news for some time. Algeria, following its election, has experienced a coup, which the United States government raised no objections to, largely because Islamic fundamentalists did too well in the election. This raises the unpleasant possibility that Islamic fundamentalism may replace communism as the ideology that Western nations are willing to fight even at the expense of democracy.

Just to change the subject, an important debate on the North American Free Trade Agreement between Vice President Al Gore and NAFTA opponent Ross Perot took place Tuesday night on CNN's "Larry King Live."

Gore and Perot both agreed on the problems of Mexico, among them the hegemony of one political party, human rights abuses and rampant pollution. Gore argued that NAFTA's defeat would cause the United States to lose what ability it has to influence Mexico in a positive direction, whereas Perot proposed "social tariffs" as an alternative means of

Anonymous Attempt to Placate Carries no Weight

Rachael Fink

In reaction to an article I wrote for the November 5 edition of the Elm titled "Trout Hesitates," a letter was sent to all RAs concerning the gathering of information concerning "graffiti, obviously thoughtless or hateful comments and the like." This letter was apparently sent by Associate Dean of Students Edward Maxcy, but it was not signed and arrived in a plain white envelope. Dean Maxcy stated that this was an oversight.

I, personally, as a member of said committee and President of GALA, found this to be rather offensive and poor attempt at placating those trying to create an atmosphere of acceptance and equality here at Washington College.

The letter contained a photocopy of the article with a few typed lines at the bottom. "I assume that you have read this article from today's (11/5/93) Elm. We would like you to help the College gather information. We ask you to log graffiti, obviously thoughtless or hateful comments and the like." This note went on to warn the RAs that not everything should be reported. "Be mindful that friends sometimes can and do make seemingly hateful comments to one another in jest. Only when made in the hearing of someone who could take offense should such incidents be noted." At the top of the form on which the actual information will be logged was written "In order better to understand the social climate of the campus, we ask that you keep a log of any/all incidents or evidence of gender, race, homophobic or anti-physical disability concerns on your floor and building. We ask for no names. Return this to the Deans of Students at the end of semester examinations."

This appears to be a reaction to the "hesitate to call it a committee" committee's push to establish a means for the reporting of hate crimes and keeping statistics on such occurrences. I, personally, as a member of said committee and President of GALA, found this to be rather offensive and poor attempt at placating those trying to create an atmosphere of acceptance and equality here at Washington College.

This letter sent to the RAs raises many questions, and yet answers none of them. Who is "we"?...The Administration? The Deans? The "I hesitate to committee"? Why are the RAs made into the P.C. police? How are the RAs to decide what "incidents or evidence" be included on the forms? How do they know when someone is insulted by something? Do the residents of the hall have to approach the RAs and voice their complaints, or do the RAs have to assume that offense was taken? Why are these things only being reported at the end of the semester? What is to be done with the information included in these reports? How does this effort fit into the larger picture of increasing educational efforts and services to students and faculty engaged in non-traditional life styles?

This is the only response by the administration to the committee's first meeting and it is evident that they are not likely to proceed further. This compounds my earlier feelings that the administration does not want to see the committee be an active one. The administration is only giving the committee lip service to appease people like myself who wanted to make an issue of Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual rights on this campus and in society as a whole. Ω

Start Now!

Thea Mateau

In our highly commercialized world, not even the environmentalist movement could go untouched. It's cool, not to mention P.C., to have fashion accessories that bear environmentalist slogans. I was looking through a fashion magazine and a page with the word ozone caught my eye. It was an article on "clean scent"- smeling 'natural'. It seems like lately anything from the "Silence = Death" ACTUP logo, to saving animals in danger of extinction can turn into a fashion statement and nothing else.

Commercial products have become more important than the ideas they are supposed to be supporting. The sad thing is that often the presentation of these products can be very misleading. Marketing devices can be very clever and guidelines on what's environmentally safe or animal-friendly or ecologically sound aren't very clearly mapped out.

The prices on many of these products are ridiculous. The industry is just having a grand ol' time creating anything from drinks to socks to earrings. A new trend you may have noticed is the "clear" image. They are trying to make us believe that clear is good, clear is natural, when it's not necessarily so. I was watching a commercial on T. V. for Biodegradable coolant. They say something along the lines of "what if your dog got into it, or (dramatic pause) your kid?" I don't think -feel free to correct me- that just because a product for the motor of your car is biodegradable it means your dogs, or (dramatic pause) your kids can drink it and not be poisoned or touch it and not have a reaction. It will just accelerate the biodegradation process in your kid, I guess. It's not negative to try to improve our products, but that kind of marketing, is way beyond misleading, going into grounds of the ridiculous!

My point is that we can't really trust all these products. The aim of the environmentalist movement is not to print cool "save the earth" T-shirts. Sometimes the funding from the sales actually go to ecological causes, but more often than not it doesn't. The objective is to act and work towards the cause, not make it a fashion statement. My suggestion is that before you rush out and buy anything that appears to be eco/enviro safe, you read up on it. Don't just buy a product and feel you've done something great, find out where your money is going. Ω influence.

Gore stressed the historic importance of the NAFTA decision, comparing it to the Alaska purchase and the forming of NATO. Perot called attention to the deficiencies of previous trade agreements, the general incompetence of the government, and the prevalence of foreign lobbyists on Capitol Hill. The vice president responded to the point about foreign lobbyists by reminding Perot that those lobbyists disclosed how much they spent, and asked Perot to do the same. Perot said he would come out with those figures soon.

The debate was marked by frequent interruptions (particularly by Gore) and sharp rhetoric. At times, the debate grew personal, as when Gore called attention to Perot's involvement in Alliance, a business venture which handles duty-free goods from Mexico. In terms of histrionic skill, Perot's informal, populist style seemed to have an advantage over Gore's more formal style. However, at times that informal style seemed (at least in my opinion) to wear thin, as in such statements as "I'll wait- it only takes a minute to kill a snake."

People were calling from as far away as Zagreb, Croatia. One caller from Mexico City- an American- described Japanese investors as "lurking" in Mexico City waiting for NAFTA to be rejected by Congress. "What are you people doing up there?" he asked frantically. Another called in from British Columbia wanting to know what lessons had been learned from trade agreements with Canada. Recalling an argument over the accuracy of government studies on the effects of NATO, I wanted to call in and ask what the consensus (if any) was among non-governmental sources such as investment banks or economic think tanks, etc. Unfortunately, I was unable to use the phone.

On balance, I'd say Gore won on the issues. He cited numerous examples of the inadequacies of our current trade relationship with Mexico, how those problems had cost jobs at home, and how the situation might improve under NAFTA. The question is, how did Congress respond?

In one rather silly bit of Washington showmanship, Rep. Bacchus (D-Fla.), officially a fence-sitter until now, came out and announced his support for NAFTA, praising Gore's eloquence. It was later disclosed that he had made up his mind some time ago and was (in cooperation with the White House) just waiting for the right moment. The debate may actually have mobilized support for the agreement in Congress. On the other hand, Perot issued a direct political threat to pro-NAFTA lawmakers during the debate. "Our people have a song," he said. "It's called 'We'll Remember in November.'" Ω

Let's Make a College!

For most students looking at colleges, the prospect of choosing one is somewhat like playing "Let's Make A Deal." You hope you'll get the best prize out of your decision, but there's no guarantee that you won't end up with the educational equivalent of a year's supply of Turtle Wax or a giant stuffed chicken.

To make this more understandable to some of my analytical-thinking-impaired readers, this is a metaphor.)

The difference, of course, is that you get to take a peek behind the curtain before you choose. The ever-present tour is one way, where you get to hear things like "Sure, you can design a major in journalism" or "The campus is really well-lit at night" or "yeah, lots of biology majors hang out at the Lit House." (My freshman year, tour guides said all of these things to prospective students. I heard them).

J. Tarin Towers

Most of these, however, are small misconceptions the tour guides have or little white lies that they'll let the poor kids battle out when they get here. Myself, I was told there was a college radio station. This was in 1990.

But before a student can take a tour, however, they have to have heard of the college. Even in Maryland, there are upward of 300 institutions of higher education (including technical schools). In order for students from Alaska, Baltimore, or Georgia to learn about Washington College, they have to see something that stands out from the piles and piles of brochures and posters and cards sent after taking the PSAT.

You know the score. At first, it feels like Christmas. But after you fill the second grocery bag with literature from schools you've never heard of, you begin to wonder if any school is different from any other.

All the brochures — including ones from WC — have lots of pictures featuring autumn leaves, professors talking to students, chemistry labs, people with weird hair painting canvases, some preppy kids, some kids in leather, and a black guy and an Asian chick holding hands and smiling near a tree.

So the question is how to make a college look different from all the others — otherwise, you could just go to all the others.

This is why the Board of Visitors and Governors has decided to retain Communicorp, Inc. as its new marketing firm. The Office of College Relations, the Development Office and the Admissions Office all work, and will continue to work to make the school more visible, to raise money, and to get new students, respectively (and oversimply).

So representatives came to school in casual dress and met with administrators and several rather select groups of students (we told them they wouldn't be seeing any Newt's majors with 1.5 averages in their sixth year).

They asked us why we came to WC, and what the character of the student body is, and what non-students or prospective students should know about the college. I was in a really grumpy mood that morning and snarled at them a lot.

They told us that they'd be back to take pictures. Woo-hoo. Maybe that picture of the really damn-looking Lit House with the crew-cut guy sitting in the rocking chair (rumor has it he never once set foot in the building before or after that) will finally be replaced.

They did not, however, show us examples of what they've done for other schools. I'm sure their answer would be that they were here to talk about us, not them. But what are they going to do with anything? More shiny brochures to be chucked in a bag? And if they are hell-bent on changing the school's image, will it be an enforced change? For example, if they were to sell it as a hippie-haven (which it looked like my freshman year), would it turn into one?

And what are they going to sell the public? We all know they're going to talk up the Writing Program, whatever that is, and the Biology Department, because They always do, no matter who They are.

But what else? Everyone says, or seems to say, that the campus is in a state of flux. You can't sell flux. Are they going to promote the WC that we have, the WC that Trout wants, or the WC that may some day be? "Let's sell change! Let's sell the idea of a long-range plan! Let's sell a future of no red ink!"

That's okay, Monty, I'll keep the $500 bucks. If someone tried to sell me flux, I'd go to St. Mary's. Ω

Blub

by Tanya Allen

Weekly Synopsis: Last week the author was in a bad mood and so had a large blue whale swallow the entire Washington College Student Government Association while the campus slept in a fit of perversity the author also decided to have the large blue whale swallow Mark Murphy, which she later realized was a rather silly thing to do, as Mark is one of the main characters of Blub. Oops.

The dawn light drifted down through the waters of WAC, gently illuminating the multicolored scales of the various WC students/aquatic sea creatures. They sighed and talked to themselves as they slept, murmuring, "Worms.... Worms.... Worms. ... " Something was definately rotten.

Suddenly, at eight o'clock, there was a horrible blaring noise, as all of the campus alarm clocks went off. "Ag!" yelped all of the students/aquatic sea creatures who didn't have obnoxious alarm clocks. All of the students/aquatic sea creatures who did have obnoxious alarm clocks slept on peacefully. The roommates of the obnoxious-alarm-clock-owners groaned, hit the alarm clocks, and began instantly using obnoxious methods of killing their oblivious roommates.

It wasn't until half-past-eleven that everyone was up and the disappearance of Mark Murphy and the Student Government Association was noticed. Signs were quickly put up by the RAs and all non-apathetic students gathered in Gibson. "Our leaders," said Freshman Siscowet Heather Noble nobley, "Have disappeared."

"It's a conspiracy!" shouted David Powell, a Cut-Throat Trout. "A conspiracy! The SGA and our king must have been taken by the same creature or force that caused the firing of the Greene—a professor that just about all of the students liked and wanted to have continue here....the force that doesn't care what the students think, the force that doesn't bother to find out what the students think, the force that depends instead on the 'wisdom' of Review Boards who view departments for a few days, rather than for four years, as students do...the force that—for the sake of maintenence—is getting rid of some of its other most popular professors next year as well...the force that wants to make this campus as outwardly dead as debatedly 'good looking' as the CAC building, and as inwardly hollow as the CAC's columns! This force doesn't care about the WC students, and that's why it's taking their favorite professors away, like its just taken away our campus leaders!"

"Damn!" said Calico Bass Stacy Sherman, "Why did all this controversy have to happen just at the point in which we females finally decided who should be Mark Murphy's queen and co-leader of Washington College?"

"What?" said Tullibee Mark F. Napps sleepily. "You finally decided on a queen? Who's it gonna be? Who?"

"Well," said Stacy, "I don't think I should tell you this without the proper pomp and circumstance...."

"Oh, tell us! Tell us!"

"No, no, I should really wait until we find Mark...."

"No, tell us NOW, before we lose track of the plot of this damn story once again!"

"Well...."

"Now! Tell us! Who is going to be Mark Murphy's queen?"

"Um...."

"Tell us!"

"Well, ok. Here it is. We females have collectively decided that, if she accepts, the best queen for Mark Murphy will be...."

the campus was silent, as everyone baited their breath. "We have decided that the best queen for Mark Murphy will be...Dr. Nancy Tatum!"

Rabbit-fish Bunny Yeh hopped up, shouting "Yay!" All of the women followed her example. "Yay!" they all shouted. "Yay! Yay! Yay!" And as they shouted and cheered a wonderful deep-sounding laughter was heard above them. "HWOH HWOH HWOH...."

Note About Things the Author Likes to Try: In a letter-to-the-editor last week John-Bruce Alexander complained that "Blub" contains "numerous inside jokes that only serve to amuse a few readers. I suggest the Elm restrict its articles to entertaining and informative news that appeals to a broad spectrum of readers not just one small group of people. Washington College is already a somewhat divided campus and if any institution can bring us together, it is the Elm." In response to this the author would like to say that actually, the main reason she does Blub is because she believes in trying to use humor and satire to "bring...together" WC's different groups of people. She tries to make "Blub" appeal to as many readers as possible, partly by addressing topics and situations that affect all segments of the population, (the social scene, tuition problems, common gripes, etc.) She also tries to use people who are "campus personalities" as main characters. It's the reason Mark Murphy was chosen to be "King" of Washington College, for instance, was because he is one of the few members of WC who is an active figure in more than one campus group. Mark Murphy is a member of KA, and, at the same time, a member of the lit house crowd. He is a very visible figure in at least two seemingly incompatible segments of the population.) The author also tries to use a wide range of people to play "bit parts" in Blub, which is difficult for the same cause, although Washington College is a small college, in close-knit, "family feeling" is deceptive — the author admits that she herself does not know many people outside of the social circles she herself travels in. She is trying to include and address a large number of segments, but perhaps she does not always succeed in doing this as much as she would like. It is her hope that by satirizing different people of different segments she will inspire readers to have these people pointed out to them, and that therefore the segments will be a little bit more aware of each other than they were previously. The author tries to make "Blub" a silly-ish column whose purpose is to put members of different campus cliques together in ridiculous situations and make them bond. She apologizes if she is not as successful at this as some readers would like her to be. Ω

Editor's note: The following letter was written to President Trout by Tyler J. McCarthy, a member of the All-Campus Judiciary Board. (See related story, page one.)

Dear President Trout,

As an active member of this campus, I have become very concerned about certain matters pertaining to the Washington College community. Recently, as a member of the All-Campus Judiciary Board, I heard an appeal of a student involved in a violation of the honor code. Because it was an appeal, the defendant was required to bring new evidence into the case. Upon hearing this appeal it was mentioned that he had not fulfilled this requirement. Regardless, as a concerned board we still deliberated over every angle of the case. After considerable reflection, we could not find any reason to reverse the decision of the SCC and let a second time offender walk, particularly in light of the lack of any new exculpating evidence. Both the Student Conduct Council and the All-Campus Judiciary Board ruled in favor of immediate suspension.

However, I received a letter today [5 November-Ed.] that was written by you overturning our decision. There was no reason given for why you decided to render this seemingly arbitrary decision.

I don't know if you are aware of how lightly the honor code is taken on this campus, but it also clearly shows me that it is not only the students who take it lightly, but it is also the President of our institution.

As you mentioned in your letter, "this case has been trying and painful for all parties," but it was not half as painful as the final decision you rendered.

We have to ask ourselves a couple of simple questions: Is it morally right to let a two-time offender of the honor code walk away unpunished? Should we even have a Student Conduct Council or an All-Campus Judiciary Board if they are just going to be overturned by a higher power? And finally, what does the honor code stand for at Washington College?

Sincerely,
Tyler J. McCarthy

Editor's note: The following letter was written to President Trout by SGA Vice-President Max Walton. (See related story, page one.)

President Trout,

I have read your letter about the latest All Campus Judiciary hearing. I understand your compassion for a member of our community in decreasing the sentence, but I feel that by doing this you have completely undermined and discredited the judicial process which Washington College students work hard to uphold and respect. What I have to say is not an attack on the person who was the defendant at the trial, because that person used the appropriate channels to get the verdict overturned. This is more of a letter about what I feel is the undermining of the College judicial system.

The students of Washington College feel that the honor code constitutes the important rules of the College. It protects the academic as well as the social integrity of the community. If it is not enforced, then it is a worthless, token document. In the past three years, students have done substantive research on many honor codes, and, with advice and direction from the faculty, have been working to improve the current honor system. Having myself worked on this for two years, I was humiliated by your verdict. How would anyone respect a code which is not enforced by the leadership of the College?

This offense was preceded by another honor code violation by the student in question. To minimize the significance of a second honor code violation is a slap in the face to the judicial system of the College, the judicial bodies of the College and the entire student body. All of the members of the SCC had made the decision and it was upheld by the ACJ. The decision was not without foundation. It was a decision of the Washington College community. These people are not on a witch hunt, they only want to uphold the judicial system and keep the integrity of Washington College. The honor code is in effect at Washington College from the day that you get here to a freshman until the day that you graduate.

Dr. Trout, in your letter you offered no explanation for the change in punishment, nor did you give any clue about any procedural error that might have effected your decision. The defendant has been tried fairly by the judiciary in this case. The sentence was appropriate. You gave no explanation to the people of the judiciary on the change of verdict and why the change in sentence was made. The least that you could have done is sat down with the members of the group and explained why you decided to overrule the decision. But you did not. Worse yet, you did not even turn the matter over to the judiciary for re-sentencing, but you handed it over to the Deans. Professional courtesy would dictate that the people who had made the decision should come up with the new punishment. By turning it over to the Deans, you circumvented the cornerstone of the Washington College judiciary. The judiciary of Washington College cannot be separated from the honor code. You have questioned the professionalism of all those on the SCC and ACJ. Sitting on a jury is an uncomfortable situation for anyone. Tough choices have to be made. Those choices have to be respected.

At the beginning of the year, you asked me to keep a low profile, no surprises. This ruling was the biggest surprise in my three years on the College. I am saddened by this decision because I thought that the people of this community believed in and enforced the honor code. Sir, I think that because of this decision you do not believe in the honor code or the judiciary system currently in place. I believe in the honor system. I have worked on it with students and with the members of the Ad Hoc Committee on Academic Dishonesty. I have taught it to the Freshman class when they entered this year. What I ask of you is to uphold the honor code, not circumvent it.

I hope that we can discuss this matter at length.

Max B. Walton

To the Editor,

I am writing to correct a misunderstanding that may have resulted from some remarks that Dr. Wubbels made at the LRPC open forum on Tuesday, October 26. (See Elm article "LRPC Open Forum" in the October 29th issue.) He asserted that the correction of the errors I spotted in budget plans A and C of the long range plan "don't change the conclusion in the plan, just narrowed the margin from $3 to $2 million." His assertion is based on partially corrected versions of plans A and C. I would like to set the record straight as to the full effect of applying all the corrections. Note that A is a model projecting growth to approximately 1150 students and C is a model projecting growth to the present capacity. In their original form, prior to application of the corrections, A and C compared as follows:

1. The profit/loss performance of A runs ahead of C for the entire length of the plan.

2. Plan A comes out of deficit in two years and then runs increasingly large surpluses culminating in a $2.3 million surplus in FY 2005. C takes five years to come out of deficit (in FY 1999) and then promptly goes back into the red, running increasingly large deficits with a loss of over $700,000 in FY 2005.

3. In FY 2005, the operating surplus/loss of A exceeds that of C by three million dollars. During the course of the entire plan, A runs a total surplus exceeding $6.3 million and C runs a total deficit of nearly $3.4 million for a net difference of almost ten million dollars in favor of A.

Thus, as originally presented, A appears to be superior to C.

I suggested a total of 15 corrections that needed to be made to models A and C. On September 28, 7 of these corrections were commu-nicated to Dr. Wubbels. He made 6 of these corrections prior to the October 2 meeting of the Long Range Planning Committee. (He disputed the need for funding a repair and replacement reserve for the 3 new dorms in plan A). At that meeting, I made a presentation that included all 15 of the corrections. Dr. Wubbels' assertion that the margin has just been narrowed from $3 to $2 million is based on the partially corrected models that he prepared prior to the long range planning committee meeting. I summarize below the results of applying all 15 corrections. The corrected versions of A and C are referred to as A and C.

1. The operating surplus/loss of C runs ahead of A during the early years. A runs slightly ahead of C during FY 2004 (by $12,000) and runs $600,000 ahead of C during FY 2005.

2. A runs out of deficit in eight years (in FY 2002). C gets into the black in just two years.

3. In FY 2005, the operating surplus of A is only $600,000 ahead of C. Over the entire course of the plan, A runs a total surplus of $1.4 million while C runs a total surplus of over $6.8 million. Thus the total surplus of C exceeds that of A by more than $5.4 million.

It should be noted that financial planners agree that models are probably unreliable past five years, so the fact that C runs ahead of A for the first ten years is particularly compelling. Note that even in Dr. Wubbels' partially corrected models, C runs equal to or ahead of A for the first six years.

It should also be noted that both A and C make extremely optimistic assumptions about tuition revenues: specifically, they assume that tuition can be raised 9.5% for next year and then raised by inflation + 2% for each of the subsequent years of the plan. In addition, it is assumed that the percentage of students on financial aid can be reduced from 67.5% to 65% and that the aid as a percentage of total costs can be reduced from 48% to 47%. Both models assume that the number of students can be increased

If these increases in tuition revenues fail to materialize, the performance of both models is degraded, but A is hurt more than C. With lower tuition revenues, C would conceivably outperform A for the entire length of the plan.

Also, note that while A requires raising $20,000,000 for buildings, C requires no fund raising whatsoever. Neither plan calls for any additional endowment fund raising except for endowment for buildings in A. Both plans call for increases in endowment, but that takes place automatically through market appreciation, Hodson trust money, and the maturation of bequests. If an equal amount of fund-raising were put into plan C and directed into endowment rather than building costs, C would perform even better. Suppose that in this modified plan, called C endowment, $10 million of additional endowment is raised over the ten years. In that case, C endowment would end with a surplus of $1,649,489 in FY 2005, which would exceed the surplus in A for that year. Over the course of the plan C endowment runs a total surplus of over $9.6 million compared with $1.4 million for A – an advantage for C endowment of $8.2 million.

It would appear that the soundest plan from a financial standpoint would be C endowment.

earlier this week. "If the student center isn't done on time, the students will be pissed off as all get out."

Unfortunately, sources have suggested that, once again, the project will be delayed. The Maintainence Department, who already have their hands full with keeping the campus in working order, simply cannot keep up with the schedule. While the plans originally allowed for outside contractors to come in and do much of the work, there seems to be no money left in the budget.

The deli portion of the student center seems to be what is holding the project up right now. There is a possibility that the multi-purpose room could be completed and open by the deadline, but the general feeling is that this would probably result in further delays in finishing the deli.

There has been some suggestion that students could help with some of the work. Many of the unskilled tasks that burden the Maintenence workers could be taken over by interested students, thus perhaps allowing for the project's completion on time. Baker feels that students could also assist in daily clean-up and in maintenance chores to free the staff to be able to put in more man hours of work each day.

While the many postponements might suggest a lack of interest among the administration, SGA Treasurer Sonja Wilson is still hopeful. "I believe that President Trout wants to get this project done as much as the students do. He understands that without a central point on campus (like a student center), Washington College has the growing potential to become a suitcase campus. I think he is looking foreward to the opening, considering that he is so pro-student"

The student center is for the students, and to paraphrase Dennis Berry's statement, the students are in control. Students like Matt Mullin '96 like the way the Seniors describe it, with beer on tap, pizza, and popcorn, and beef jerkey a must...." The students have played an operative role in the organization of the student center, perhaps we'll have to pick up hammers and play a similar role in its construction. Ω

"Outrage," from 1

Duke Krieger '96 was very adamant in his disapproval of the decision to eliminate Andrews. "It is a typical example of the way the school is being run these days. Things are being taken away from the students." Krieger seems to have taken J. Tarin Towers' advice from the last issue of the Elm and stated "When he leaves, I leave." Krieger has made plans to transfer out of Washington College and will not return next semester. Several other students have expressed similar sentiments, although Krieger is the only one currently planning not to return.

There was also a strong reaction by freshmen considering a major in art. Both John Guchemand and Eric Hammesfahr sat down with The Elm to express their feelings about the situation. Guchemand said he had "thought about transferring because I don't know what the administration is going to be like in the years to come." He objected not only to the fact that Andrews' was being let go, but to "the way things were handled . . . how key and under the table it . . . if this keeps happening it will harm the College in the long run." Guchemand was happy to so many students at the meeting Tuesday night and said that the College should "get student input to make sure this type of thing doesn't keep on happening." Eric Hammesfahr, considering a major in art so as to teach in the secondary system, said "it just seems like a shame that they let go a guy who, in my opinion, was doing a great job." Hammasfahr believes that if the College wants to change its emphasis that it has a right, "but there are students here, too. They could find some other way to solve the problem, like hiring part-time art history professors. In the studio you really need a full time relationship with the students." Hammasfahr feels that there will be less of a "sense of growth" with only one full time studio professor. "More professors with more ideas offer the students more." Ω

"ACJ," from 1

Trout for the decison overuling the sentence confirmed by the ACJ.

It should be noted that Professor Wright must have learned of the President's decision on Wednesday. Wright is not a member of any judiciary committee, yet he learned of the decision before any of the ACJ members, who were not notified of the decision until Friday. None of the SCC members, save the chair, received any notification of the decision. The Elm is investigating the possibility of a leak.

Another question is how seriously the President took the case, and whether he reviewed all of the pertinant evidence. The Elm has learned that the President did not review and could not have possibly reviewed, the evidence presented at the SCC hearing, because the sole transcript of the hearing that remained in the possession of the SCC chair. The President did not request a review of the evidence prior to reaching his decision. The President had no verbatim transcript of the trial at his disposal prior to making his decision. All he had was a written report detailing the charge, and the verdict of the ACJ and SCC.

In a recent meeting with the Elm, the student leaders of the campus judiciary said that they felt the President had circumvented established procedure and abrogated the perogatives of the student body in reaching what they termed an "arbitrary" decision. These leaders felt that there needs to be a formalization of the appellate process. These leaders also indicated they were being kept in the dark as to what punishment, if any, would be meted out to the guilty party. Currently, the matter is in the hands of unspecified "deans," and the students involved in the judiciary process have not been consulted in the matter. Ω

Registration Info

John K. Phoebus

According to Dr. Jack Hamilton, Registrar, arena registration may be unnecessary in the enrollment process this semester. Through a new method of registering for courses, students are encouraged to "Think Alternatives" and advisors are asked to indicate whether a course for next semester is a course within the student's major or a continuation of a class needed for distribution. Today, when all registration cards are entered into the registrar's computer, course selections will be processed according to an order which will help ensure that students who need a course for major or continuation requirements are able to be enrolled. "In essence, the sequence is designed to insure that last semester seniors are enrolled in the courses they need to graduate, that majors are given the first chance at major courses, and that those students who need a second sequential or numbered course for distribution are given preference," said Hamilton to the Elm.

The inclusion of alternative selections will enable the Registrar's office to enroll students in courses with a minimum number of returned cards due to students being closed out of primary choices. Only if the number of returned cards is too high to practically handle problems individually by the students and faculty will arena registration be necessary. The goal of the Registrar's Office is to eliminate the need for an arena gathering. Ω

The Firing of Andrews: a Procedural Analysis

Rachael Fink

In last week's Elm, Tex Andrews brought up some very important procedural issues concerning the termination of his position. According to Andrews, the decision was made by the Appointments and Tenure Committee on the recommendation of the external review board. According to the Washington College Faculty Handbook 1991-1992, decisions concerning the "reduction or termination of an existing curricular program involving faculty appointments" are to be made by "a Program Change Committee on the recommendation of the President, the Dean of the College, the Academic Council, the Long Range Planning Committee, the Committee on Appointment and Tenure, or the Faculty." The Program Change Committee, consisting of the Dean, chairs of three academic divisions of the faculty, and three faculty members elected by the Long Range Planning Committee, is required to convene specifically for the issue of the program change, to send a memorandum informing all faculty and other teaching staff of the considered change, and to "prepare a Plan for Program Change based exclusively on long-range educational judgment about the desirability and feasibility of proposed modifications in academic program and staffing." In addition to this, the Committee is to consult with the Faculty and departments affected, as well as with the President. The final report is to be sent to the Faculty for "discussion, revision, and a vote." It then goes back to the President who takes it to the Board of Visitors and Governors. After all of this, the proposed changes go to the Committee on Appointments and Tenure who makes the final decision. According to the information now available to The Elm, it appears that the decision was made by the Committee on Appointments and Tenure without having gone through the proper channels. Currently, the question of the propriety of the decision made to release Andrews is under discussion, albeit informally, by many segments of the college community. Ω

Swim Season Splashes To A Start Saturday

Men's And Women's Teams Host Diplomats

Matt Murray

The Washington swimming teams open their season tomorrow against Franklin & Marshall College, and both the men's and women's teams are filled with optimism and loaded with talent.

The men's team comes off its most successful season in school history, as it finished with a 7-2 regular season mark last year and a seventh place finish in the MAC Championships.

This season, the men's team should be even stronger after a big recruiting year. However, they'll have to swim better this season in order to stay close in the highly competitive Centennial Conference.

"The men's team has their largest roster ever with 18 talented men including seven juniors, four sophomores, and seven freshmen," head coach Jim Lessard said. "They'll be led by MAC Champion junior co-captain Dave Cola, who should lead his team in the 200, 500, and 1000 free events."

The other juniors on the squad are co-captain Chris Freisheim, Jason Campbell, Dave Ward, Tim McCarthy, Tim Whittier, and Mike Bowman.

Freisheim is the school record holder in the 400 individual medley with a time of 4:36.45 and is a member of three school record relay teams.

"We're looking forward to a very exciting season," Freisheim said. "It's going to be real interesting to see how we do against those teams that have lost a lot of seniors while we have our team all back from last year along with seven freshmen."

Campbell holds the school record in the 100 and 200 breaststroke. He is also on four school record relay teams and also holds the 50 freestyle record with Cola at 22.8.

McCarthy is also a member of three school record relay teams.

Czekaj had a breakthrough season last year when he placed in the 1650 at Championships.

Both Whittier and Bowman swam for the Shoremen first semester of last year but did not swim in the spring semester.

Peter Ward, Scott Steinmuller, David Kraft, and Julien Gaudion provide a solid sophomore class.

Ward and Steinmuller are both school record holders in individual events. Ward holds the record in the 100 and 200 backstroke, while Steinmuller holds the record in the 100 butterfly, 200 butterfly, and the 200 individual medley.

Kraft is a member of the school record 800 relay team, and Gaudion is Washington's second fastest breaststroker.

Lessard also hopes the freshmen recruits will contribute this season. Freshmen on this year's team are Tim Parent (Dover, DE), Dan Woodall (Dover, DE), Marcello Brutti (Argentina), Michael Davis (Drexel Hill, PA), Perry Holland (Smithfield, NC), Ryu Kawai (Japan), and Justin Thomas (Kingston, Jamaica).

"I'm very excited and optimistic about this young team," Lessard said. "They have the potential to be a power in the new conference."

On the women's side of the pool, optimism still runs high, but the results weren't as positive last year.

The women are coming off a tough record of 2-8," Lessard said. "But we've improved our depth from last year."

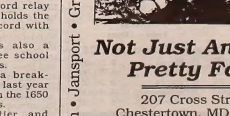
Co-captain and conference standout Jennifer Green leads the women's team. The only senior on the team, Green was a finalist at Championships in both backstroke events last year, as she set the school records in the 100 and 200.

The lone junior on the women's team is co-captain Amy Draper. Draper should be a strength for the Sho'women in the freestyle events.

Sophomores Jen Dow and Colleen Roberts were both successful last season. Dow placed in both butterfly events at Championships last year. Roberts set two school records last year and placed in three events at Championships.

Roberts is optimistic about this season.

"I think our conference is a lot harder this year," Roberts said. "But we did get a couple of good freshmen, and we have more numbers. We should have a more positive year than last year."



Denise Hakanson also had a good season as a freshman for the Sho'women last season. She should contribute in the freestyle, individual medley and backstroke this year.

Sophomores Robin Woollens and rookie Elizabeth Likens should provide depth in the freestyle and the breaststroke.

The women's team also had a strong recruiting season, and this year's additions are Jennifer Voss (Bridgeton, NJ), Renee Bylkas (Severna Park, MD), Eileen Kuriger (Southampton, PA), Erin Miller (Chester, VA) and Amy Peterson (Derwood, MD).

Women's Basketball Set To Tip-Off Season And End 81-Year Drought

Cole Prepares Team For First Year Of Intercollegiate Competition

Matt Murray

Since 1912, men's basketball has been played at Washington College without a women's team playing alongside.

Seventy-one years later, after two years of club status, Washington is prepared to send its first intercollegiate women's basketball team to National Collegiate Athletic Association Division III gymnasiums across the country.

Loaded with freshmen, the Sho'women will open their season at the Hunter College Tip-Off Tournament on November 19. Their first home contest will be on November 30 against Franklin & Marshall.

Under the guidance of head coach Laneé Cole and assistant coach Steven Lee, the Sho'women hope to take some opponents by surprise in their inaugural season.

"I just can't wait to get started," said Cole, who was an assistant coach at Central Missouri State from 1991-1993. "I think we have the ability to surprise some teams. It's going to be interesting to see how they respond to the pressure in their first games."

With only one senior in captain Pam Hendrickson, no juniors, and only two sophomores in Erica Estep and Kelly Eakin, the team will rely heavily on the eight freshmen on the roster.

Cole knows the team will be inexperienced but believes it will be very balanced.

"I feel we've got some speed in the backcourt and in handling the ball with Hendrickson and (Kelly) Rodgers," she said. "Lee Ann Lezzer is going to be a shooting force from the outside. Inside, I feel we're going to be strong with Eboni Taylor and Allison Wentworth."

Cole feels in addition to Lezzer (Millersville, MD), strong shooting will come from Sherri Gallini (Piscataway, NJ), Liz Mangano (Pitman, NJ), and Rodgers (Glen Burnie, MD) while Melissa Kovoda (Baltimore, MD) will add depth in the backcourt.

In the frontcourt, Eakin, Estep, and Iris Lewis (Baltimore, MD) will help Wentworth (Millersville, MD) and Taylor (Germantown, MD).

Despite having 11 women on the roster, Cole believes one of Washington's weaknesses this season will be a lack of depth.

"We're not that deep," Cole said. "Conditioning is going to play a large role in our success. We're far from being in game shape now, but that's going to come."

Cole feels the Centennial Conference will be difficult, especially in the team's first season. Washington is in the East Division with Ursinus, Muhlenberg, Swarthmore, Haverford and Bryn Mawr. The Sho'women are ranked fifth in their division for the pre-season, just ahead of Bryn Mawr.

"The conference is going to be tough," Cole said. "Within the Centennial, Franklin & Marshall, Ursinus, Dickinson, and Johns Hopkins are all very good. I think we're fortunate to be in the Eastern Division where the teams may not be as strong as those in the West."

However, the fact that Washington even has a team worries some coaches in the conference.

"Laneé's done a really nice job so far," Swarthmore head coach Karen Yohannan-Borbee said. "I don't know how they'll do because I really don't know what Washington College h They could catch so people by surpri because nobody kn what they have."

Washington may young this season, t the players are full optimism and are hop to beat some teams fulfill Yohannan-Borbe prediction.

"I think we've go really good group of g who are working rea hard," Hendrickson s "I think we're going surprise some tea (Cole) has recruited good freshman cl that's going to be here four years."

Said Wentworth think we look really go Everyone's working re hard, and there's reason we can't surpr some teams."

The Washing women's basketball te will scrimmage Trin University tomorrow the Cain Gymnasiu 9:30 a.m.

K7 Knocks Off Defending Champion Showtime; Gis Ihp Destroys LPD In D II To Stay On Hot Streak

On Tuesday night, K7 upset Showtime 50-34 to give the defending champions a reality check. K7, on the strength of Sam Berger's shooting, racked up a sizable lead and held on for a convincing win.

In other Division I action, the Coaches, ranked second in the pre-season, were demolished by Theta Chi 47-32. Theta Chi moved to 3-1 with the win, and the Coaches are still searching for their first win.

To continue the string of upsets, Phi Delta Theta beat the Cornhuskers in a close game. The Phi Delts allowed the Cornhuskers only one shot per possession for much of the game. The final was 48-44.

The other game on the Division I slate on Tuesday was High Street and Kappa Alpha. Kappa Alpha continued to improve but still fell short 44-38. High Street evened its record at 2-2 with the win and Kappa Alpha dropped to 0-4.

In Division II, Gis Ihp sent a statement to the rest of the league with its 56-25 destruction of LPD. Dan Coker's leadership has been a plus for Gis Ihp.

In a close game, KA2/Mr. Wendal squeaked by Phi Delta Theta 2 47-46 in overtime. Christian Boone and Ryan Mahoney had strong games for Phi Delta Theta with Ken Pipkin and Josh Lawrence providing the offense for KA2/Mr. Wendal.

In the third game of the evening, Theta Chi 2 rolled over Phi Delta Theta 3 45-26. The win improved Theta Chi 2's record to 2-2.

The second half of the season begins on Sunday evening with a full slate for both Division I and II.

The playoffs will begin the first week of December.

All results for intramural basketball are provided by Dennis Berry and the Department of Recreation.

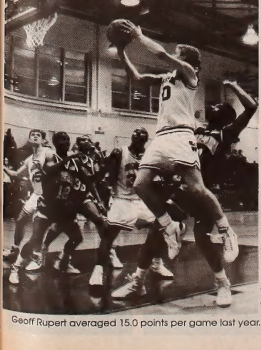
Men's Basketball Has Hart; Young Team Seeks Heart

Matt Murray

After 23 years with Tom Finnegan at the helm, the men's basketball team will take on a slightly different look this season with a new head coach.

Finnegan left this semester on academic sabbatical, and the dean of Washington College coaches has turned the reins over to longtime assistant coach Mike Hart.



Hart, a native of Linthicum, Maryland and a graduate of Towson State University, has been an assistant coach for the Shoremen for ten years, and he is excited about being the head coach this season.

"I think it will be a fairly smooth transition because it's not like they have a whole new personality they have to get used to," Hart said. "Obviously, I'm not Coach Finnegan. A lot of my style has been influenced by him, but I do have my own style. Hopefully, the guys will respond."

In only two weeks of practice, the players have noticed a few adjustments.

"We're going to have more of a fast-paced style now," senior Geoff Rupert said. "Things are also going to be more laid back. He (Hart) is more of a players' coach."

Hart has taken over a young team, as there are only two seniors on the roster in Rupert and captain Charles Cummings. There are also only three juniors in Jay Devlin, Jerry Davis, and Adam Poe.

Geoff Rupert averaged 15.0 points per game last year.

Sophomores Mark Kenah, Edmund Hicks, and Ken Lapp return to the Shoremen this season, and freshmen Paul Kenny (Dublin, Ireland), Ben Harris (Alexandria, VA), Derek Cuff (McMurray, PA), and Mark Awantang (Wheaton, MD) round out the roster.

A weakness for the Shoremen this year will be size. With the graduation of six-foot-nine center Darren Vican, the tallest players on the roster this year are Devlin and Lapp at six-foot-six.

"We're not real big, but at the same time, we're pretty mobile," Hart said. "I think the key is going to be rebounding. We have good speed and we should have good pressure defense."

In their first year in the Centennial Conference, Washington is ranked second in the East Division for the pre-season right behind Muhlenberg. Swarthmore, Ursinus, and Haverford round out the division.

"I ranked them (Washington) second behind Muhlenberg," Haverford head coach Dave Hooks said. "They're probably second best in talent and the history of their program helps them.

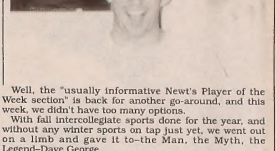
"I think Cummings is a pretty good player, and I think Rupert has probably been one of the strongest people against us on a game-to-game basis over the last two years."

The conference's West Division will be very strong this year with Franklin & Marshall, Johns Hopkins, Dickinson, Gettysburg, and Western Maryland.

The Diplomats of Franklin & Marshall are ranked number one in Division III in the Columbus Multimedia pre-season poll and number two in Division III in the DIII News and NCAA Basketball Preview.

Johns Hopkins, led by guard Luke Busby, is ranked sixth in Division III by the NCAA Basketball Preview.

Even with the tough competition ahead of them, the Shoremen are confident going into the season.



"As of now, we're looking pretty good," Rupert said. "We're hurting in size, but we're quick. We also have a couple of freshmen who can contribute."

The Shoremen open their season November 19 at the Widener Tournament.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

NEWT'S CHESTERTOWN BAR

Well, the "usually informative Newt's Player of the Week section" is back for another go-around, and this week, we didn't have too many options.

With fall intercollegiate sports done for the year, and without any winter sports on tap just yet, we went out on a limb and gave it to–the Man, the Myth, the Legend–Dave George.

Now, you're probably saying–how could we give it to such a loser? How could a math majoring, private schooled, preppy, geeky nobody win such a coveted award?

Well, it's all in the language ("yeah, I threw that!" or "don't worry, they can't come back now") and the fact that he refuses to be known as a "– – jump-shooting –."

Anyway...Dave has been a force on the intramural courts for the Cornhuskers. He has consistently scored 15 or 16 points per game and has led the new team on the block in Division I to a 3-1 record as of Tuesday.

So yes, his knees may be bad, and his jump-shot may be uglier than his roommate (yes, that means you Myers!), but he seems to get the job done.

A BIG honorable mention this week goes to the lone undefeated team (as of Tuesday) in Division I. Another new team, K7 knocked off defending champion Showtime on Tuesday night with James Alvarez and Sam Berger throwing in a bunch of points (don't you love our accurate intramural statistics) with Geoff, Doug, Merritt, Alberto, and whoever else is on the team leading K7 to a 4-0 mark.

But this week, the big stage belongs to big Dave. So congrats Dave (who, as the immortal Billy Blair would have said,has gotten "NICE" this season). Too bad he went to such a lousy high school, or more people might like him. No, really. He's kind of a good guy. I really don't think it's fair that he carries that reputation of being the man with a great smile and no girlfriend. Really, that's not fair...

Good luck to all of the intramural players on Sunday.

Student Activists Protest

This drawing sums up the feelings of the students who took part in last Saturday's protest.

Rachael Fink

This past Friday a group of students concerned about the decision not to re-hire Tex Andrews conducted a protest at the Casey Academic Center. The protest consisted of chalk outlines of bodies drawn on the brick walkways at both the front and rear of the building. The outlines were labeled with the titles of different course offerings in the Art Department which students feel are jeopardized by the decision to replace Andrews with an art historian. It also featured "police line" style tape draped across the two columns directly in front of the southern entrance. Issues eight and nine of this year's Elm were posted on these columns. Both editions featured articles regarding this issue on the

A series of incidents have been reported involving a slingshot in the vicinity of Caroline House. Two residents of Caroline had their room window damaged, bathroom windows were damaged. Several windows in the O'Neill Literary House were also damaged. No witnesses to these five incidents have come forward as of yet. This series of events is still under investigation. Security has no suspects right now, but hope that they will be able to close the case quickly.

Another incident occurred in Caroline late Saturday night or early Sunday morning. Interior stairwell lights as well as exterior lights were damaged. The students allegedly responsible for this damage were apprehended by the Security officer on duty and their case will come before the SCC. Maintenance is currently evaluating the dollar value of the property damage.

A stereo was stolen from a vehicle in the Minta Martin parking lot on the fourteenth. The case is under investigation. Security is encouraging students to double check their vehicles to make certain that they are locked.

In another incident, Security was called in to investigate suspicious activity early last Friday morning in the Minta Martin parking lot. Security questioned two persons who were nearby. Upon investigating the vehicle where this activity occurred, Security found that a canvas bag they had spotted earlier had been removed. The officer then caught up with the suspects, who were found to be in possession of the missing property. Ω

Party Monitors

Marshall L. Norton

Last year, Campus Security head Jerry Roderick met with the SGA to formulate a policy concerning all-campus parties held in Hodson Hall. At the meeting, it was decided that if alcohol were to be sold at such a party, then at least one individual would need to be present to act as a monitor to insure that only students and their registered guests were using the facility.

Roderick stated that at times in the past, prior to the introduction of the party monitor regulation, many high school students and otherwise uninvited guests would be allowed into the gatherings in Hodson Hall. Predictable problems with the issue of underage drinking arose, thereby warranting the need for some type of novel regulation.

Although he is pleased with the success of the party monitor program as it stands today, Roderick admitted that "There are

Target Tutoring Helps Kids

Scott Koon

Every Tuesday and Thursday afternoon the Casey Academic Center and the surrounding area reverberate with the sound of frolicsome children cavorting joyously, bringing smiles to the faces of the normally taciturn students walking by.

For several hours a week, the CAC becomes an elementary school classroom and Martha Washington Square becomes a playground, all under the auspices of the Target Tutoring program. Twenty-eight local schoolchildren from the third and fourth grades come to do their homework, engage in one-on-one activities with College students and play under the watchful eyes of their tutors.

The Target Tutoring program has been underway for three years at Washington College. Each elementary school student in the program is assigned to a College student who helps them with their homework and becomes a friend and mentor. Senior Meritt Pridgeon, who is a tutor in the program, said "I think even more than getting their homework done, it's about giving them someone to hang out with. I know that if I were an eight-year-old I'd think it was really cool to have a college age person as a friend."

On the Thirtieth anniversary of the death of John F. Kennedy 9

That's just the Way it is Back when I was a young whippersnapper of fourteen and fifteen I worked as a dishwasher at the U.S. Army hospital in Berlin, Germany. My boss, Sgt. Tutt, (yes, that was his real name,) was in charge of the menu and food preparation. I never found out how he became an Army cook, but I always suspected that he missed his true calling in life: he should have been a drill sergeant.

Anyway, a lot of what I did didn't involve washing dishes. Often (every day, in fact) I would be out on the front line of cafeteria serving such delicacies as over-cooked squash and mystery meat. Since I was just a kid, I never knew what to tell the soldiers when they complained about the poor quality of the food. One day I asked Sgt. Tutt what I should tell them, and he gruffly (but wisely) said "Just tell them that, no matter what the other promises their recruiter gave them when they entered, no one ever told them to expect good food in the Army."

Since coming to Washington College, I've often pondered the wisdom of the words of Tutt. For Sgt. Tutt was not only talking about mess hall food, he was addressing people's expectations in general.

Everyone likes to gripe. It is one of the things which all the peoples of the world have in common. Congress complains about the President, the Armenians complain about the Azeris, Republicans complain about the traffic and everyone complains about the weather. It's universal.

When we listen to people's grievances, do we really listen? Was that young soldier from the Midwest really upset about the watery consistency of his eggs, or was he upset that he was stationed in Berlin instead of Fort Riley, Kansas? Sure, I'm sure he was miffed about the eggs, and justifiably so, but that wasn't what was really eating him. I didn't have any control over what really bothered him, but since his predicament had predisposed him to complaining, he complained to me about something he could reasonably expect I could do something about.

The key to understanding people is listening to them, and the key to communicating effectively is to say what you mean to say and not pussyfoot around the issues. That's the only way things get done.

So it is with this year's Elm. You'll notice that there has been a dearth of articles about student apathy and dining hall food. These sorts of articles appear in many student newspapers across the country, but not here. They're counter-productive. Let's face it, any mass dining facility isn't going to be as satisfactory as an ordinary restaurant or home cooking. That's just in the nature of the beast, and it's silly to complain about the food when we all realize that the Dining Hall is doing the best they can given finite resources.

The same is true of student apathy. I don't really think it is as widespread as my fellow college journalists seem to think. What is perceived as apathy i.e. a lack of activism, is usually not apathy, but learned helplessness. People in our society are socialized in the belief that higher-ups know what is right. Of course, few people actually believe this, but most think that everyone else does: they become resigned to the prospect that appeal to higher authority does not work. They become resigned to the ultimate and arbitrary use and abuse of power.

But that does not have to be the case. All it takes is one person to stand up and say that things are not right, and that they demand a change. Those in authority usually ignore that person, having themselves been conditioned to believe themselves omnipotent and omniscient. But eventually that one voice becomes two, two voices become four and so on. When that happens the power of the people becomes a force to be reckoned with, and the Sgt. Tutts of this world have to make sure that everyone gets their eggs the way they like them.

Letters to the Editor

Editor's note: the following is a letter which has been sent to President Trout.

Dr. Trout,

As a concerned member of the Student Conduct Council, I feel that it is necessary for me to make my feelings clear regarding the events of the past few weeks.

I do not intend to argue your right to overturn decisions made by the Student Judiciary. You do have this right. Nor do I wish to argue the facts of the case in any way. As far as I am concerned, the case itself is over, your final decision can not be changed, and I will rest. I do, however, have a problem with the way in which this has been handled. I feel that we, as members of the judiciary, have a right to understand the reasons behind the overturning of our ruling. If these reasons are procedural, we need to know so we can avoid mistakes in the future. If it is because of new evidence, I still feel that we have a right to some kind of explanation or justification.

While the lack of an explanation for your decision upset me a little, I was very upset when I learned that you had refused to meet with the SCC and ACJ to discuss this matter. Until this time, I was under the impression that this school was run, to some extent, in a democratic way. It was of the opinion that we, as students, could have an audience with the head of our institution if we had a concern. Well, we have a concern, and the head of our institution has refused us an audience. I, personally, am very offended by this. We do not seek to change the outcome of this particular case, we simply seek some communication.

Sincerely,
Anthony D. Hecht

Thanksgiving Day

Campus Voices 19 November

Open Forum

As Thanksgiving is fast approaching, we all must remember to take time to celebrate all the good things we have, no matter how we got them. Just like the first Thanksgiving when the pilgrims thanked God for Manhattan while the Native Americans modeled their new beads. I am thankful that the man who parachuted in on the Bowe-Holyfield fight got pummelled by the audience. I'm glad Sinbad finally has a show that can really showcase his talents; A Different World was just too small and limiting. I am thankful my name is not Bobbitt. But there are two particular things for which I am thankful.

I am thankful that the administration canned the artist and instructor Tex Andrews. This is the 90's, who needs mentors, role-models, or people to inspire us into greatness. Washington College understands that we've pretty much topped out and why bother with practical application of thoughts and ideas. Taking the lead from the school, I have announced that I am firing my parents. Sure they have been great to me, beginning with the whole giving me life thing. But I don't need them anymore. I know what it means to be a good person and besides, if I have any questions in the future I can rent some person who does not know or care about me, someone who has no vested interest in seeing me succeed and ask that person what to do. It sounds really harsh on paper I admit, but you should see the money it will save me. No more birthday cards or anniversary gifts. My little brothers and sisters were a bit shocked at my parents dismissal but I told them we were in a state of flux and asked them to bear with it. When they asked who would teach them the difference between right and wrong, I gave them the T.V Guide.

The other thing for which I am not thankful also has to do with the administration. With the recent override of the decision by the All-Campus Judiciary, I feel vindicated. Throughout my years at Washington College I have always maintained that the Honor Code was a joke. My opinion, which some might have thought to be jaded and cynical, was validated by the head Sho'Man himself. Though I don't know all the specifics of the case but I'm sure he had his reasons for the parade, just like Gerald Ford did. Maybe he wanted to end the college community nightmare of preserving its integrity and decency. In honor, I hesitate to use the word, of this new openness to and acceptance of dishonesty and generally stupid conduct, I would like to propose a Campus Wide Looting Day next Tuesday. Before the break we can all trash the Bookstore, taking whatever will fit in our pockets. Then we could move on to destroying the dorms, having fun

Students Express Aggravation with Campus Life

Eric Emrey & Ted Knight

Our beloved school, it seems, is chock full of problems that could easily (and inexpensively) be solved by having them brought out in the open and subjected to debate. We hope that the following article will have that effect. What we have done is identify problems and solutions affecting Washington College and try and group them by what area of the campus is affected by each. Problems with security, parking, the alcohol policy, Health Services, disparities in dorm condition and amenities, the dining hall, the smoking policy, the business office, and the bookstore seem to be the main concerns of the student body. Those areas are the topics under which our complaints are classified.

However, by no means does the list of gripes mean that we are dissatisfied with the school in general. There are many, many positive aspects of WAC that outweigh the negatives. For example, the general appearance of the campus is incredible; visitors here are awed that such a small school can look so cohesive, planned, and historic. The atmosphere is extremely conducive to studying and gives students a feeling of belonging to a historic institution. The phone system and computer network are wonderful, aiding in both communication and the ability to study. Both the staff and faculty are friendly, caring, personal and responsive. Many professors and other members of the staff go out of their way to be especially caring and helpful — for example, by inviting students to their homes for dinner. Unfortunately, however, these positive points are clouded by numerous small problems that add up and make Washington seem less like the outstanding college that it is.

Probably the most prevalent complaint on campus now is with security. Examples of misguided policies, unfair and/or unnecessary enforcement, and police-state tactics are all too common. Two anecdotes come to mind that demonstrate the problems students have been having with the WC security force this year. The first occurred this weekend when we noticed for the first time a security officer walking around dressed completely from head-to-toe, in black, including a black hat; his outfit made him look like a F.B.I. agent or member of a S.W.A.T. team. His walkie-talkie was inexplicably on a bandoleer that appeared at a glance like something one might use to hold a pistol or ammo for a machine gun. We cannot understand why security wants to intimidate us instead of working with us; in years past it seemed like the latter was true-- but this year there is a definite intimidating aura to the department.

Another example occurred this weekend when, from what we gather, someone smashed a light bulb somewhere on campus. Three policemen with their shotguns at the ready stormed into Somerset to apprehend their suspect. Why is this? Are shotguns ever really

Who makes the final decision?

What does it take to get thrown out of this place?

Eve Zartman

As someone who is involved in the judicial process at Washington College, I have been reluctant to respond to President Trout's recent decision to rescend a ruling of the campus judiciary. The important ramifications of Trout's decision have obliged me to speak up on this issue.

In this administration petrified to let people go? Are we so desperate for students for their talents or money that we can not uphold to our standards? We are once again faced with a case of a member of the administration giving in so that another student graduates without being penalized for their actions. The most disturbing aspect of this is that President will not even discuss the matter or justify his actions to the students involved in the judicial process. The President there is no mandate in the College's regulations for the President to justify his descision to the campus judiciary, but I feel the student body deserves some explanation.

It is a widely known that there are students who seem to have been on Academic Probation since their freshman year and yet have never been kicked out. We also know of students that should have been dismissed from this college on reasonable grounds, but were only suspended and given a chance to come back the next semester. I am not saying that everyone does not deserve a second chance, but when a second offense occurs the penalties should be stricter. The case that just came before SCC (Student Conduct Council) and then the ACJ (All Campus Judiciary) is a blatant example of the system gone wrong. (The information concerning the details of the case were in last weeks Elm which is on reserve at the library.)

It is not the case that is in question, but the ramifications and how the case was handled by President Trout. In this case the SCC and ACJ wanted to insist on a tougher standard for a second offense This is the way that our common law system works, but it was overridden by President Trout. The right to overturn a decision is within the President's rights according to our constitution, but the circumstances for the decision and its ramifications on the judicial system of the College are the matter in question.

Every student has the right to have a decision concerning their misconduct to be rendered by a council of their peers and that decision should be final. Our current system allows that the final appeal of such a case be given to the President and whatever the President's decision is, is final. As a member of the Honor Code Committee I want to see that system changed, for this example in itself proves why the system is wrong. This overturn sends a message to the students and the administrators involved in the process that President Trout does not care about their decisions. Whether that message is true or not I do not know, because he has made no public statement concerning the matter.

> I can no longer inform students what sorts of conduct are grounds for dismissal from Washington College, because after this decision no one can even say for certain what the grounds for dismissal from Washington College are.

The past record of overturnings has been few and far between. President Trout has not overturned any of the judicial system's decisions in the past, and there has not been a case that has been appealed to by the administration since President Cater. President Cater overturned only one decision during his administration, and that was on the grounds that he felt that the sentence was too heavy for a first time offender. When this decision was made, Cater discussed the matter with the members of the SCC and ACJ, and the matter settled down. Given this precedent, shouldn't the student body be accorded the same right to this decision, without any justification or consultation to the people involved in the judicial process, renders the entire student body powerless in judiciary matters.

The SCC decided upon suspension, which is the most lenient action that they could have rendered, given the decisions in past cases involving second-time offenders. If President Trout feels the decision was too harsh then he goes against the whole basis of system of our judiciary branch here at the school, as well as the judiciary branch of our entire country. But if he feels the decision was too harsh and cares to turn against the common law practice, he should tell us this so that we can be the system for the future.

with glass windows and fire extinguishers. On the way to turning in old papers we got from a "study file" or right out of the text book, we will yell some obscenities at minorities. That's what classes are at Washington College means. And if anyone tries to stop you, tell them to take it up with the Student Conduct Council, who now hold the power equivalent to that of a wet piece of lettuce.

But most of all, and think about this over the turkey leftovers and pumpkin pie, I am thankful, as the antics of the Washington College Administration over the past few weeks illustrate, that a fish still rots from the head down. Drive safely. Ω

Last week this column addressed commercialism. I would like to continue to discuss this theme, but in a different way. I find it extraordinarily ironic that most, if not all of the 50th anniversary organizations that exist are not living up to their ideals. In fact, they seem to be succumbing to the commercialism, not capitalism, that has become trendy lately. Let me explain.

The other day, along one of my many journeys around beautiful, downtown Washington College, I came across a stack, not the stack mind you, of unaddressed Greenpeace mailings. Being interested in the idea behind Greenpeace, I picked up one of these mailings and, much to my dismay, I realized that it was a catalog filled with beautiful, over-priced items that any individual could purchase. I later found that a portion of the proceeds from the purchase of one of these beautiful, over-priced items will help Greenpeace and other environmental organizations in fighting for their causes.

"I find it hilarious that these environmental organizations are trying to fight environmental waste by contributing to the environmental waste."

I am intimated on the environmental causes that this purchase would be supporting. I believe that the environmental movement is a noble cause and I try to help out in any way that I can, i.e. recycling, energy conservation, etc., but I believe that things have gotten out of hand. Not only am I, on any given day, able to walk into Central Services and find mass mailings of catalogs, information, and solicitations, but printed matter concerning these so-called "environmental" organizations, but I am accosted at my mailbox by these same organizations with pounds upon pounds of literature trying to join the fight against environmental waste by sending my donation quickly.

I find it ironic that these environmental organizations are wasting high environmental waste by generating environmental waste. Essentially, they are cutting down the rainforests in order to save the rainforests. They say that they are using recycled paper, but how can we be sure? What is the point of recycling paper if these groups are just going to use it to produce these unnecessary mailings that most people become quick of receiving? I wonder however that their names were submitted to some mailing list?

I've had it. I am no longer going to try to be environmentally conscious. I am sick and tired of receiving information that tells me that I am a bad person for driving a car, smoking cigarettes, and taking too many long showers. I love to do all of these things. And who are these environmental organizations to tell me that? I can no longer enjoy the few things that actually brighten this dismal world in which I exist when they are spending millions of dollars to save a world that will survive the millions of years after the human race has destroyed itself and its surroundings. Get off of your soapboxes and realize that you are fighting a losing battle. Or rather, you are fighting the battle in a way that urges the non-committed individuals to be your adversaries. Instead of annoying the common major consumer (evil) that probably knows all of the information that you are force-feeding, go after the true offenders of the "environmental code" that you yourselves have broken, like the government or the Disney Corporation.

And for those of you that are as annoyed as I am, I urge you to start a letter writing campaign to these organizations telling them what you think. Just do as I do. Every time that I receive another of these mailings, I go to my room and find a copy of one of the many all-campus blanket mailings that I have received over the past four years, especially the one from President Trout, nixing the all-campus mailing thing, and explain to them that they should look at an example of real environmental waste management and follow their examples. Just think, if they adopted the method that Washington College has adopted, everyone in the entire world will get all of the mail that they neither want nor need.

Sure, a letter writing campaign would further add to the waste but maybe these environmental organizations will realize the error of their ways and at least I would not have to go to my mailbox in order to see it Ω

Guns Aren't Stupid, People Are Stupid

Cops have been in and around Caroline almost every night for the past week. The other night, two guys burst out of the building with a cop in hot pursuit on foot. It was a quiet night in the Lit House, and the scenic view of the police searching the yard with flashlights was complemented nicely by the broken glass on the ground.

You wanna hear something really stupid? Haines Firearms, owned by Security Operations Supervisor Sgt. Ken Haines. Is apparently having a sale. Now, it's not stupid that they're having a sale. Any business major can tell you that the benefits of advertising discounts outweigh any money lost on the discount. That's not what I'm talking about.

I'm talking about the reason why I know about this sale: it's advertised in a flyer posted on the bulletin board outside the dining hall. Now, does this seem goofy to anyone else but me? That one of the commanding officers of Security would advertise for sale? Which has nothing to do with my opinions on firearms. This has to do with the fact that they are illegal on campus.

Fireworks regulations were re-stated and clarified after the October 1989 incident in which SGA President Stu Neiman, while reportedly cleaning one of his many weapons, shot himself in the foot.

Regulations state that no firearm can be kept on campus. Hunters who wish to register their rifles or shotguns with Security may then store them in the vault in the business office, where they can be signed out and then returned for safekeeping. Remember, this is safety not only from the student with the gun, but for him also. Fireworks are banned, and incidentally are illegal without a special event permit issued by the State of Maryland.

Now, if I were second or third in charge of Campus Security, and I knew the rules about guns, and I wanted to keep my students safe because that was my job, then I wouldn't advertise a gun sale on campus. Duh. Would it matter if I owned the gun shop? Absolutely. I'd be doubly sure not to advertise it on campus, because I'd feel even worse if it were my fault. Indirectly, there was a gun on campus that got fired, for whatever reason.

You wanna hear something else really stupid? At least four windows have been shot out of Caroline House, south face and bathrooms. Isn't there anything better to do on a Saturday night than shoot out windows? No suspects have been named in the five separate incidents; there is a possibility that it was the same two guys who came back to break out a bunch of lights.

I'm not upset about this just because I, too, live in Caroline. I just happen to think that it's a pretty stupid idea to paint a weapon at a building people live in. I felt the same way my sophomore year when three porch windows were shot out over a period of days from the front of the Lit House. Those guys were caught because the trajectory of the pellets corresponded to Kent House, and one of the windows in Kent first floor north had some flare ones hanging under it. Why? Because people are stupid, especially when they think they won't get caught doing something.

It's the same situation now as then: one or more suspects, using either a pellet gun or a wrist rocket (in fact it turned out to be the latter, and it looks like this is one as well), are shooting at windows. It was bad enough at the Lit House, when double-paned, rather thick porch windows were the target. But someone's room? I don't know if there was a specific target the people wanted to terrorize, and I don't particularly care.

[Note: the day after this article was written, four holes were found shot through the mostly-glass wall of the Literary House Press, on the side that faces Caroline. -jtl]

But this is the same building whose third-floor lounge is papered in beer-case cardboard, and whose second floor residents (no, not all of them) thought it would be funny to throw everyone's toothbrush in the toilet and then shit on them.

Now, I'm not saying that stupid things Number One and Two are equal, but it's kind of amusing, in a sordid way, that they happened the same week.

It seems that a pronounced lack of respect for both property and safety has festered and swollen into a malicious intent to destroy. I hope these guys are caught, but if they are, it really won't matter. Boys will be boys, I suppose. Especially if they play a sport. I'm not saying athletes are inherently evil. But, as recent events have shown us, the ones who are encouraged to be so by some other than our President. Ω

by Tanya Allen

And so a gigantic Great Blue Whale, symbol of Washington College's obsession with looking good to the outside world (review boards, alumni, etc.) swallowed the S.G.A., Mark Murphy, and then the rest of the campus. It was a very sad day for Washington College, but the Gigantic Blue Whale was happy, and swam off through the Chester River, contentedly murmuring "Blub, Blub," and some of the most fun-to-say names of Washington College: "Bob Brown, Dean Gene Wubbels, Randy Noonan, Dale Daigle, Frank Frisbie, Vistic Wurts. Blub, blub."

To entertain themselves while imprisoned in the belly of the Great Blue Whale, the WC students/faculty/staff/aquatic sea creatures began to have a competition to see who could tell the best fish story.

"Once upon a time," a Cod began, "There was a school of fish. This school was very much like our own beloved school, although it had completely lost its sole—unlike WAC, which is only in the early stages of losing. Let me tell you a little bit about how this other school began to lose itself:"

"This school started off by being very small—small enough that anyone who wanted to make a difference and bring a campus leader or personality could do so; where any project a student wanted to start could be pushed through, if he or she could find other students to help and could get the S.G.A. or other campus organizations to fund them. It started off as a place where students felt that their opinions mattered, where they felt comfortable talking with each other, with their R.A.'s, with members of the faculty and the administration. It had places where student opinions could be voiced: a student newspaper, a "response board" on one of the bulletin boards in its main classroom building, an SGA, a Student Conduct Council....It was a place where the students felt cared for, supported, and most importantly, respected. It was a good, good place.

"But then...some rather...fishy things began happening. A popular professor was fired because a review board said his department was having complexion problems. (The opinions of the professor's students were not taken into account when making this decision.) A President overturned a ruling of the All-Campus Judiciary, without taking the time to explain why. This undermined the authority of a group called the SCC and sent out another message to students that, although they were encouraged to voice their opinions, those opinions didn't actually count. The Deans of Students, without consulting an organization called the "Gay and Lesbian Task Force," decided to act on its behalf to send out a request to all R.A.'s. This request asked them to "....keep a log of any/all incidents or evidence of gender, race, homophobic or anti-physical disability concerns on your floor and building." Although the Deans did not the R.A.'s to report names, their request conjured up thoughts of "thought police" and, although it was (hopefully) not followed by many R.A.'s, made students distrust their residential assistants even more than many of them did already.

"By doing all these things and more, the school began making some of its students jump to the conclusion that student opinions were unimportant and sometimes dangerous, and should be monitered.

"Of course, the school may actually have had very legitimate reasons for doing all of these things, but because it did not bother to explain its reasoning well enough, or to involve students in its decision-making process, it caused its students to become confused, frustrated, and angry, and made them start to feel almost a little helpless, as though they were being swallowed up by something huge and dark and uncaring....It was a strange place, this school, which placed such an emphasis on training students in how to express themselves, but didn't explain their own decisions enough to them in turn...." intention is not to make that job any harder. However, I would like to respond to your repeal of the All Campus Judiciary Committee regarding the recent case involving theft from the Bookstore. I would not like to question your final power over the case. I believe that it should be one of the privileges and difficulties of the position of President to have this power. I simply question your lack of communication with the All Campus Judiciary Committee and Student Conduct Council (who made the original decision regarding the case) regarding the reasoning behind your decision. In my opinion, to overturn the decisions of both groups without providing reasoning effectively nullifies the power of the groups and the very reason for having them. If the President does not oblige himself to discuss his reasons for reversing the decision of these groups, then there really is no necessity for the existence of these groups as hearing committes, and all cases should go straight to the President. I sincerely hope that you do not believe that campus judiciary matters should be handled in this way. I know I do not. Perhaps in the future the President should be obliged to discuss his final decision with the student committees. Again, I am not questioning your power, only the manner in which it has been exercised. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
Thane P. Glenn
All Campus
Judiciary Committee.

Editor's note: the following is a letter which has been sent to President Trout.

Dear President Trout.

I transferred to Washington College last year. The transition has been a difficult one due to distribution requirements, nevertheless the student body has been wonderful in making me feel a part of this campus. I have become an active member in many clubs and organizations as well as the SGA. It wasn't until this Fall, however, that I was asked by my peers to be a member of the Student Conduct Council. I considered this a great honor, although now I am not so sure that it is.

It was my decision to leave my previous school because I felt the extremely liberal policies regarding student misconduct I chose Washington College not only for its diverse student body and exceptional faculty, but for its commitment to the Honor Code. Yet due to your decision two weeks ago, overturning our SCC ruling in favor of a students suspension, I feel as though the Honor Code will now be taken less seriously. I am fully aware that you reserve the right to make final rulings over all matters, but I do not think it is right for you to make those decisions without offering some sort of explanation to the SCC and ACJ. We have all worked very hard to uphold the student judicial process concerning this and other cases. It is because of our dedication to Washington College's Honor Code that we have met twice since that ruling to discuss this serious matter. When you said that you would not meet with us, it only left us feeling disillusioned.

I have spoken with other students who now feel as though the SCC and ACJ are of little importance to the college. I do not think you understand what your decision has done to undermine and belittle this campus' once-powerful judiciary system. I think we deserve the right to meet with you in order to voice the opinions held by our student body, but to also learn from what has occurred so that we may be better prepared to handle a situation like this if one should arise in the future.

Sincerely,
Joy T. Yarusi

To the Editor:

As a member of the All Campus Judiciary, representing the faculty, I would like to say that I believe that President Trout acted wisely and in keeping with one of his functions as President of the College in overturning a recent decision of that body and of the Student Conduct Council. This is a very complex case which goes far beyond the simple "facts" presented in last week's article in the Elm. The campus judiciary bodies chose to judge the case purely on the basis of the letter of the law, and perhaps that is precisely what we should expect from them. Thus, in praising Dr. Trout's decision, I am not attacking the campus judiciary process.

I sat on the Judiciary, as I have said above, and even though I disagreed with the majority decision, I felt that everyone gave the case a thorough hearing and acted in good faith and in accordance with the letter of the law. Dr. Trout, on the other hand, in his position as President of the College chose to look at the case within a different context, that of the impact of the judgement on the life and the future of an individual student. He chose, I believe to consider what might be a more appropriate punishment, given the nature and circumstances of the offense. Very legitimately, I believe, he came to a different decision. In my view his action was both completely legal and wonderfully compassionate. Perhaps it is true that this kind of action is not possible in the judicial workings of the "real" world; but I, for one, am glad that we live and operate within a system here, where such decisions can be made. I believe that the President has acted judiciously and mercifully in considering an individual case within its own context. I am sure that his intention was not to "snub" the campus judicial process nor to in any sense to weaken the authority of our judicial bodies. The fact that this has not happened before (in the words of a student member of the All Campus Judiciary quoted in the Nov. 12 article) is, I believe, sufficient evidence of the uniqueness of the circumstances of this case and of the seriousness with which the President regards the judicial processes of the campus community.

Sincerely,
George R. Shivers

Editor's note: the following is a letter from President Trout to the Student Conduct Council and the All-Campus Judiciary

Several of you have written me to express dismay over my recent decision to modify All-Campus Judiciary's recommendation on a disciplinary case that came to the Board on appeal.

Harsh things have been said. By failing to uphold ACJ's recommendation, I have undermined the Washington College honor code. Indeed, I must not care about the honor code. In a letter to the Elm, one of you claimed to have been "humiliated by [my] verdict." Some feel the offender walked away "virtually unharmed." Moreover, it has been argued that I owe a public explanation of my findings in the case. It has particularly pained me to learn there is "a feeling that there exists a lack of openness in [my] relationship with the students." Ouch! Double ouch!

Cases that come before All-Campus Judiciary are highly confidential, and for that reason I am constrained in what I might want to say were my motive solely to defend the reasonableness of the conclusions I eventually reached. Surely the community will understand, though, that we are not talking here only about procedures, or abstract principles of justice, but about another human being who has paid what I view as a very heavy price indeed.

Much has been made of the fact that the case in question involved a second offense and therefore the punishment must be draconian. In my mind there are various degrees of honor code violation, and in any event either the SCC nor the ACJ looked at the first offense. In this instance, faculty directly involved argued strenuously that the case never should have gone to the ACJ in the first place but should have been left to them to be resolved. In the second instance of alleged honor code violation, I believe there were mitigating circumstances that were not sufficiently brought to light, partly because the appellant did a poor job of presenting his case and partly because ACJ largely missed what I came to regard as a crucial piece of evidence.

If in our judicial proceedings the President is empowered by the Board of Visitors and Governors to act in the court of last resort, then it stands to reason he has discretionary authority. This, in turn, suggests there may come a moment when the President is not comfortable with the recommendation he receives. To overturn, or in this instance modify, an ACJ recommendation, the President must be sure of his ground. You should know that in my three years at the helm, several cases have come to me on appeal, yet this is the first in which I have not been comfortable with the ACJ's finding. It does not mean I do not have confidence in the Student Conduct Council or the All-Campus Judiciary. I most emphatically does not mean I do not believe in an honor code. It surely does not mean that a student close to graduation is somehow immune from punishment, as some have suggested. In this instance, it does not mean the student "walks away virtually unharmed."

Since informing you of my judgment in this matter, I have talked to those of you who have asked to see me, and I will continue to do so. I have on more than one occasion expressed a willingness to work with the SGA's ad hoc committee on the honor code, and I repeat that offer. I will continue to hold President's Forums, and I have never declined an invitation to speak to the SGA. No Elm reporter indeed no student or faculty member, has ever found my door closed. I have no intention of changing this policy.

necessary on this campus? When was the last time a student piddled on security? The police presence on and around campus has been ridiculous enough — we don't need to see them whipping out shotguns because someone snuck into dining hall without showing their ID. Additionally, we have heard reports of police dogs sniffing cars in the parking lots — again, we aren't going to school in Compton. We're in Chestertown, and real threats to security here are extremely rare. Police and security have developed a confrontational attitude toward the students when the fact is we are just that — students, not criminals.

The effect of these new 'crack down' tactics is that real problems are more difficult to solve because of the lack of student/security communication and cooperation. We now do not answer our door if security is there for fear that they will arbitrarily decide to harass us. This weekend, the security department was apparently trying to gather information on someone who has been firing pellets through windows in our dorm (Caroline) and knocked on our door to talk to us; we did not answer the door and therefore were unable to render assistance to their investigation. The important point here is that students seem to generally feel like security is out to get them, not to help them. This must be changed.

Finally, it seems like security does execute one duty to perfection — giving out parking tickets. There is definitely a parking crunch, but preventing people from parking in the lot behind Health Services (the doctor needs to park there for the hour he's on campus) makes no sense. Ticketing students for that offense is unnecessary, is pointless and unfair. In general, we feel that the administration needs to think very carefully about what security is trying to accomplish and their methods in doing so.

The next related issue is the difficulty in having parties and the alcohol policy. It is nearly impossible to have any sort of gathering with alcohol here anymore. Either the sponsors of the event have to pay for all the alcohol and give it away, or they must figure out a way to illegally circumvent the rules. I think everyone would agree that parties are a positive thing and that the administration should encourage socialization and responsible drinking. This is not happening.

What is happening is that the entire campus is going out to the bars instead of staying on campus. This result of the alcohol policy should be the last thing the administration wants. If you go to the bars, you are wasting your money, you're encouraged to get extremely drunk (because going there for a single beer would be a waste of money for most of us), and, most importantly, you're encouraged to drive drunk. It's only a matter of time before one of us is tragically injured or killed driving back from the bars — and indeed, there has been a spate of D.U.I. arrests recently.

Also, kegs need to be re-legalized in certain situations. It simply makes no sense that they are not to have a party, you have to throw away your money on canned beer that creates more trash, solid waste, and costs exponentially more than kegs, and instead of allowing them in individual rooms, but if Theta Chi wants to throw a party in Dorchester, they should be allowed to register a keg or two. Let's be straight — the alcohol policy doesn't stop anyone who wants to from drinking, and therefore the school should step trying to enforce unenforceable rules and concentrate on encouraging responsible drinking.

Another current problem on campus, which has become a major concern, is Health Services. Although the nursing staff has been extremely friendly and helpful, the doctors have given several misdiagnoses of late. In one case, a student was told at first she only had a minor rash. After being blown off, she returned later and was told she possibly had scarlet fever and should be quarantined. To think that the facilities are satisfactory. They aren't.

Also, for some strange reason, although it was seventy degrees out today, the heaters arbitrarily kicked in throughout the day. Does maintenance just flip a coin instead of using a thermostat? What controls the temperature? Either Dorchester and Cecil have individual thermostats, but we're on an antiquated steam-heat system. We'd rather buy our own heater and turn these damn things off.

There are also some safety issues involved with this system. The water here is heinous, and we're sure this holds true campus-wide. We'd honestly appreciate EPA water-quality testing, because particulate matter and a distinctive odor in our drinking water does not seem right for a substance essentially clear and odor-free.

A perennial favorite thing to bitch about is the dining hall. We cannot judge or complain about whether the food tastes good or not; this is subjective,largely cost-related and understandable. It's simply fun to complain about. However, a few issues, we believe, need to be brought to attention.

A few minor ones first. The milk MUST be kept filled; the weird aftertaste aside, rarely is there enough milk in all of the containers and if there is, it takes up to a minute to fill your cup (unless you enjoy that old-time favorite medley of skim/chocolate/2%/whole/goat's milk you try to find the fastest flowing spigot). Also, why can't they put a strainer out next to the pasta (not a spoon with holes in it — a real strainer) so that we can avoid having spaghetti soup?

There are two major complaints we have. One, the support for vegetarians is improving, and the WC dining hall staff has been extremely helpful particularly lately, but both of us, as vegetarians, have had problems. On one occasion we asked a supervisor if there was meat in an entree. She went back and 'checked,' telling one of us that there was not. We ate some and found shrimp in it. Shrimp is meat. We're vegetarians. We don't eat meat. Don't lie to us. And we probably would it be, as we've suggested on the napkin board, to establish a definite mark for vegetarian entrees — for instance, a red "V" — that would without question do away. be put on the card identifying the food? This would take the guesswork out of someone's busy schedule and certainly seems worth the time.

The other problem is with hours. We understand that this is partially contractual, but still, only having a hot breakfast until 8:30 when many people have no reason to be awake that early is unfair. Also, if you have class ending at 1:20, by the time you get to the dining hall they've usually stopped cooking the entrees and, unless you like it's bagels 'n salad time. Stopping dinner at 5:45 on Sunday leaves most of us starving at 10 when we're studying.

Another department whose hours could stand improvement is the business office. Giving its employees a two hour lunch break (and leaving us only two separated afternoon hours to cash checks) is a little exorbitant. Also, on one occasion in September, one of us attempted to cash a check at 3:30 in order to buy nicotine patches to quit smoking. They couldn't find anyone to open it, so it was not, and the weekend long "itis" fit certainly proved to be enjoyable. That ain't right. If the hours stay as they are, they better be damn sure that someone is available.

The smoking policy has room for inprovement, also. Many of us would appreciate a smoking section in the dining hall (which could be placed in a third of the dining hall), perhaps with a ceiling mounted air-cleaner similar to the one in the Old Wharf Inn to avoid bothering those non-smokers who don't want to breath smoke as they eat. Smoking only in this section should be enforced with fines, but it should be allowed. We think most smokers would be understanding about this. Also, we'd appreciate being able to smoke in the new student center. It may well prove to be a failure as a center for social interaction if there is no smoking). As long as the deli is in the CAC, we should be able to smoke there, too.

Finally, the bookstore is a joke. It looks beautiful and has quite a selection for the size of our school, but the CD selection bears no relation to the tastes of the student body, and the prices are nothing short of highway robbery (e.g., "U2's greatest hits, on sale for limited time, only $23.95 on cassette"). Maybe there should be a student panel to determine which CDs to order, meeting each month. We imagine that many students would happily volunteer to serve on this panel; perhaps they could get a 10 percent discount on their CD purchases for doing so. We know that the bookstore is unlikely to stock many Dokken or Hammer CDs in the next ten years; they would definitely sell fifty copies of each of the Samples' albums, but have none in stock. Also, perhaps the CD shipments could be stocked more frequently than once every solar eclipse — if more workers are needed, please, hire one of us; we'd be happy to help y'all out (Eric really needs a job).

That would be our comprehensive list of complaints. As we said at the beginning, we love WAC and only hope that it can become both a source of public discussion of these problems. We believe it can and hope it will. Generally, the administration seems to care about us and we have high hopes that they will respond to these complaints in an efficient and compassionate way.

front page. This action was planned at a meeting of art majors and other concerned students in hopes of bring to the attention of the administration their disapproval of the letting go of Andrews. Other methods of protest were discussed and may be put into action in the weeks to come.

According to student leaders involved in the protest, the demonstration was timed to coincide with a meeting of the Long Range Planning Committee, which was scheduled to be held in CAC seminar rooms 1 and 2 at ten o'clock the following Saturday.

That Saturday morning the Long Range Planning Committee meeting was relocated to Hynson Lounge at the last minute. At some point, the police tape and Elm issues which had been posted were removed. It also rained later in the day, so that by the time the Committee meeting let out, the chalk markings were largely obscured. It is not known why the Long Range Planning Committee meeting was moved to Hynson Lounge, but some of the student involved in the protest feel that it was a direct result of their efforts. Ω understandable concerns about the cost." Currently, the cost is $60 per monitor. The monitors currently employed by the College for these events are off-duty police officers.

Student concerns about the monitor system have arisen; students holding parties have had to go to great lengths to demonstrate conclusively that they have taken steps to ensure that non-WC students and underage locals are excluded from the party.

In the future, Roderick offered, the party monitor program might be extended so that "trusted students" might also work in conjunction with the security department, which would be much more cost-effective than the current policy. "We've only been tossing the idea around, though," Roderick concluded that this idea would be brought up at a future, as-yet unscheduled meeting. Ω

Alumna Named USAIA Counselor

Donna Marie Oglesby assumed the position of Counselor of the Agency on August 16. Ms. Oglesby spent the past academic year at the Edward R. Murrow Rellow at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University. From 1988 to 1992 she was the Counselor for Public Affairs at the American Embassy in Bangkok.

Entering USAIA in 1970, Ms. Oglesby was first assigned to Rio de Janeiro. Following a tour in Vienna from 1975-77 as Assistant Cultural Affairs Officer, Ms. Oglesby was again posted to Latin America as Cultural Affairs Officer in San Salvador from 1978-79 and Public Affairs Officer in Asuncion from 1979-82. Shge returned from the field to serve as the Chief of the AR Wire Service. In 1985, she was named the Deputy Director of USAIA's Office of American Republics Affairs and assumed the position of Director of that office the following year. Ms. Oglesby was awarded a Presidential Meritorius Award in 1988 for her service directing the Office of American Republics Affairs.

For her outstanding work as the Director of the President's Youth Exchange Initiative from 1983-85, Ms. Oglesby received the Agency's Superior Honor Award in 1985.

Donna Marie Oglesby is a graduate of Washington College and received a Master's Degree in International Affairs from Columbia University. She has also been a grantee in Japanese Studies in the East-West Center in Honolulu. Ω have behavior problems."

Debnam said "The tutors are phenomenal, they're wonderfully dedicated people who give time to work with the kids. We appreciate everything the tutors have done. It's not only rewarding for the children, but for the tutors as well."

Freshman Shana Stauss agrees. "I've tutored before, and I like the organization Target Tutoring provides. They come right after school, it's not on the side. They come ready to do work. It's good for them to take some time out, and the one on one activity makes kids feel special."

The program attracts people who are interested in contributing to society by teaching underprivileged children. Pridgeon is one such individual. She says she is "thinking about applying to Teach for America, which places teachers in schools which are either extremely rural or extremely urban."

Del Nero, the tutor, has already been involved in the Teach for America program. Jen Del Nero '93, who co-founded Target Tutoring with Maria Jerardi and Stephanie Slaughter, is currently teaching in Batesville, Mississippi. Del Nero, who was the SGA President last year, teaches Social Studies for special education high school students. "The resources at my school are extremely limited," Del Nero said in a recent interview with the Elm, "I have no books and no curriculum-I had to devise my own curriculum."

Del Nero said her experience in running the program was "Crazy, chaotic, demanding and absolutely the experience of a lifetime. You had to look at legal liability and all that stuff, which was kind of a pain. But picking up the kids at school and seeing their eyes light up was really rewarding."

Del Nero said "Many of the kids had never even seen an elevator before. It was just neat to hear the Casey center come alive like that, just to hear their laughter ring throughout the halls. It was great to see the kids walk around campus and say 'one day I'll go to college'," and I would always say to myself 'I hope that they'll still be saying that in June'."

In addition to the activities, Target Tutoring also provides the children with a snack. Debnam added that "We plan to continue and expand. The more tutors we have, the more kids we can reach. If anyone is interested in taking part in the tutoring, they can contact myself, Ramsey or anyone else involved in the program." Ω

Should we as appen? The epresentative bodies of the

CC and ACJ The tudents, faculty and dministrative epresentatives have poken on how they feel his should be dealt with.
ut what happened?
n appeal was rendered
the President's Office, nd neither proof of bias or new evidence was resented to him with the ppeal. The student's ims for appeal was that e didn't like the decision.
he assumption is that it is n those grounds the resident overrode the entire legislative system of the college. I can not tell ou what President Trout's grounds for the decision were because he hasn't told anyone.

With a stroke of his en Trout rescinded the decisions which had been ade by 13 other people, which undermines the ork of the two bodies duly stablished to hear cases of tudent discipline. Trout ade the decision to override 13 respected people within the college ommunity who had heard he testimony and facts, for reasons he has never hared with us. Did Trout eally care about the facts?
Did he even really examine he facts? According to the hairman of the SCC, the ranscripts were never given to the President's Office, so it would have been impossible for Trout o have read them. I like everyone else on campus including the heads of the SCC and ACJ, don't know why he made this decision, because no justification was given for it. In the past two years only one case has been overturned by a resident and that was on procedural grounds. Why is this case so different from all the others? What is the point in having a student-run judicial system if its decisions can be overturned without explanation? I trust that the decision made by the Deans of the College and members of the student body was rendered after careful examination of the evidence, and that they conducted their actions in forums that are open to the scrutiny of the college community. We do not hold that same standard of openness when it comes to the Office of the President, and I question why this is the case.

The greater question at hand is not only about what happens to this student, for his case is in and of itself is irrelevant to the principles at stake. I mean no personal attack; what is important is the message that has been sent to the college community by the rendering of this decision.
The judicial process has been stripped of its integrity, thereby making the entire function of this system hollow and meaningless. I can no longer inform students what sorts of conduct are grounds for dismissal from Washington College,
because after this decision no one can even say for certain what the grounds for dismissal from Washington College are.
The President's decision is not to meet with the students on the SCC and ACJ to discuss the matter only compounds this problem.

The message is that what the students decide does not matter, everything is subject to the president's whims. I have no problem with President Trout as a person and do not mean for this to be perceived as a personal attack on him or for him to feel "hurt" by this action I have taken.
As he said he was before about the Ed Schroeder's family's law suit.) This is simply not his actions as the President of Washington College.
President Trout has spoken of the College's long history of integrity and honor, but he seems hypocritical when he lets people who have broken that code go without appropriate punishment. I ask our President to please give us justification for his actions so that we may understand, and so that if wrong was done we may change it for the future. Ω

SGA Bulletin Board Provides Forum for Students

Andrews and Judiciary Decisions Spotlighted

John K. Phoebus

The Student Government Association has set up a bulletin board on the first floor of Bill Smith to encourage students to speak out on campus issues. The board also contains minutes of past SGA meetings and a calendar of events. The topic of the forum this week was twofold. Two questions were put to potential contributors: "What do you think about Tex Andrews being released?" and "Do you agree with President Trout's overturning of the ACJ and SCC's rulings?"

The number of responses was fairly balanced in addressing each question, although the (pr)opponents of the Andrews' decision tended to be more prolific. A majority of sentiment appeared to be negative toward both decisions of the administration, but the manner in which they were articulated was often a negative characterization of many of the parties involved. There were also strong assents supporting both decisions, but these did not constitute a majority of the scrawlings.

The bulletin board is updated weekly by the SGA with new topics each week. Stop by and check it out after class and contribute if so moved.

[News ed. note: Unfortunately both of the issues on the board this week were of a nature that lent to devolution into personal attacks or praise for individuals involved. It is not the policy of the Elm to print unsigned letters to the editor, nor do we record in print what constitutes mere graffiti. We support the efforts of the bulletin board to provide a forum for student opinions. For interested readers, we suggest that you read for yourself the opinions presented on the board. The Elm attempts to characterize student sentiment through interviews and discussions with students. The Elm also welcomes letters to the editor and Open Forum submissions weekly. These must be signed and received in the Elm office on Wednesday by 6:00 p.m.]

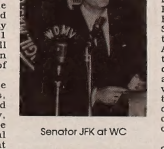
Senator Jack Kennedy Speaks to Washington College Student Body



"Any candidate for the Presidency of the United States," stated Senator John F. Kennedy Wednesday night, May 11 1960, in Russell Gymnasium, "is involved in the serious business of Democracy."

Speaking before about 1000 students, faculty members, and citizens of Kent County, the candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination declared that he felt he had "survived" the results of the recent West Virginia primary. He then discussed primaries briefly, adding that he definitely "would not like to abandon the primary system."

Mr. Kennedy then addressed immediate remarks to college students and graduates, specifically saying that "a career in American politics is an important thing and something to be desired. He charged that politics has become the most neglected of professions today. He declared that one of the problems the United States has to face today is recruiting talented people to enter the political fields.

The Senator from Massachusetts appeared under the sponsorship of the Student Assembly Committee and the International Relations Club. Jim Vitagliano, president of the club, presided at the gathering and introduced the speaker. Dean Robert Kirkwood gave a word of welcome and State Senator George B. Rasin, alumnus of the college, Board member, and Kennedy campaign manager for Kent County, introduced the Democratic dignitaries seated on the platform.

U.S. Problems

Senator JFK at WC

The speaker pointed out three problems which will probably disturb the next president" as 1. Whether a free society and free enterprise can equal and keep pace with the rapid economic growth of Russia. 2. How Western Europe and the United States can best help solve the problems of South America and Asia (can these economically-upset countries solve problems in a democratic method, or will they eventually turn to totalitarianism?). 3. If disarmament negotiations can be effectively continued.

Senator Kennedy charges that the United States has made inadequate progress along this line. He said the United States is constantly changing its position on nuclear testing — that less than 100 people in the entire Government are working on the problems of disarmament.

Referring to his prepared speech, which he otherwise ignored and abandoned during the evening in favor of speaking earnestly and almost extemporaneously, the senator brought up the subject of a proposed Arms Control Research Institute. He explained how such an institute could provide the country with essential information and said he has introduced a bill for establishing such an institute. "This institute," his statement said, "...under the immediate direction of the President . . . will carry on and coordinate all research, development and policy planning needed for a workable disarmament program. It will vastly increase the effort now being put into disarmament."

He said he is "disappointed in President Eisenhower's recent announcement that the United States will begin testing nuclear weapons again."

Disarmament

"At this crucial time," he continued, "just before the Geneva Summit Talks, such an announcement is unfortunate." Senator Kennedy declared it is important to reach an agreement on this matter immediately. "If we fail now," he said, "chances of getting a future agreement on disarmament will be difficult or impossible." He said the responsibility for any failure to disarm effectively should fall clearly on the Soviet Union — not the United States.

The speaker again asked the students present a direct question: "Can a nation in a democratic society endure? Can we continue with such a society at a time when both the U.S. and Russia will be able to destroy in one blast two-thirds of the world's population?" Every citizen, he said should bear his part in working toward keeping such a form of government and society and toward preventing such a catastrophe which may destroy everything. He quoted Abraham Lincoln, who said a country could not exist half slave and half free, and then added his own idea that in his opinion "the World cannot exist half slave and half free."

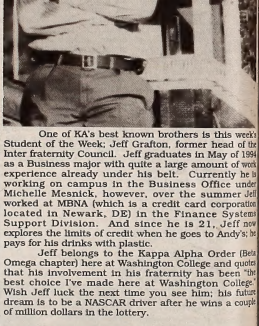
Theodore Parker and Robert Elsenbud raise the flag and lower it once more to half mast in tribute to the late President John F. Kennedy during memorial service held at Washington College on Monday, November 25, 1963.

Editor's note: The following is a student editorial written shortly after the assasination of JFK.

We, as young adults, are perhaps more deeply affected by the death of John Fitzgerald Kennedy than any other portion of the nation, for to us he was a symbol of the strength and vitality of youth. we felt especially close to John Kennedy for he was young, he was strong, and he was courageous. He made youth a period of life that was worthwhile in its own right, and not simply a period before usefulness to one's country. John Kennedy brought us to the forefront and made us a useful and integral part of the United States of America.

The burden of the death of "our" President weigh heavily upon us as we consider the proximity of our assumption of the leadership of thenation. We are faced with the burdens, the problems, and the responsibilities handed to us by our ancestors. We are bewildered when we consider the annihilation of such strength and power by several bullets. (Emphasis not in the original- Ed.) At this point, we view the national affairs with a critical eye, for we may objectively veiw the governmental operations. we are dubious about the fate of our nation, for we have seen our symbol and standard removed. Where shall we look now?



When we ask that question, we must look to ourselves for the answer, for we must, in the words of our late President, "think not of what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country." We must think of John Kennedy's death as a trigger to action. We must make sure that his attempts towards peace and universal brotherhood were not in vain.

J.B.

Dear Diary,
Nov 25

'Yeah, I Threw That!'

Walking over to the Lifetime Fitness Center I noticed it was an unusually warm and quiet November night. There were no sirens, no victory bell being rung, and no cheers coming out of Cain gymnasium. The only sound was the familiar squeak of high tops against the hardwood in Cain. It was basketball practice. I then remembered now is the lull between the fall sports season and the winter sports season.

But as I moved closer to Cain and closer to the Lifetime Fitness Center, there was a low roar. I wondered what was going on. I decided to explore and entered the LFC. Immediately I heard "Get that out of here," and, "In your eye." My curiosity was heightened. So I entered the Field House.

There were Lambda pledges, KA's, Phi Delts, Sigs, and weekend athletes everywhere. Dennis Berry called things to order and the games promptly began at 7 p.m. A plethora of students were playing organized (if you can call it that) basketball. Some players wore stocking caps, others had their tube socks up to their knees. Still others seemed a bit more serious running lay up drills and what is that, a tap drill?

Sports Commentary

I was intrigued so I decided to sit and observe. These guys weren't bad. Darryl, from Baltimore, was bumped and threw up a one handed, fade away prayer that touched nothing but the bottom of the net. Dan Coker joined the entire Lambda pledge team, leaving them with their shorts around their ankles, and soared in for the easy two. Matt Murray, with his washboard stomach, pulled up for a 15 footer off the secondary break, hit the front of the rim, and it rolled in due to the feathery touch. I then looked over to the third court and saw James Alvarez come off of a pick. He was doubled. Geoff Bley, now open, cut to the hole. Alvarez hit him with a good bounce pass and Bley made the easy two before the defense ever had a chance to react. The pick and roll was perfectly executed. Impressive.

Later on that evening I was witness to some more spectacular feats. Chris Murphy, laced it through his legs, then crossed over and hit Brian Tipton on the fast break for a nearly feet-wet dunk. Coming back the other way Brian Rush used a pick to set himself up for the three. Was that Dr. Sam Smith battling for the rebound? On the far court, Chip Helm dumped in twenty-one and Geoff Miller, A.D., was hitting the baby hook. Who is this Basel guy? Most shocking, though, was Ken Ripkin(formerly WACMAN) going coast to coast for two and the foul.

The rest of the night went quickly. The next day I struggled through my morning classes and proceeded to lunch. All of the aforementioned people were exchanging stories about last night's games. I thought it was a bad dream, but it was reality. All of it, except for Matt Murray's washboard stomach.

It's called intramural basketball. A time to make new acquaintances, play on a million dollar floor, and be victims of some pretty interesting tales. People are given the opportunity to do something they have wanted to do for years, but never had the chance.

The unofficial motto for intramural basketball–run, gun, and have fun.

Intramural action–it's fanless. Take a few minutes out of your day and watch a game. Watch these guys try the impossible, and most importantly, listen to the chatter on the court. Who knows, you may have a good laugh or possibly(don't laugh now) be impressed by your friend's athletic ability.

—David George

Editor's Note: David George is a junior math major from Baltimore, Maryland. George is a graduate of Calvert Hall High School where he played varsity basketball. George, last week's Newt's Player of the Week, is one of over one hundred students who play intramural basketball each Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday in the Lifetime Fitness Center through the month of November. Teams have been playing since the beginning of November, and the season will conclude with the playoffs in early December. Division II games are played at 7 and 8 p.m., and Division I games are played at 8 and 9 p.m.–M.M.

Franklin & Marshall Steals Win From Upset-Minded Shoremen

Scott Steinmuller placed second in the 200 butterfly and contributed to the second place 400 medley relay in Saturday's meet.

Matt Murray

One tenth of a second.

With Saturday's entire men's swimming meet riding on the 400 freestyle relay, the Franklin & Marshall men's team of David Barberich, Joseph Thomas, Ryan Walter, and Tom Springer edged out the Washington team of Tim Parent, Dan Woodall, Tyler McCarthy and Dave Cola by one tenth of a second.

Parent and Woodall held the lead through the first two legs, but the lead slowly slipped away with the Diplomats' powerful Walter and Springer winning the race—and the meet—for Franklin & Marshall.

In the end, the final score was 105-97, and the Shoremen swimmers had narrowly missed the biggest upset in school history.

"It would have been the biggest upset for the program," head coach Kim Lessard said. "Dickinson was a big upset for us last year.

"We are going to turn a lot of heads in the conference with this close meet against a conference power like Franklin & Marshall. I think we swam like a real team on Saturday and everyone did their part."

The Diplomats of Franklin & Marshall were expected to be Gettysburg's only challenge in the Centennial Conference this season. However, the young Shoremen, who do not have a senior on their roster, gave the Diplomats a scare in a meet which was supposed to be a rout in favor of the visitors.

It didn't start out that way, though, as the visitors looked every bit the conference power early in the meet.

The standing room only crowd in the Casey Swim Center grew restless when Franklin & Marshall jumped out to a 36-19 lead through the first three events.

The contest started just as it finished with Washington getting touched out in a close relay.

In the 400 medley relay, the team of Peter Ward, Jason Campbell, Scott Steinmuller, and Chris Freisheim fell by seven tenths of a second to the visitors.

The relay team of David Kraft, Julien Gaudion, Mike Bowman, and Michael Davis picked up third place points, but the Shoremen still trailed from the outset.

Washington trailed by an even larger margin after the 1000 freestyle in which Ed Stoner beat Dave Cola by four seconds, and the Diplomats' Brian Bast picked up third place, while Washington's Dave Czekal placed fourth.

Franklin & Marshall widened the gap in the 200 freestyle when Joseph Thomas placed first and Stoner took second. Woodall picked up third for Washington with Kraft placing fourth and Steinmuller fifth.

However, Tim Parent's upset win in the 50 freestyle with Perry Holland picking up fourth place points combined with Peter Ward's win in the 200 individual medley with Freisheim's fourth and Marcello Brutti's fifth pulled Washington back into the meet.

"It was a really good turning point when Peter (Ward) and Tim (Parent) took two firsts in a row," Lessard said. "The 200 (butterfly) is what pulled us ahead."

Trailing 51-42 going into the 200 butterfly, Franklin & Marshall chose not to enter any participants in the race, and Washington's Parent, Steinmuller, and Ryu Kawai swept the event to give the Shoremen a 58-51 lead.

In the 100 freestyle, Franklin & Marshall's Matthew Stretanski placed first, but Jason Campbell placed second and Freisheim finished third to keep a two-point lead for the Shoremen.

Washington lost its lead in the 200 backstroke when the Diplomats' Springer beat out Ward and Shawn Melly took third for the visitors.

However, the Shoremen tied it up at 85 with Dave Cola's win in the 500 freestyle, as Woodall added points for fourth.

With the score tied with only two events remaining, the final relay was almost certain to be decisive.

Campbell placed second in the 200 breaststroke with Julien Gaudion placing third, and Washington trailed 94-91 going into the final race.

Though the relay team's effort fell short, the Shoremen found plenty of positives in their first meet of the season.

"It's the first time I can ever remember having so many fast times at the beginning of the season," Freisheim said. "These are times we were doing at the end of the season last year.

That meet made us realize that ever meet we have is one that we can win, and it's going to make us work harder to try and win the close ones. The scoreboard still has the score up there, so in practice it's a constant reminder of Saturday."

Washington will travel to Western Maryland for their second meet of the season tomorrow.

Athletic Director's Corner

Perhaps it is my undergraduate history orientation that is making me feel the way I do. Ever since college I have had a tendency to view events in terms of their value over time. I'm sure my feelings are also heightened by my sensitivity to gender equity issues that are so much a part of my role as an athletic administrator in the 90's. What, you ask, is all the fuss about? We are about to take a historical step. The Department of Physical Education and Athletics is adding women's basketball as a varsity sport, effective with this 1993-94 season. We have added other student-athletes, something that cannot be said of every campus in our nation today.

And we in this Department care about this fledgling program and ask that the student body give it, what you have always given the men's team, their support at games. There is nothing worse than playing in front of an empty house. So come on down and give your vocal cords some exercise. A crowd of 250 can really make some noise! These players need your presence, particularly at their home opener on November 30 against Franklin and Marshall College, a team that went intercollegiate teams in recent memory. The early eighties saw women's lacrosse and field hockey added to the program. When the Casey Swim Center opened in the mid-eighties, women's swimming was a natural addition. Men's swimming came on board as a varsity program in 1990-91, when men's cross country was dropped after years of declining participation.

All of these program additions were historic events and responded to student interests. They are a part of us now and it's been too easy to forget how young they really are in the big scheme of things. But, for a variety of reasons, they move to add women's basketball seems to be more significant. It has always seemed odd that we had basketball for men but not for women. Yes, a women's basketball program was a prerequisite for our joining the Centennial Conference because we were the only school considered for membership that did not have a women's program. But more that that, it has afforded the Department an opportunity to make a statement about the intercollegiate experience for women. This institution never blinked when the suggestion was made that the women's basketball program should have the same budget as the men's team, which has been around since before the days of the original "Flying Pentagon" in the early 1920's. In other words, this College cares a great deal about its female 19-5 last season and has been a regional power in recent years.

Help us make history and begin to establish new traditions! Come and support the female hoopsters in their inaugural varsity season. I doubt that you will be disappointed...Good luck ladies!

Women's Swimming Falls To Franklin And Marshall By 59

Matt Murray

The women's swimming team faired well on Saturday but fell to Franklin and Marshall.

Led by junior Jodi Woods, who won the 200 individual medley, 100 freestyle, and 200 breaststroke, Franklin & Marshall won 131-72.

The Diplomats won each of the first three races to take a 40-14 lead, and they never looked back.

"If you take away their two All-Americans, who won six races, then we would go head to head with them," head coach Kim Lessard said. "We have depth this year."

In the 400 medley relay, Franklin & Marshall beat Washington's team of Jennifer Green, Colleen Roberts, Jennifer Dow, and Jennifer Voss. The Diplomats also scored third place points in the event to take a 13-4 lead.

In the 1000 freestyle, Franklin & Marshall took first and second with Eileen Kuriger and Amy Peterson finishing third and fourth.

In the 200 freestyle, Kristen Calone won the event for the visitors with Green placing second for Washington. Robin Woolens picked up fifth place points for the Sho'women.

Voss won the only race of the day for Washington when she won the 50 freestyle in 26.85 seconds. Amy Draper and Denise Hakanson also scored points for Washington.

In the 200 individual medley, Woods beat Washington's Roberts. Erin Miller placed fifth for the Sho'women.

In the 200 butterfly, Franklin & Marshall's Deborah Christman won the event in a time of 2:19.88 with Dow, Draper, and Renee Bylkas finishing second, third and fourth for the Sho'women.

Woods and Calone placed first and second for the visitors in the 100 freestyle with Voss placing third and Woolens adding a fifth, and Cathy Francis won the 200 backstroke for Franklin & Marshall with Green, Miller, and Kuriger filling in at second, third, and fourth for Washington.

In the 500 freestyle, Reeb won the event for the Diplomats with Dow placing second, Hakanson finishing third, and Elizabeth Likens scoring one point for her fifth place effort.

Franklin & Marshall finished the meet with wins in the 200 breaststroke and 400 freestyle relay to secure the victory.

"I think we did a really great job considering the competition," Green said. "A lot of people did some really good times, and hopefully we'll only get better."

Washington's next meet will be tomorrow at Western Maryland, and the next home meet will be Tuesday against Salisbury State.

Jennifer Green prepares for her race.

Intramural Basketball Gives Students' Chance To 'Be Like Mike' In The L.F.C.

Organized League Captures Attention Of Nearly One-Third Of College's Men

Matt Murray

What campus activity involves nearly one out of three men on every Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday night through November?

The answer is intramural basketball—an activity which has involved students at Washington College since 1955.

When intramural basketball began here in 1955, 120 men out of the 912 enrolled participated in the program. The competition like this in the classroom. It's a laboratory in itself."

This organized competition has involved Washington students for nearly 40 years with approximately 30 percent of the male student body participating each year.

In Division I, the 1950's and 1960's were owned by the Kappa Alpha Order teams, who won four titles from 1957-1963.

Theta Chi teams dominated the 1970's, winning six of the seven titles from 1973-1979.

Faculty teams controlled the 1980's, winning five championships during the decade.

"Showtime" has been the championship team of the 1990's, as it captured the Division I crown in 1990, 1991, and 1992.

This year, the title is up for grabs in Division I, as "Showtime" has faltered, and it's an opportunity for a whole new dynasty to be born.

However, the important aspect of intramural basketball at Washington is the participation, and the league has expanded to as many as four divisions (men and women) and 22 teams in 1990 to the current two division, 14 team alignment.

The question remains as to why intramural basketball is such a popular event while other intramural sports sputter without participation.

"I think basketball is most popular because you only need five participants, and nationally, basketball is the number one sport for intramurals," Berry said. "When you divide into divisions, it puts everyone on a level playing field, and everybody's competitive."

So why is intramural basketball so popular at Washington College?

Washington students have a variety of reasons for participating including sheer enjoyment, competition, aspiration, relief of stress, release of "trash talking," and the pleasure of playing in an organized league.

"It's fun, and it's a chance to get out there with a group of guys that are close and be competitive," Phi Delta Theta 2B's Ryan Mahoney said. "It's also a chance for the high school stars to get to play again."

Said K7's Sam Berger: "The competition is very good, and people enjoy playing in a competitive and fun league like the one we have here at Washington."

Berger's teammate, Doug Beckworth, pointed to the stress-free environment of intramurals which attracts so many participants.

"There are a lot of people that are good enough to play for the varsity, but some people don't like the structure or the pressure on the varsity," Beckworth said. "Intramurals are a stress relievor. It's organized, so you get to play against people you wouldn't normally play with."

Some participants believe the most attractive aspect of intramural basketball is the chance to "talk trash" with other people from all parts of campus in a forum which only a pick-up basketball game can provide.

"I think that basketball is a lot of talk, and I'd say one out of every three men are trash talkers, and I'm included," High Street's Doug Hoffberger said. "Maybe you should do some trash talking stats, too."

The Cornhuskers' Dave George agreed with Hoffberger.

"The entire game is attitude," George said. "It's the easiest sport to come up with some good one-liners.

"Intramural basketball is the art of trash talking."

However, for the most part, participants are more concerned with shooting the ball than shooting their mouth. Some, like Kappa Alpha's Andrew Parks, hope to relive former glories.

"The reason I play is I didn't play my junior or senior year of high school, and I've found that the level of play in Division I is just good enough to be competitive but not so strong that I can't play," Parks said. "It helps relive those two years of high school I missed."

Other's, like LPD's Bill Griffin and Scott Culpepper and Gis Ihp's Dan Coker, enjoy the current popularity of the National Basketball Association and National Collegiate Athletic Association circuits, and they hope to achieve similar future glories and escape from reality for a little while.

"College basketball is the most popular sport on television, and there aren't too many other sports that you'll see students following," Griffin said. "I couldn't really tell you why, but college basketball

"It gives every regular Joe a chance to be like M.J."

Of the three, Theta Chi has scored the most points for the season with 367, and High Street has the best defense, allowing only 276 points.

Following close behind, K7 sports a 4-3 mark. However, K7 is currently in a tailspin, losing their last three contests.

At 3-4, neither Showtime or Phi Delta Theta are out of the playoff picture. Showtime still hopes to win their fourth straight championship.

The Coaches are still struggling to return to their dominant form of the 1980's, as they have a 2-5 mark so far this season.

Kappa Alpha upset Showtime on Tuesday but still rests in the cellar with a 1-6 record.

In Division II, Phi Delta Theta 2B owns the best record at 6-1. Their only loss came last week against KA2/Mr. Wendal by one point in overtime.

In second place, Gis Ihp leads the league in scoring with 249 points to go with their 5-2 record.

Currently, Theta Chi is in the driver's seat for the third seed in the playoffs with a 4-3 record as of Tuesday.

KA2/Mr. Wendal currently occupies fourth place with a 3-4 mark, but Ken Pipkin's team has hit a recent drought. After a 20-point drubbing of LPD last Thursday, KA2/Mr. Wendal has dropped two straight to Theta Chi and Phi Delta Theta 3B.

In fifth place with a 2-5 record, Phi Delta Theta 3B's only two wins have come against KA2/Mr. Wendal.

LPD occupies the bottom spot in the division with an 0-7 record, as they have only averaged 18.3 points per game this season.

Guckert Thrives On Speed And Ambition In Her Classes And On The Athletic Field

te Sullivan

" If I were an animal I'd a cheetah...or a panther. omething that is quick or st. That is one of the ings I've always felt good bout athletically, my eed, my ambition."

That alone paints an curate picture of senior nnée Guckert. Guckert s been one of the standing student letes of the Washington ollege community since r freshman year.

She came out of Baltimore ounty's Hereford High chool where she was an ll-County and All-Star ld hockey and lacrosse yer.

During her high school areer she also served as tudent Government resident and as a member f the National Honor ociety.

Guckert has continued e success she began in igh school. Her ccomplishments at ashington College clude: Dean's List, neiron Delta Kappa tional Leadership Honor ociety, Peer Education, ll-Campus Judiciary ommittee, Senior ampaign Committee, ditor for Career evelopment Center ewsletter, and Student cademic Board epresentative for ociology.

This long list of activities s enough to make the erage student feel tired st by looking at it.

This list does not include e athletic ccomplishments as a rsity field hockey and crosse player which clude All-Middle Atlantic onference Honors and serving as a co-captain for field hockey for the past two years.

It is quite a list, but one shouldn't look at Guckert and just see a list of accomplishments. There is more to Guckert than just her résumé. She is a person, a woman, a human being who cares about things. One of these things is her family.

" I'm very family-oriented. I'm very close to my family and my friends. I'm still close with friends from high school," said Guckert in a recent interview.

She is also a concerned person. If a list is necessary, look at the list of things she cares about which includes women's issues (yes, she considers herself a feminist), gay and lesbian civil rights, HIV and AIDS. In fact, she worked at The House of Ruth in Baltimore as a legal advocate and accompanying women to civil and criminal court.

" When I hear people talking about the issues I feel strongly about I always express my views," Renée told me.

As a senior, Renée will be graduating in the spring and moving on to law school.

She'll be playing her second and last season of lacrosse, hoping to fair better than her final field hockey season which was cut short by complications from a concussion just two goals short of the school record.

When Guckert walks down to get her degree in May, she'll be leaving with more than a piece of paper and a list of accomplishments; she'll be leaving after making an impact on Washington College because of the kind of person that she is.

Renee Guckert's next goal will be attending law school.

ary Yovanovich (three sists), Jon Paine, and n Reath contributed in offensive zone as well.

John Moreland played well on defense, contributing an assist, as did Miles Barnard (two assists).

Topher Head, who also played well on defense, was controversially, if not unfairly ejected in the third period, which hurt the Shoremen's chances of a late comeback.

In goal, second-year netminder Dave Kraft had 19 saves.

The club's previous games included a 7-1 loss to a 35-man Loyola squad on November 1. Yovanovich scored the club's only goal.

On November 7, the club lost 6-2 to Navy in a wild game which featured goals by Yovanovich and Reardon, and a 45-save performance by Kraft in goal.

Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind
NEWT'S CHESTERTOWN BAR

Timmy, the Tim-meister, Timerama...

This week, the Newt's P.O.W. honor goes out to freshman Tim Parent from Dover, Delaware. He's only the second freshman this year to earn the award, so he must have done something spectacular.

Against Franlin & Marshall, Parent was the catalyst for the Shoremen, as he gave them a chance to win the meet.

Parent pulled the Shoremen back into the meet with his win in the 50 freestyle and gave Washington the lead with his win in the 200 butterfly. He also led off Washington's 400 freestyle relay, and he gave second leg Dan Woodall a lead to work with.

Parent's fantastic NCAA debut gave the Shoremen a shot at the program's biggest upset in its brief history. With such a strong showing in his first meet, Parent turned heads throughout the conference, and he has raised expectations for the future.

In other news...

We have to give out one weekly award--flirt of the week. This week's dubious honor goes to swimmer Perry Holland who shamefully flirted with over a dozen girls in the dining hall in less than ten minutes (give it up, dude).

Now for Kate's honorable mentions: My first honorable mention goes to Women's Crew who placed ninth in the country at the Head of the Charles race in Boston. Go Ladies! I give you my solemn promise for full coverage of every race in the spring. Within this honorable mention I would like to give a special swifty award to Sue Czechowski, who broke her toe doing laundry.

My next honorable mention goes to Senior Rachel Demma for the gold medal in the Olympic sport of sleeping. I would also like to commend Rachel on her outstanding pool playing, when awake, at Newt's hillside, volcanic, miniature golf bar.

My last goes to our own Mr. Magoo, my co-editor, Matt Murray for his warm seat and singing.

Affirmative Action

Faculty to Consider New Proposal

John K. Phoebus

A plan which would ensure that applicant pools for faculty hirings are more diverse will come before the faculty for the second time this year at their December 6 meeting. The Affirmative Action Plan which comes before the faculty next Monday focuses mainly on achieving diversity at Washington College by ensuring that application pools for positions on the faculty are more representative of both minorities and women. The plan, redrafted by the Faculty Affairs Committee, was originally tabled last semester after failing to receive approval of the faculty, even after what was the substantive strength of the proposal had been removed.

This plan targets the consideration of women and minorities for available faculty positions. Administrative and staff affirmative action plans are not currently in place or under consideration. It is speculated that similar plans could follow if the faculty plan is passed. The faculty plan would target, in addition to women, designated minority groups as: Asians, American Indians, Blacks, Hispanics, Native Alaskans, and Native Pacific Islanders.

The plan under consideration would create the position of the Faculty Affirmative Action Officer. This member of the Appointments and Tenure (A&T) Committee would be charged with ensuring that, in most cases, at least one available candidate from the Designated Groups is brought to campus for consideration. Toward the goal of presenting an evaluative annual report on recruitment, the Officer would also keep record of candidates considered for positions. The Officer would also work in association with the Provost and Department chairs to develop hiring strategies to this end.

In a statement attached to the proposed plan, President Charles H. Trout strongly endorses Affirmative Action: "In advocating adoption of an Affirmative Action Plan for Washington College, I have wanted to signal my strong personal commitment to forging a community that is inclusive. I believe it is both right and in our best interest to do so. By adopting this Affirmative Action Plan, the Faculty of Washington College has also welcomed the prospect of a more heterogeneous institution. All realize that we have a long way to go if we are to create the kind of learning community that will assure the very best education for all our students."

Affirmative Action policies are often criticized as being reverse discrimination, establishing unattainable racial and gender quotas, creating excess bureaucracy, or attempting to mend what is already an egalitarian hiring procedure. The plan currently before the Faculty appears to have been designed so that it is relatively immune from these charges. The Plan would only affect search, not hiring procedures of the College. While attempting to increase the diversity of applicant pools, the Plan does not establish quotas and does not place unrealistic objectives on small fields in which few minority candidates exist. The Plan would not create new committees at Washington College, but work within one which already is extant (A&T) and places duties upon a faculty member who would presumably be willing to serve as the Affirmative Action Officer.

A similar plan was proposed and considered by the Faculty last semester. It initially fell to a tie vote, but was "amended" in a manner which cut out all but a vague and general statement on the College's commitment to equal opportunity. Without the substantive portions of the plan to enforce this intention, the amended plan fell to a 14-11 ballot. Further consideration was tabled by the faculty after a motion to do so by Professor Bob Day, effectively saving the plan to be reconsidered in a different form. What is to be considered at the December 6 meeting is the revision of the plan originally presented last semester. Ω

Practice Room

Draft Beer in the Cove

John K. Phoebus

SGA President Jamie Baker and members of the Student Government Association met on Wednesday with the Deans of Students, Security, Student Activities and the Dining Hall to review and reaffirm the College's alcohol policy in light of the January opening of the new student center - recently named the "Cove." While the alcohol policy is covered in the Student Handbook, Baker wished to address issues of specific concern to students in relation to the sale of alcohol at the new student center.

The newly renovated student center will open on January 21 [see related article on page 6]. The policy for the sale and consumption of alcohol in the basement of Hodson Hall was discussed. Beer will be sold to students age 21 and older from the food service area of the student center. The hours for these sales are from 4 p.m. to 11 p.m. Sunday through Thursday, and from 4 p.m. to midnight on Friday and Saturday. If special events (SGA bands, parties) are planned in the main activities room of the student center, alcohol will be sold until one hour before the close of the scheduled event.

A major change in the alcohol sales of the student center is the return of draft beer. Draft beer

Departmental Reviews

Three Chairs Discuss External Review Process

Sometime during the middle of this month, the Music Department will receive the results of the external review it recently underwent. Because of student confusion regarding the external review process, The Elm recently conducted interviews with the heads of three departments that have recently undergone this process: Music, Art and Mathematics.

All academic departments are periodically subject to review, although there is no iron-clad timetable which establishes a mandate for such review. It consists of a self-study, followed by an evaluation by a panel of academics from other institutions. According to Dr. Al Briggs, Chair of the Mathematics Department, the reviews are "Free consultation with colleagues. Invited guests to ask for input from people from outside the institution."

Dr. Garry Clarke, Chair of the Music Department, when asked about the review of his department, said he didn't feel that he received enough notice prior to drafting the self-study portion of the review. "My concern is that we were asked at the end of May to have it ready for October. The Music [Department] had to produce this document on top of a schedule which was already overloaded. While we did produce a document, I didn't consider it to be a self-study, because you don't do a self-study with such short notice over the summer, so in fact I didn't call it a self study."

Clarke said that such short notice isn't the norm here or at other institutions, noting "When the three visiting professors

The Future of WC: Tolerance or Paternalism?

Since the beginning of the year there has been controversy concerning the pornography course offered by Dr. DeProspo. It has held a kind of morbid fascination for me as a student in the course, as a journalist and as someone who loves Washington College.

Dr. Susan Huck has kept up her one-woman crusade to protect the students from DeProspo. Her latest effort has been to publish an article in Conservative Review. In it, she accuses DeProspo of "hiding behind little girl's skirts," of being "locally rather infamous for having discarded his family in order to marry one of his students," and -horror of horrors- of being "politically correct."

It's no wonder DeProspo's a little steamed. Huck's latest round of demagoguery does more than attack DeProspo personally. It is a clear attempt on the part of Huck to smear Washington College in the national media. She dubbed Washington College a "brain laundry."

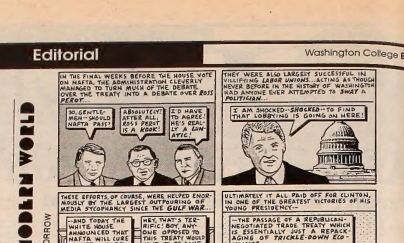
In this Huck does a great disservice to the College and its students. The implication, of course, is that Washington College (which Huck describes as "average-awful liberal") has a secret leftist agenda and is conducting a concerted, programmatic effort to inculpate its students with an anti-American Communist ideology.

Nothing could be further from the truth. During my time here I've seen plenty of political ins! many lively classroom discussions on political issues. I've seen students and professors of every imaginable political bent debate one another on a wide variety of issues. Contrary to what Huck thinks, when this occurs, the students do not capitulate and become utterly convinced simply because it is a professor they are arguing with. Usually, it is a healthy exercise which causes people not to change their convictions, but to think them through more thoroughly.

Students do not come to Washington College as blank slates. Whatever their core values may be once they get here, they are usually firmly entrenched. Beliefs instilled by parents, churches and communities cannot be eradicated by four years of study at a liberal arts college. One would then have to conclude from this that it would be foolish for an institution of higher education to even try.

It is ironic that this dispute should arise from a course offered by DeProspo. As I see it, he, more than any other instructor I know of, goes to great lengths to make it perfectly clear that he does not see his own opinions to be occupying a position of privilege vis a vis the opinions of his students. Naturally I wouldn't expect Huck to understand this. It's not that she's stupid: far from it. She is simply blinded by ideology and an intense hatred of Washington College which verges on monomania. She sees only what she expects to see.

Which brings me to another point. In the aforementioned article, Huck writes: "The student newspaper, currently edited by a self-advertised Communist who was among those thronging into the pron course, reacted in a predictable manner. There were personal insults directed at me, and then the line "how dare an outsider criticize a course, and we are all wonderfully mature people here."



I'm flattered to receive Huck's attention in the Conservative Review. It will probably do wonders for my career. My only regret is that she didn't mention me by name.

Try as I might, I couldn't find the line which she quoted anywhere in the article I wrote for the first issue of the year. I know for a fact that I would never write such a trite snippet. As far as I can tell, there were no personal insults directed at her. I did, however, editorialize on the front page, and believe me I caught hell for it.

At least she did note that the Elm is only currently edited by a Communist. So far as I know, I am the first Communist ever to edit the Elm, and I think that's a distinction she could have mentioned. Since she mentioned that this is a brain laundry, she implies that somehow Washington College transformed me from a nice Baptist boy into a raving Trotskyite.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Indeed, I'm a perfect example of how Washington College is not a brain laundry. None of my "awful-liberal" teachers failed to convert me. They haven't ever tried. Washington College is the kind of place which encourages intellectual diversity, not brainwashing. For me personally it has provided the opportunity to become friends with people I earlier would have written off as class enemies. It has made me more tolerant.

Is Washington College to remain the kind of place that encourages tolerance and personal growth, or is it to become the kind of place that paternalistically restricts the faculty on curricular matters and shields students from the "wrong" kind of knowledge? Only time will tell. Ω

Who Needs It?

The end of the Semester is upon us. The End is near. Our apartments and dorm rooms are stocked with Mountain Dew, Jolt and Vivarin in the attempt to erase the effects of a semester of procrastination in, oh let's say, a week. The usual panic appears as I realize how horrible this semester has been and how far behind I have gotten. The End Of Semester Nightmares have begun to haunt me. I'm sure we've all had one version or another: I walk into class and realize that I haven't been in this class all semester. It's the last day and it's the first time I go in. I didn't remember I had this class. I panic. In one variation or another we've all experienced that feeling of impending doom. Now, in an introspective and, perhaps, 'philosophical' mood I begin to wonder. What does all this matter, really? Good grades will get me into Graduate School (if I decide I do want to go), they will help me keep my scholarships (if I decide I do want to stay here) but do they adequately reflect the knowledge I have acquired? Grading is totally subjective.

Thea Mateau

I may get an A without putting any work into the particular subject or work. I can also get a C and have really dedicated myself and, oh horror of horrors, have learnt something. Maybe what is relevant and important to me is different from what is relevant and important to my Professor. That would make perfect sense considering our experience as human beings has been different. Some people may argue with me that some facts are just Universally accepted as important, but I don't believe in Universal Truth so that basically shatters that. So then, what is the relevance in my future life of a lot of these things I am expected to care about? How adequately do my grades reflect my abilities as a scholar or my worth as a human being??? Should I compromize my beliefs and interrupt my quest for Knowledge in order to memorize irrelevant facts? Which is more important a grade or a grain of knowledge? To me the latter seems to take a place of higher value. Maybe I'm just being hysterical because there is a paper screaming to be written in my apartment, or because I am clueless as to what I need to know for a few of my finals. Maybe. But just think about it. Ponder for a while if you must, as you procrastinate and if you ever figure out, What Does It Matter? Let me know!

At any rate, Good Luck with your Final Examinations. Good Luck preserving your sanity (I haven't been terribly successful, can you tell?). And finally, have a good holiday! It's a wrap. Ω

Student Profile: Tina Lennon

Tina Lennon, a second semester senior from Rye, New York is featured as this week's Student of the Week. Tina is an International Studies major with plans to graduate after this semester. She is an extremely friendly person who claims that if she were to be given the choice between friends and work, she would "undoubtedly pick going out with her friends" before ever choosing any academic functions.

Tina has done some extensive traveling so far, visiting such exotic locales as Russia and Siberia, as well as the better portion of Europe. When her father's job was transferred from NYC to London, her parents and her (she is an only child) moved there for about a year and a half during her high school years, eventually moving back to the States. She says that she still keeps in touch with a couple of the friends that she made when she was living in London, and she used to want to live there until she decided that she would much rather enjoy remaining in the United States. Like most seniors, Tina does not have any long term plans for her future, yet she is excited when asked about graduation. She remarks that no matter what may occur in the future, she will always have fond memories of her college years here at WC.

WC Student Struggles With Severe Depression

Anonymous

There was a storm that evening. The sky was a deep blue, the wind warm and fierce. I stood in the storm for quite some time, fearing the end of the semester which inevitably meant the return home. I tried for months to avoid returning to my family, however met no success.

In my room two hours later, the room was spinning. I curled up in a fetal position on the floor. I had taken more than 70 pills; I lost count. Perspiration poured from my brow and a fever burned throughout my body. Pains stabbed my stomach. I pleaded with God that I die quickly. That was all I wanted — an end to the hell I had lived for nearly four years. For some reason, I knew death would not come. Perhaps it was because peace was not a part of my life. The next thing I knew, I staggered into the bathroom and forced my body to rid itself of the fire that poisoned me.

After hours of throwing-up, I thought I could go on, finish exams and return home. I finished the semester not in the classroom but in a hospital bed fighting both physically and emotionally for control of my life. I had done so much damage to my body that I could have lost my kidneys and liver. The fever and pain persisted for days. My mind was numb, yet I had the will to live.

After hours of throwing-up, I thought I could go on, finish exams and return home. However, that was only the beginning of a long journey which returned me to Chestertown this semester. I finished the semester not in the classroom but in a hospital bed fighting both physically and emotionally for control of my life. I had done so much damage to my body that I could have lost my kidneys and liver. The fever and pain persisted for days. My mind was numb, yet I had the will to live. I begged the doctor not to notify my mother. I told him as an adult, I was my own responsibility. However, there was no way I could take care of myself any longer.

One event after another occurred. The school notified my family, and the following week I entered therapy. I had not been functioning normally for months. I slept continuously. I missed classes and avoided responsibility. Problems without solutions plagued my mind. I searched and searched, but no answers appeared.

I could go on forever, but the gist is that I suffered from severe depression and still do. Once in therapy, I realized that I had been depressed for three years. My parents separated my senior year of high school so I began to depend on myself when troubled. I feared bothering or even hurting my family any further with my troubles. I became silent and pensive. I used to heal myself, but the ways in which I hurt myself far outweighed my ability to heal. I wanted to die and thought about it came, their first comment to me was that they were surprised to be here [so early on in the process.] They said that at his institution the music department had worked on it for a year to discuss the issues involved in the process." Clarke also said that, while as a former Dean he "has been openly critical of any Dean, he was disturbed that the Dean and Provost delayed acting on his department's document for seven weeks after it had been presented to him.

Sue Tessem, Chair of the Art Department, said that she had "plenty of advance warning," to prepare for the review of her department. Tessem said that the review was useful to the department. "I asked the Administration during Cater's presidency to help give the department some direction. Not having gotten that, we continued the emphasis on the studio arts. My conversation with President Trout two years ago was that we hoped that the departmental review would help give us some direction."

Tessem said "It was their recommendation that this should be a four member department, and that the third member should be an art historian. I had asked the College for some direction, and it came back that they wanted to develop Art History. I have no problem with that. I cannot object to hiring a second art historian-I think it's needed."

Tessem said that she felt the application of the recommendations was uneven: "My big problem is that they've got this one big pile of an external review, and they've only acted on studios. They felt that to offer too many independent study courses and that we shouldn't allow students to dictate our curriculum. Their criticism was that it has worn us out a bit. They thought that there was too great a separation between studios concentrating in history [and students concentrating in] studio. They also felt that our budget had been systematically cut."

Tessem expressed a strong aversion to hiring adjuncts, and recommended the same amount of course selection in the studio: "My feeling is that the use of adjuncts have less commitment and limited experience. The quality is uneven." When asked if she expected her workload to increase because of recent changes, Tessem said "Yes. I'd prefer to teach a reduced course offering rather than hire adjuncts, because of the greater consistency. There will be fewer courses offered, but I'll still be possible to concentrate on studio art."

Dr. Briggs said his recent experience with the process in the Math Department was a result of a change in personnel two years ago. "There was an unfavorable tenure decision, which Dr. Dolan was appealing. Since there was a personnel change, we decided to conduct a review to decide the direction the department should go in."

Briggs was disappointed with the results of the review, saying that the recommendations of the outside reviewers "were not stuff we couldn't have come up with in five minutes. I had some fairly specific questions about the computing curriculum, but it wasn't there to address there either. The suggestions I got back were pretty much self-contradictory." Briggs said he did follow up on the recommendation to put together a recruiting package and personnel plan, and added that this was something he had been planning to do for some time anyway.

Briggs said he still has an unresolved problem with the review. The report we [the Mathematics Department] received, it said 'this report contains the following,' and one of the things that it listed was a personnel section. But there wasn't any personnel section." At the time, there was some controversy over this review. The News Editor Amanda Burt ('93) asked Briggs if he would discuss the issue. Briggs refused. According to Briggs, Burt then talked to Dean Wubbels about the missing personnel section: "And she told me, and he later confirmed, that he denied knowing anything about this section. She said to me 'So he just lied to me.'"

In a recent interview with the Elm, Amanda Burt, currently in France, stated: "Last year the Elm did several stories on the external evaluations, of which I wrote one in-depth piece on the scheduled review of the English department. Through the course of my investigation and subsequent evaluation process, I found that there was some question as to whether or not the Administraiton had withheld from the math department, a portion of that department's external review report. Apparently the report contained information on personnel which the administration wanted to conceal because it posed an immediate legal threat to the college. So, in an attempt to follow up on this story I met with Dean Wubbels who told me that Washington College was not in the business of keeping confidential files on anyone. I then made several attempts to contact Briggs on the matter, but he had no knowledge of the Elm, nor to one would talk. Thus, there was no story at the time."

Briggs said that he has been invited to look at the personnel section, but only under the stipulation that the document not leave the Dean's office. Briggs has declined the offer, because he believes that the Mathematics Department should have its own complete copy of the document. "The reason they kept it from me was because of Kaplan's appeal, and the possibility that she might sue. But if she were going to sue, she would have done it by now. I would like, now that it's all over with, to get a copy. We brought these people here to write it and the President and Dean have seen it. The people mentioned in it should know what's been said about them." Ω

Changes at Security

New Training and Personnel Enhance Capability

Rachael Fink

A variety of new and interesting things have happened on campus lately and now we're looking to wrap up this semester and plan for next semester. Of those programs and areas that have seen change, growth and improvement, the Security Department has changed the most dramatically. In an interview with Jerry Roderick, The Elm learned of the new steps our Security Department is taking to make this a safe and comfortable campus.

In addition to increasing the number of part time staff, two new people have joined the full time staff. Mary Robey comes to campus from a rape crisis center where she served as a victims advocate. Roderick says he has "great hopes" for Robey and is glad to be able to offer to the community someone with her type of training. Robey will be instrumental in setting up a student program to deal with some of the issues surrounding the various aspects of rape and its effects on the members of the campus community.

Also new to the staff is Buddy Pinder, formerly a dispatcher for the Kent County 911 service. Pinder is a trained E.M.T. and fire fighter, and in Roderick's words, "a nice asset to the team."

In reviewing the past semester, Roderick was pleased with the work that the team has accomplished. He stated that they had no major problems with the number of social events that happened on campus this semester, and hopes that when the procedures over party registration and planning is ironed out that there will be no further glitches in that particular aspect of campus security. As well as dealing with the normal, day to day security issues, this year's team was able to combat and investigate a rash of obscene phone calls to the women's dorms on campus. Criminal charges have been made and the Cecil County man accused of making the phone calls is awaiting a trial date. Under investigation at this time is a series of thefts, some of which are thought to be related. Because the investigation is still active, Roderick could not be specific about the details of the case but he did indicate that it was a formal criminal investigation which would end in the formal prosecution of the accused.

For next semester, Roderick is planning events centering on self defense, including training on the proper resist of self defense devices such as chemical sprays. He says that the department is going to focus on raising awareness of such issues as date rape and harassment, with guest speakers, training sessions, and the informal chats with the security staff as will be instrumental in that aspect. Roderick is interesting in opening and keeping open the lines of communication between students and his staff, in order to be able to better address the students safety concerns.

In closing, Roderick wants us all to remember that personal safety is a personal issue, and that we should follow the "common sense safety precautions" that we have all been taught. "Follow your instincts," and be safe.

Student Musicians Granted Practice Room in Caroline

Luther W. Dudlich

Starting the week of December 5, the Caroline Basement Practice Room will be reopened for use under the auspices of the Washington College Musicians Union. The fight to allow student musicians to be able to play together once again has been a long and tiring one.

Two years ago, the basement of Caroline was open to anyone obtained a key from security. For about a decade before, the room had been open for the musicians of the College community. Unfortunately, that year, one particular musician (who failed out) liked to play extraordinarily loudly at all hours of the morning. This became quite annoying to the residents of Caroline, myself included. Others had served an important purpose: on-campus student bands such as The Sacred Cows and Guns-n-Noonan were able to practice there and then perform at the school, thus contributing to the social life of Washington College. In addition, other students were able to play purely for fun, and get to know other people through playing.

The next year [1992-93], I found out that the Caroline Room had been closed to our use. In addition someone mistakenly told drummer Randy Noonan that the reason it was closed was that it was contaminated with asbestos. According to Maintenance, there is no asbestos in Caroline.

This year, I went to Geoff Miller to get permission for use of the dance studio again. Unfortunately, he informed me that the space was to become a locker room. This is reasonable; after all, the building exists for the Athletic Department first and foremost. But then I searched for a new home for our community and our equipment. Tawes, Wicomico basement, another room in Caln, the Cardinal lounge, and the CAC basement were all suggested as new homes, but did not work out. It came back to the Caroline room. Dean Maxcy said

Dr. DeProspo Responds to his Critics

Professor Addresses Sue Huck's Campaign Against Pornography Course

Scott Koon

Elm: Exactly what happened in the Pornography class last Tuesday?

DeProspo: About 40 minutes before the class began I was in the classroom setting up the equipment for a class that was to be entirely concerned with visual materials. At that time a person, who I guessed was Susan Huck, came into the classroom and began to distribute written materials on the desks. Because both my lawyer and the College have instructed me that, if she were ever to come into the classroom, I was to immediately leave the classroom and call Security, I left. Security came maybe fifteen minutes later. At that time she was seated outside the classroom in the foyer of the Casey building. They told me that because she wasn't causing any disruption that they were going to leave her there. They went into the classroom and collected the materials she had distributed. She then reentered the classroom and redistributed the materials.

I believe that they (Security) then went into the classroom and collected the materials a second time. She then positioned herself outside the door of the classroom and began handing them to students as they walked into the classroom. Most of the students, I gather, refused the materials. I was not aware of this at the time, I thought that they had all gotten a piece of this. As a result of having to be out of the classroom for the forty-five minutes before class I was unable to set up the material. I contemplated actually canceling the class because of the hassle but, in addition, although I didn't read the materials, I had pictures of the materials read to me, and evidently she was restating even more sharply the accusations she had made against me in the written materials she had stuck under the windshield wipers of the cars many months ago. I gather also that there were further accusations concerning my family and my children in what she had written. I deliberately didn't read any of this material because I felt that, if I had, whatever repose or peace of mind I needed to teach this class would have been totally destroyed. Nonetheless the class ran at what I felt to be fifty percent and I felt the need to apologize to the students because of that. Although she hadn't yelled and screamed or physically accosted me or anyone else, the class had been disrupted by her being there. That's what happened last Tuesday.

Elm: The article "A Skirmish in the Culture War" Dr. Huck distributed was one she has had published in Conservative Review. What do you she think is trying to accomplish by promulgating this material nationally?

DeProspo: I think she wants attention; I think primarily that's what she wants. I think that this is what passes for stimulation for her at the end of what I gather was a fairly empty and barren life. Beyond that, I think she wants to take down the College. Her main object is to do harm to the College, and I think I'm rather secondary to that. Where I'm concerned, I don't think she really wants to do harm. The way that she has distorted material, information that I gave to her, the way that she has twisted things I said, the way she has fabricated things indicates to me that she can't not know what she's doing; she has got to be doing this with a certain kind of gleeful cynicism, I think. She says, as you mentioned in the title of the article, that this is a cultural war, and as far as she's concerned anything is one to keep from the campus. As a result, I think she has no compunctions whatsoever in what she does. I gather that she's enjoying this a great deal.

Elm: Naturally, when something like this goes on, rumors will circulate. One of the things that came to our attention was that the Dean and Provost threatened you with dismissal. Is that true?

DeProspo: The Dean questioned me about this course. The first thing the Dean said to me was that he would resign before he would allow anyone to prevent me from exercising my academic freedom by teaching this course. After that he gave an excellent imitation of a wrap-up who was fundamentally critical of the course being taught at Washington College.

Elm: Was this on the same occasion?

DeProspo: Yes, it was on the same occasion. He then went on later, after this interview, to institute a series of motions through the Academic Council which seemed to be designed to tighten up ways that courses are admitted into the curriculum. Editor's note: The Academic Council, at its first meeting of the year, received changes in procedures from the Provost one of which concerned changing course proposal forms, requiring professors to more explicitly describe the subject and material of the proposed course. I can only infer that the existence of the Pornography course was at least one of the reasons why he decided we needed to have tighter regulations for how courses are put into the catalog at Washington College. Subsequent to that, the right-wing magazine Insight in Washington D.C. published an article critical of me which used Susan Huck as an informant. She had a haranguing letter sent to them as a former professor at Washington College. After having received anonymously a photocopy of the article, I wrote a letter to Insight trying to indicate to them as clearly as I could exactly what status Susan Huck has at Washington College. I said that she had been ordered off the campus more than once. I used the phrase that she was "not to be in non-public areas of the campus." I felt this phrase I think I got over the telephone from the Vice-President Dr. Greene, who I believe was responsible for writing the letter in 1982 that barred her in some sense from the campus. I wrote this to Insight and I sent copies of the letter of course frequently, however, I didn't try until that night. If you were to ask me how I felt that night, I couldn't tell you. My mind can replay the events frame by frame, but no concrete feelings exist.

"Struggle," from 4

I write this in attempt to stress the seriousness of depression. For years, I believed I was just experiencing mood swings as a result of the tension in my surroundings. My highs would come and be incredible, but the lows followed with such intensity that I never remembered anything positive. I cannot convey to you how lost I felt. I became so overwhelmed by the downside of life that I could not enjoy the good things that were happening to me, and they were there.

My problem was fear. I was afraid of the roots of my depression. I hated my father, isolated myself from my mother, and became my own worst enemy. It was my belief that things would change once entering college. I would really be on my own. Things only worsened. I feared leaving this environment. When I returned home for vacations, I cried myself to sleep. Home did not feel like home. This estrangement turned inward and became anger, an anger which swelled inside me. I never released this anger on anyone. Sure, tension existed and this hurt my family and friends, but I hated myself, not them.

What I am trying to say is that depression is a serious disorder. True, depression is a mood, but constant depression is overwhelming and should not be ignored or passed off as just a "phase". Chances are that "phase" will creep back into your life and magnify ten-fold. I ignored that love which surrounded me. I was incapable of expressing my feelings or accepting the feelings others had for me. Because I rejected this emotion, I was unable to seek the help I needed from those who could help me. I did not want to trouble anyone.

Therapy made me realize that my depression is a permanent. Certainly it will not go away like magic, but with me in control, focusing on the positive aspects of my life which outnumber the bad ten to one, I will beat it one day. I realize I am sometimes it is necessary to trouble someone. Do not ignore your troubles and concerns because you think that you are sparing someone else the burden.

I apologize if these words seem as if I am rambling. Trying as I am, space limits what I can say. Never the less, the underlying message of this is that help is available. Family, friends, professors, people you respect are there for you. Believe in yourself and your worth. If you believe you suffer from the symptoms, seek help. Things do not always get better on their own. No matter how overwhelming things may seem someone out there cares.

Trouble me. Disturb me with all your cares and your worries.. Your silence is my greatest fear.

C-House Gets Turned into a Cove

Jamie Baker and Michelle Crosier

The opening of the new student center is a matter of concern of the SGA and the Student Activities office and one which will affect every member of this campus. Jamie Baker, SGA President, and Michelle Crosier, Student Director of Student Activities, talked with President Trout and Reid Raudenbush about the project. Raudenbush, Director of the Physical Plant, agreed to walk Baker and Crosier through the site and outline the remaining work schedule.

The planned opening date for the new student center is Friday, January 21, and we think it's going to make it! We know many people don't think they will see it completed in January, but after a lengthy and detailed tour and discussion, we have confidence in the Buildings and Grounds crews working on the project. As Raudenbush put it, "In the next thirty days, there will be a dramatic change in this space."

As of last Wednesday, the drywall in the large activities room, was near completion, and painting was scheduled to be completed within two weeks. At that time the floor tiling, wood trim and paneling will begin. The final ingredients in the room are the light fixtures, tables, chairs and couches, all of which should arrive by January 1.

In the eating area, the stud-work and drywall should be well under way by next Monday. The booths are being pre-assembled in Sudlersville, and are due to be in and completed by second week in January. In addition to work on the eating area, the restrooms are being renovated with handicapped access. The entire building has already been made handicapped accessible.

Outside the food service area is the furthest from completion. This room awaits the pouring of a concrete floor, scheduled for next Monday. The reason for the holdup in this room is due to pipes which were unexpectedly found under the floor. This area was built in 1949 and renovated in '54, '63, and '92 with the completion of the study addition. The college had inaccurate plans of what was left behind from each of these previous construction projects, and much time was lost determining what all these pipes were. Because of all of this, we might not be able to order a hamburger the first weekend back, but completion of the food service area will not be far behind the official opening.

This rough schedule is dependent on each part of the process fitting together. Everything that can be done off-campus is already being worked on. There is a slim chance that the food service area will be completed, but if all else continues on schedule, the other two main rooms will be completed.

From the SGA: the SGA decided on the smoking policy and the name for the new space. The smoking policy will be smoking in the new activity room, or the multi purpose room, and there will be no smoking in the eating area. There is a surprising amount of ventilation equipment in the main room to circulate the air. The name we decided on is "The Cove."

From the Student Activities Office: We have a full array of activities planned for the weekend of January 21. The official opening ceremony will take place in the new center Friday afternoon. A theme party will kick off the events Friday night. Saturday will host a monster twister tournament along with a SGA sponsored band. Sunday will bring the first comedian of the semester. So keep your weekend open ... there will be plenty of activities on campus and they will all be FREE!!

If you have any further questions, comments or concerns, contact Michelle, Jamie or Reid Raudenbush. Ω

The holiday season is lurking—ready to pounce upon us, as the end of semester panic clearly certifies. As part of the holidays we all set forth to purchase gifts for our friends and family. Have you ever thought about the environmental repercussions of what you give? We have any kind of electronic tatling, walking, eating, spewing dolls and toys today. Companies do anything to coax children into the wonderful world of electronics, but stop and think about your childhood. Many of the fancy toys get broken very quickly and just become waste. The parts may be fun to play with for a while but then you just went back to your old favorites. I was reminiscing, and my favorite plaything as a child was simply a set of wooden blocks. I am sure some of you noble souls that actually read my column can relate to this. My blocks did not squeak, giggle or make any type of cutesy noise. My blocks did not scream "eek" when I toppled them over or threw them around. My blocks did not break. They were with me for a long time and are now with a kindergarten class in Puerto Rico. There are many wonderful, non-technological toys that can be enjoyed and passed on for generations. I understand that in our highly computerized world some of these toys will help the children to learn and develop their skills, however I suggest you stop and think before you buy. However, there is another side to this conflict. Many so-called environmentalist organizations are now trying desperately to convince you that their "environmentally sound" gifts will brighten the season of those receiving. I don't think that cute frog slippers are all that big a deal, especially not for the price they ask you to pay. Beware!

Another aspect of gifts: the packaging. Do you realize how much unnecessary packaging we use? Too much. Is it really necessary that the sweater have 15 layers of tissue, a box, wrapping paper and 3 bows? Let's not be wasteful here! Boxes can be reused, and so can wrapping paper for the matter. Some companies are starting to make wrapping paper with recycled materials. If in despair you can always use the all-consuming newspaper that are strewn all over the place and make highly fashionable multicolored wrapping paper! You can even make a statement too! Have an environmentally safe holiday! Ω that this wouldn't be feasible due to the complaints from years ago. Musicians and dorm life couldn't mix.

Maxcy approached the President's Office. Mr. Joe Holt tried the same options as I had already explored, and came up with the same results. When I asked President Trout himself at a President's forum about use of the CAC, he stated that it hardly seemed appropriate for a "rock band" to be practicing in the CAC basement.

After Dean Maxcy had done all he could do, I remembered a comment Matt Langan had made to the effect of, "It would be cool if there was a club for musicians." We had a little talk in Caroline 300 about Langan's comment; from this off-hand remark grew the Washington College Musicians Union.

Some of us canvassed the campus with petitions in support of our goals to get the Caroline room back. We got over half of the campus to sign, including nearly all of the residents of Caroline. We also got a list of 30 people interested in using the room. This list included people who play unamplified instruments such as the flute, the harp and the violin. This list and the petitions were submitted along with a copy of the club constitution to Dean McIntire. She told Bryan Flynn, Ted Knight, Tim Parents, and me that she was impressed with our organization and within a week the room was ours again. We received SGA funding, and last week finished sound-deadening the room. If you are interested in using the room, contact me, Luther "Dudel" Dudich at ext. 8863, or Josh Buchman at 778-5954. Dues are ten dollars for the first year.

Anyone who wants to store equipment can safely lock it away in the storage cage. The cage and the soundproofing are the result of the hard and generous work of Steve Fuchs and Brad Foster. I would like to thank them, the SGA, Maintenance, and everyone else who contributed to this project. Hopefully, our organization shall benefit everyone, and we shall all be able to enjoy its results. DIRT

Coffee Can Kill Your Roommate

Once upon a time, there was a small liberal arts college on the Eastern Shore. Around that special time in the school year when everyone wanted to kill each other and nothing was getting done, a magical turkey came down from the sky and granted a federal holiday.

Everyone came back fat and happy from Thanksgiving Break to discover there were only two weeks left in the semester, and about six weeks of work to do (add size of 10 weeks if you're a freshman or a senior).

Once again, pet goldfish belonging to roommates all over campus were in trouble as the walk to Royal Farms grew longer and longer, since the nights grew colder and colder.

(When I was a boy, we didn't have Royal Farms. We had to drive to Smiley's, and we didn't even have cars. Sometimes the only way we could get there was to hold each other's feet and do the 2-man wheelbarrow the whole two miles, and we liked it.)

Plots of torture revolving around Nair in the shampoo and itching powder in the underwear drawer circled in every head that shared a room. No work was getting done, still, and the anxiety level paired up with the anger level to create a mood that wanted to be slept off, if only there were the time and a few turkeys had been used up and most of them were red ... er ... herrings to begin with, and so the students settled down into their winter clothes and began to work, and the buildings seemed to shiver in fright. Work being done at Washington College?

And all the students wanted to take long hot baths to relieve their stress but, alas there were few bathtubs on campus and fewer tubs one would like to take a bath in.

Every Macintosh in arms length of a deadline was a-tap-tapping away as students began to panic, wondering what happened when the work didn't get done. Relax, said the upperclassmen, it all gets done, one way or another. So you don't sleep. So you don't eat. How different is that from a normal week?

Besides, the elders whispered, if your roommate kills herself, you get a 4.0. And those numbers which lit up the night sky and were heard of only in legend and that time Brown took three easy classes to get himself off AP began to haunt every student living with another.

"How to stage the perfect murder and make it look like suicide..." No, I don't think this is an applicable paper topic for Economics 101. Take it to American Studies. They like that stuff over there."

And all anyone really wanted was a backrub but everyone knows that 45 percent of backrubs lead to sex and sex leads to brain malfunction, everyone knows that and who needs to worry about AIDS just because your shoulders hurt...

So the students drooled on themselves and drank coffee and Mello Yello and typed as fast as they could.

(Except the ones who live directly above me and insist on partying night and day for five or six. You can hear right through the cinderblock wall, next door, above you, below you, and I don't care how much you've had to drink, when your insomnia promises to go away for one night so you can save up for that all-nighter you really need to pull and the guy upstairs is talking about football for Chrissakes... I don't have a roommate to kill.)

All of the students took a deep breath. "Two more weeks" was their mantra and their curse.

It was too late to start having perfect attendance.

But it was just in time to write the murder novel which would sell, sell, sell.

WEEKLY SUMMARY: everyone on the WC campus was grouped together in the slimey belly of a great blue whale. Kelli Youngbloodfish suddenly realized: "Ohmygod! I don't have any hands!"

"Of course not, fish have fins," said Cary Kellyfish in a practical tone of voice.

"But...but...don't you know what this means?" said Kelli Youngbloodfish, waving her fins dramatically.

"Uh...."

"It means," Kelli began to wail, "That we can't write! Without hands, we can't write!"

"Not necessarily," said Douglas Petersonfish, "We can always stick pencils in our mouths and write that way...."

"But not Neil!" mourned Kelli. "All the paper's become soggy....and the computers don't work....Writing...Writing...it here's no more writing...."

"You know what that means?" said Scott Koonfish as a realization slowly dawned on him, "It means...we don't have to do the Elm next week!" Scott Koonfish and John Phoebusfish and George (the guy with the hair) Jamisonfish and Abby Mossfish and Matt Murrayfish and Kate Sullivanfish and Katina Dukiewskifish and Tara Aldwellfish swam upside down and backwards in excited, jubilant figure 8's. "No Elm next week! No Elm next week!"

"You know what else this means?" whispered Vincent Ramunnifish.

"What? What?" all the fish cried.

"It means..." and now Vincent began yawping barbarically, "NO MORE SWO!"

"No more SWO! No more SWO!" all of the fish began chanting ecstatically. "No more SWO! No more SWO! Woe Woe Woe! Woe Woe Woe!"

"SWO was always such a waste of time," said a basic generic English majorfish.

"Well, la-dee da!" Don't be so snooty!" said a basic generic Bio major fish. "SWO has really helped an awful lot of students...you just don't hear them coming out and admitting it as much as you hear other fish griping — sometimes it seems people will always rather talk about and listen to and publish the negative sides of WC stories, without bothering to first check out the facts or try to be objective...."

"Yeah, yeah." said the English majorfish. "Whatever."

"Listen," said the Bio majorfish. "Here's one of the many things I think should have been done to make SWO more effective."

Many of the other fish yawned, although some did try to listen politely.

"What I think," said the Bio majorfish, "Is that there should have been a way of passing out of SWO, like there was a way for students with A.P. credit to pass out of one of the core classes. There should have been a screening process."

"But wait a minute!" said Alice Goodfellowfish, "Every student could have stood to have their writing improved! There weren't any exceptions to this! Even if a student already knew how to write a good paper, we could help teach them to write one that's excellent!"

"Yes, yes," said the Biofish, "Except that there were too many students who weren't convinced of this, and so did various things to have SWO."

"Such as?"

"Such as doing the standard tactic instead of bringing in new papers and papers-in-progress, bringing in old papers that have already been graded and laid-to-rest. A lot of students did this just to fill up SWO hours...thus wasting their time, the SWO instructor's time, and the time of students who really did need and want help with their writing!"

"I agree," said a Humanities majorfish. "And another thing—students used to be allowed to take incompletes in their normal classes, and finish them up in the following semester. This didn't apply to SWO — I know one woman — a student who had good A's on her papers anyway — who had completed all but a half an hour of SWO, and then she had to cancel her last appointment, because of a funeral. Because she missed this half hour, she had to do an entire 3 more hours the following semester, thus starting even more of her time, the SWO instructor's time, and the other students' time! If students were allowed to take incompletes in regular classes for things such as illness and family emergencies, they should have been allowed to take them in SWO. This might even have cut down on the number of students who were still finishing up their SWO requirements in their junior and senior years...."

"Ach" said all the other majorfishes as a heavy rumbling noise was heard — the great blue whale seemed to be suffering from indigestion.... Ω has not been sold on a regular basis since the 1990-91 academic year. The sale of draft beer (cheaper than the bottled beer sold in the past) will begin on Friday and Saturday, with a trial basis to see if the sale is financially feasible. If it proves successful for Dining Services then days of draft sale may be extended.

Monitors serving for large events in the main activities room will be students we king with Student Activities and in cooperation with Security and Dining Services. These student monitors will make sure that all beer brought into the main activities room is in the hands of only students of legal drinking age. Two beers may be purchased at one time from the food service area and carried into either the eating area or the main activities room. Monitors are posted at Security and to the main activities room to assure that beer is carried into the area only by students who are of age. They will also keep an eye open for unacceptable behavior in the entire student center, but will not patrol the area if no disturbances are evident. The use of Student monitors is a departure from previous systems which relied on the Dining Services staff or Security actively patrolling the student center. Baker cautions that "none of this reduces the responsibility of students for their actions or the behavior of their guests."

Baker was very encouraged by the results of the survey, saying, "I think this is going to be an atmosphere which encourages students who are 21 and those who aren't to get together on a Friday or Saturday night." The SGA plans to host a kick-off party for the opening of The Cove at the beginning of next semester. Use of the Cove will be available for student events and parties; contact Dennis Berry to plan these gatherings. Ω

Trivia Question

Who scored the first field goal in Shorewomen basketball history in the Cain Athletic Center?

The answer...Lee Ann Lezzer of Millersville, Maryland made the score 4-2 against Franklin & Marshall when her short jumper sent her straight into the history book.

Lezzer, a freshman, scored ten points in the first intercollegiate women's game ever played in Chestertown.

Sho'women B-Ball Takes Monumental Step

Women Play First-Ever Varsity Basketball Game At W.C.

Matt Murray

Ten women at Washington College took a monumental step Tuesday night when they played in the first intercollegiate women's basketball game at the school in its 211-year history.

After watching only men's basketball for 81 years, members of the Chestertown community had the opportunity to watch a women's game in the Cain Athletic Center for the first time when the Shorewomen faced the Franklin & Marshall Diplomats.

Although Franklin & Marshall (4-0) demolished Washington (1-2) 77-35 in the Centennial Conference match, the result was secondary to the historical significance of women's basketball played at Washington College.

"Historically, it's huge," said athletic director Geoff Miller of the team's first game at home. "It has tremendous significance for us in the women's basketball to our program."

Head coach Lanee Cole also recognized the historical impact of starting a women's basketball program at Washington.

"I think the true significance is that it's the first game for women's basketball here," she said. "It's amazing that it's taken until 1993 for the sport to come to Washington College."

However, Cole, speaking before Tuesday's game, downplayed the contest.

"Granted, tonight's our home opener, and that's going to make us more nervous than usual," she said. "But I think last week's game in New York (against Hunter College) was the truly significant game."

The Shorewomen will have to find something positive about last night's game to help them recover from the drubbing they received at the hands of the Diplomats.

The game was ugly from the start for Washington, as Franklin & Marshall started the contest on an 18-4 run through the first nine minutes behind the hot shooting of Deanna Bergondo.

On defense, Franklin & Marshall frustrated the Shorewomen throughout the first half, as Washington guards Pam Hendrickson and Kelly Rodgers had trouble finding many open teammates. The Shorewomen committed 31 turnovers over the course of the game.

The Diplomats also stifled Washington's strong inside game, holding forwards Allison Wentworth (19.0 points per game) and Eboni Taylor (16.0 ppg) to a combined six points for the half, and Franklin & Marshall led 33-10 at halftime.

"Franklin & Marshall played outstanding pressure defense, and we can't handle that yet," Cole said.

The momentum shifted when Washington started the second half on a streak, outscoring the visitors 12-4 in the first 7:07 of the half to cut the lead to 15.

"We started working our offense at the start of the half," Cole said. "It helped that (Breithaupt) got into foul trouble, and we were able to go to our power defense and get it to Eboni (Taylor)."

However, Washington's spurt was short-lived, and the Shorewomen were outscored 40-13 over the last 12:53. Franklin & Marshall finished the game scoring 29 of the last 33 points.

For the Diplomats, Bergondo led the team in scoring with 17.

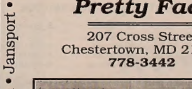
Taylor led Washington with 12 points, with Lee Ann Lezzer scoring 10 and Wentworth adding eight.

After starting the season with a 1-1 record, it may have been a wake-up call to face the fifth ranked team in the NCAA Division III Mid-Atlantic Region.

"I didn't expect (the difference) to be near 40 points" Lezzer said. "I expected to stay closer to them, but I think we did a good job defensively, and hopefully, when we see 'em later, we'll do better."

Cole was not surprised by the outcome but also hoped for a closer game in the young team's home opener.

"I'm not surprised we got beat by 40," she said. "I think we're capable of playing them a much better game, but it's early in the season. We're going to handle the pressure and get better."



Franklin & Marshall head coach Noreen Pecsok was impressed with Washington's performance in its first-ever game at home.

"For a first-year team, they were fantastic," she said. "If those kids come back each year, they'll have promise. They're talented enough to win in this conference, and they're young, so they'll be better at the end of the year than they are now."

Although the first women's game at the Cain Athletic Center was a rout, Washington's players also realized the historical significance of the game.

"I think we were all nervous," said Lezzer, who scored the first field goal for the Shorewomen at home in the team's history. "It's a lot of pressure sometimes when you know people will look back and ask how the first team did, but we'll get better."

Shorewomen Swimmers Smash Salisbury Men Take Two-Meet Win Streak To Ursin

Erika K. Ford

Winning nine first places out of eleven races, the Sho'women swim team trounced state rival Salisbury State 129-74 last Tuesday. The women started off winning and never looked back.

The men's team won 104-70, improving their record to 2-1.

The meet began with a 200 medley relay won by Jen Green, Colleen Roberts, Amy Draper, and Jen Voss.

Freshman Eileen Kuriger had an outstanding swim in the 1000 meter freestyle race. She came in first and set a personal best time. Sophomores Robin Woollens and Elizabeth Likens had strong third and fourth place finishes behind Kuriger.

Senior co-captain Green won the 200 free easily, improving on her season best time also. Denise Hakanson placed third, and Renee Bylkas finished fourth.

Freshman Jen Voss remained undefeated in the 50 meter freestyle with a personal best time of 26.7 seconds. Voss won her third first placing with the 100 free. Amy Peterson also had a best, placing fourth.

Roberts won first place in the 200 individual medley and was followed by Erin Miller winning third. Sophomore Roberts had three first place victories for the night after winning the 100 breaststroke.

Green also had three firsts with a win in the 100 backstroke. Jen Dow won the 500 free setting a season best, with Kuriger placing second and Likens fourth.

Salisbury's only individual first was in the 100 butterfly race. Their only other victory was in the 200 free relay, when they touched out the team of Hakanson, Draper, Dow, and Miller for the win.

"The women really swam well tonight," head coach Kim Lessard said. "There were personal best times being set all night. I'm very pleased with the results."

The Sho'men swimmers also boasted successes against Salisbury.

Starting off, Tim Whittier, Julien Gaudion, Tim Parent, and Chris Freisheim won the 200 medley relay. The team of Dave Kraft, Marcelo Brutti, Mike Bowman, and Justin Thomas came in third.

Freshman Dan Woodall had an outstanding night with wins in both the 1000 free and 500 freestyle races. Junior co-captain Dave Cola posted second in both events. Swimming the 200 IM for the first time, Cola won in 2:08.6 minutes.

Junior co-captain Freisheim placed first in the 200 free and second in the 500 free. Sophomore Peter Ward was undefeated in the 100 freestyles, with 23.01 and 50.9 times.

Men's Hoops Starts At 2-3

Shoremen 2-0 In Div. III Games, 0-2 Against Div. I Teams

The Washington College men's basketball team has won two of its first five games to open the 1993-94 season.

With big performances from seniors Geoff Rupert and Charles Cummings and junior Jay Devlin, the Shoremen have recorded victories over Rutgers University-Camden Campus and Frostburg State University.

Two of Washington's losses, to NAIA school Wilmington and Division I University of Maryland Baltimore County, have been close, but the Shoremen were blown out by the University of Delaware on Monday.

Washington opened its season November 19 at the Widener Tournament in Chester, Pennsylvania. The Shoremen bowed to Wilmington in the first game but defeated Rutgers-Camden in the consolation match.

Devlin led Washington with 19 points in the 77-52 victory, while Cummings scored 18 and Rupert added 14.

Of Devlin's 19, 12 came from his four three-pointers. He was 4 of 6 from behind the stripe.

Rutgers-Camden's Cetshwayo Byrd led all scorers with 25.

All of Washington's players saw atleast eight minutes of action in the 25-point rout.

Also scoring for the Shoremen were Derek Cuff (nine points), Mark Awatang (four), Mark Kenah (four), Adam Poe (three), Ben Harris (three), Jerry Davis (two), and Paul Kenny (one).

Ken Lapp also played nine minutes for Washington.

Last Tuesday, Washington played its home opener against the Frostburg State Bobcats.

In a tight game, the Shoremen beat their interstate rivals 69-62.

Cummings scored 22, including eight-for-eight from the free throw line, to lead all scorers.

Also for Washington, Rupert scored 15, and Devlin added 14.

The Shoremen had to overcome outstanding efforts from Frostburg's Donny Woodard (18 points) and Tim Nightengale (14).

Washington outscored the Bobcats 33-25 in the first half.

Frostburg cut the lead to three in the second half but could not get any closer and Washington pulled away in the final minute to win by seven.

Other scorers for Washington were Cuff (six), Harris (five), Davis (three), Kenah (two), and Edmund Hicks (two).

Last Saturday, Washington played at the University of Maryland Baltimore County.

Expected to be a tough game against a Division I team, the Shoremen played a strong first half, and the game was tied at 43 at halftime.

Devlin was outstanding in the first half, scoring 17 points for the half, including three three-pointers.

However, U.M.B.C. tightened its defense in the second half and held Devlin to four points.

The hosts started the half on a 25-9 run through the first seven minutes, and Washington never got close again after that.

Cummings scored 16 in the game and Rupert scored 12.

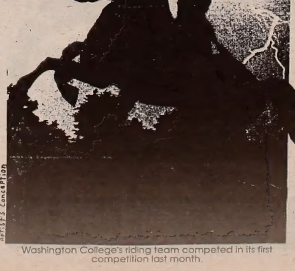
Cuff added nine, and Davis played well inside with eight points.

On Monday, Washington played its fifth game and lost to the University of Delaware.

Riders On the Storm

Washington College Riding Team Competes For First Time

John K. Phoebus



The Intercollegate Riding Team, just organized this year, competed Sunday at it's first show at Delaware Valley College in Doylestown, Pa.

With half of its members placing, the team received thirty five points, toward qualification for regional finals next spring.

The team sent seniors Julia Schied, captain Yvette Gormaz, and Will Phipps, and freshman Jessica Crames to the regional competition. Approximately ten other schools were represented with over 30 competitors in each of four divisions (basic, novice, intermediate, and open).

Schied and Crames rode in the Novice class Equitation and Jumping over fences and riding on the flat. Crames received a ribbon for placing third and Schied placed fifth. While not placing, Gormaz and Phipps rode well in the Intermediate level of the same type of competition. Riders were judged based on their form's comparison with textbook style. Riders were assigned horses at random and not allowed a warm-up ride. They could only adjust the English tack to their preference.

The Intercollegiate Riding Team came into existence this year under the efforts of member of the former Equestrian Club and assistance from Dennis Berry. They will compete in another show on December 5, with five additional shows next semester. Based upon the number of placings they win, they will be eligible to enter the Regional Finals. The team wishes to thank the President's Office, the SGA and Rec Sports for the funding which has made their first season possible.

Washington College's riding team competed in its first competition last month.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

For the second week in a row, the Newt's P.O.W. honor is going to a freshman. After Timmy Parent's award-winning performances two weeks ago, this week the honor goes to Eboni "we're going to the Final Four" Taylor.

A freshman from Germantown, Maryland and a graduate of the Bullis School, Taylor has been a force for the Shorewomen in their inaugural basketball season.

After earning all-tournament honors at the Hunter College Tournament November 19-20 for her 18.0 points per game average in two games, she led Washington in scoring on Tuesday with 12 points.

Taylor also played strong defense on Tuesday against Franklin & Marshall's 6-foot-four center.

Coach Cole is hoping Taylor will be a big factor in the starting center role for the next four years. Currently averaging 16.0 points per game, Taylor is already impressing coaches around the conference.

However, Taylor, who has formerly made rather rash statements to the press, found Tuesday's 77-35 loss to be a humbling experience.

"I think we played a good game, but they're just a better team, and I have to give them credit for that," she said. "We don't have the experience they have yet."

Honorable mentions this week are plentiful.

Also for women's basketball, Allison Wentworth also made the All-Tournament team at Hunter and is currently averaging 18.0 points per game.

For men's basketball, Jay Devlin and Charles Cummings get the honorable mention nod, for their impressive performances against U.M.B.C. and Frostburg.

In swimming, Chris Freisheim deserves honorable mention for his continually strong performances. "Mr. Consistency" is not very flashy, but the junior co-captain always gets the job done.

On the women's side, freshman Jennifer Voss has been a big plus this year. She had the only win of the meet against F & M, and swam well against S.S.U.

Jay Devlin, a junior from Springfield, Pennsylvania, exploded for 21 points against U.M.B.C. last Saturday. With 17 points in the first half, Devlin hit three three-pointers and kept the game close through the first half. Sansing To Leave WC

Rachael Fink

In just a couple of months a valuable member of our community will leave Washington College. Associate Dean and Lecturer in Sociology Dr. Lucille H. Sansing's last day at Washington College will be March 19. A scant two weeks later she will be Dean of Whitehead Center at the University of the Redlands, 65 miles east of Los Angeles. The move to California marks a significant change, not only in Sansing's environment, but in her career as well.

Whitehead Center is a non-residential adult education facility, and the new job will bring together many of Sansing's experiences and talents. The job is "broader and more diverse," says Sansing, and will include working with the business community on programs like tuition assistance. The transition from working with 18 to 22 year olds living on campus to adults living off campus will be an easy one for Sansing, as her doctoral thesis dealt with adult learning. Sansing is particularly aware of the challenges adult students face, as she herself returned to complete her education as a non-traditional student. Additionally, she gained experience teaching adult students at a community college before she came to Washington College.

Courses at Whitehead Center are set up in 6 week cycles, with only one course taken per period. Dr. Sansing is also looking forward to setting up a program similar to WC ALL, which will offer short term, non-credit possibilities to adults wishing to further their education without the end result of a BA or MA. Dr. Sansing says that it is a "good fit," and she is very excited about the change in job and climate.

As for her position as Associate Dean here at WC, she has been given "every indication," that the position will be filled. At this time Sansing is "clueless" as to who, but hopes that a replacement will be found "before I leave," so as to insure some sort of continuity. If a replacement is not found by March, it may be necessary to fill the position temporarily with someone already on campus to provide time to find a suitable candidate.

Sixteen Dismissed

Academic Problems Cause for Concern

Forrest George

Over vacation, sixteen students, fifteen male, one female, including six freshman, were dismissed from the college by the Admissions and Academic Standing Committee. This committee consists of three seniors, and eight faculty and administrators, and is charged with overseeing students on academic probation.

The academic credentials of this year's Freshman class were stronger than past Freshman classes, which would lead one to expect a certain quality of work. Yet the number of dismissed students from the Freshman class is higher than in the past. In an interview with the ELM, Associate Dean Lucille Sansing pointed out that 1994's Freshman class is also larger than past classes; hence, the percentage of dismissed freshman students has remained relatively constant.

Dean Sansing said that GPA and the number of Ds earned are the factors considered in dismissal. A 1.5 GPA for one term constitutes academic probation and a student may not graduate with more than six Ds. If a student does not appear to be making progress toward increasing her or his GPA that student may be dismissed. In order for freshman and sophomores to avoid dismissal they must be able to achieve a cumulative 2.0 by the end of their sophomore year. Exceptions to this policy may be made if the student has been ill or there has been a death in the family. In such cases the Committee considers the effect of these on the student's studying. The Dean said the members of the Committee "err on the side of student." Dr. Nancy Tatum, Chair of the Committee, said that they work with the students experiencing academic problems and dismiss students only as a last resort.

Students are always placed on academic probation before they are dismissed; therefore, they are never surprised to find they have been dismissed. Sansing added the parents may be surprised to discover that their child is having academic difficulties.

When asked about poor performance of freshmen who are members of a class which was expected to do well at Washington College, Dean Sansing said the students placed on AP or dismissed are perfectly capable of doing the work. She indicated that she felt that these academic problems are not due to ignorance or dull brains, but rather to students spending more time partying and socializing than studying.

In addition to dismissing sixteen students, the committee also released many students from academic probation. She also included that nearly all dismissed students apply for readmission after a few semesters at other colleges and when they return their work is generally of better quality. Ω

Birthday Ball Countdown

This Year's Mardi Gras-themed Soiree to be Most Extravagant in Washington College History

Elaborate masterpieces such as this trio of jubilantly jocose jesters promise to transform Cain Gymnasium into a playfully piquant paragon of plethoric pageantry.

Marshall Norton

"Wicked." That's one word Sophomore Carey Hargrove used to describe the upcoming Birthday Ball. "It's going to be like nothing Washington College has ever seen."

This year's incarnation of the Birthday Ball will be held in the Cain Memorial Gym on February 19, and should prove to be "...the first, and most probably the last of its kind," according to Pat Trams, Director of Alumni Affairs. "When everyone arrives in the gym that night, they won't be able to tell that's where they hold basketball games."

This year's gala will put aside all previous conceptions of this Washington College tradition. With a 23-piece orchestra, a seated dinner for all guests, and $60,000 invested in decorations alone, the 1994 Birthday Ball promises to be a night to remember.

The theme for the evening will be "Mardi Gras," and will feature traditional costumes and parade floats. German instructor Jefford Vahlbusch will emcee the event, and the Honorable Louis L. Goldstein will be the "King."

SGA Parliamentarian Hargrove deserves much of the credit for the organization of the event. Not only did his family handle the decorating for Donald Trump's Mardi Gras Ball, but they also were responsible for the decorations for all of the Clinton Inaugural Balls.

Cheating in Annapolis

Academic Dishonesties Disgrace Naval Academy

This past week the Naval Academy was smeared with shame when the Navy's Inspector General announced that 133 midshipmen admitted to cheating on an exam in an electrical engineering course in December of 1992. Of these, eighty-one have confessed to the cheating, and the Inspector General's Office has compiled enough evidence on the other alleged cheaters to bring them up on charges which may result in their dismissal.

The United States Naval Academy has long striven to produce officers who are brave, patriotic and honorable. The country has placed an absolute trust in these officers to defend America, and they have lived up to this trust many times, often making the ultimate sacrifice for their country. The integrity and character of such men has carried America though its most trying times. In time of war, sailors and marines have had to place their faith in the skills and character of their leaders to see them through, and this faith has been tested in the icy crucible of the Korean War and on the bloody beaches of Iwo Jima.

These latest revelations of cheating at Annapolis are a disgrace to this tradition, and a disgrace to the nation. On the highly sophisticated battlefields, warships and aircraft of today an understanding of the technical skills the Academy was seeking to teach these midshipmen can mean the difference between life and death. By taking the easy way out, these midshipmen could have easily endangered not only their own lives, but also the lives of those who will serve with them.

A military career can last twenty or thirty years. If history is any indication the future, it's a near certainty that some 1994 graduates of the Naval Academy will be called upon to use their skills in time of war. No doubt the vast majority will serve their country with honor and distinction in peace and in war, but this incident raises doubts. The service academies have the strictest honor policies in higher education today, yet if such a large proportion of their students cheat, the situation may be far worse at other institutions.

The problem, it seems, is one which goes far beyond the character of individuals who cheat. In this profane and secularized world of today, it is indisputable that many midshipmen became interested in the Naval Academy not because they saw it as a way to do something for their country, but because they saw it as a way their country could do something for them. The cost of college education has become prohibitively expensive for most young Americans, yet it is more necessary to personal success and financial security than ever.

It is quite easy to blather about the need to instill values in young Americans, in fact I'm certain that this scandal will provoke conservative commentators will do so even more than usual. The real evil is credentialism, the regimentation of the work place which substitutes academic degrees for personal characteristics. As America deindustrializes, the job market becomes more competitive, a resulting need for easy quantification of qualifications has arisen. This has resulted in credentialism, which has made a college education imperative. This is the root cause of the cheating scandals at Annapolis and elsewhere. Our society, in its idolatry of the almighty dollar, has correspondingly devalued any and all other reasons for individuals to pursue higher education.

Alumna Enjoys Rennaissance Dinner

To the Editor,

This is by way of a thank-you note to everyone who worked on the Rennaissance Christmas Dinner in December.

It was extraordinary professional in every aspect: the singers, the dancers, the actors, the Consort, the Brass Quartet, and the instrumental Ensemble. In addition, it was great entertainment.

Gary Clarke, Karen Smith, and Amzie Parcell deserve tremendous credit for their direction of each of the pieces. As for the students, how could they possibly have had the time, the energy, the talent, and the imagination to have done all this at such an academically heavy time of the year? It was a truly awesome tour de force.

Thank you to all of the above (and to those inadvertantly left out) for a lovely evening.) You knocked my socks off--and probably those of everyone else who was there.

Sincerely,
Clare S. (Pat) Ingersoll '71

N.B. Dave Knowles: Dinner was delicious, too.

Who Needs It?

Jennifer Reddish

For the past three years, I've worked for Tribal College: Journal of American Indian Higher Education. Though located in Chestertown, it serves the 29 tribally-controlled native American colleges and universities throughout the US and Canada. During my time with the magazine, people have asked me some rather interesting questions. Such as "Are you an Indian?" (No) and "Are you sexually attracted to Indians" (that doesn't deserve an answer) and "Do you want to be an Indian?" (which makes it seem as if you can join another culture as easily as if it were a club).

I'm not an expert in American Indian Studies by any means, but I wanted to clear some basic misconceptions about American Indians– since Professor Wagner is teaching the first Native American literature course at Washington College this spring, and poet Simon Ortiz, and scholar Arnold Krupat, are scheduled to visit.

First, and foremost, most people don't know if American Indians still exist. The remaining native population in the United States is quite small– approximately one percent of the U.S. population. However, they are not concentrated only in the mid-to-southwest regions of the US. There are viable, living tribes in Maine, Rhode Island, Connecticut–even Delaware. Their numbers are small, of course, but they have managed to have maintain a life distinct from that of dominant society.

However, it is not fair to expect these people to run about with feathers in their hair, and war paint on their faces to be called, "Indians." No one expects descendants of the Puritans to wander around in large, buckled, black hats. Very few American Indian people still wear traditional dress every day, and fewer still live in tipis. For some Indian people, the expectation to prove their "Indian-ness" in this fashion can mean life or death for the tribe in terms of federal recognition. The Mohegan tribe was denied recognition once, and may be denied again, because James Fenimore Cooper's The Last of the Mohicans claimed there was only one left– and surely he was dead now.

There is also the idea of the Noble Savage with which the American Indian must contend. The advent of New Age marketing, and the return to "natural healing" in the late eighties and early nineties, has sparked a renewed interest in the idea of man living in nature, and removing the evils of society– in touch with the power of the earth. The reservation gambling casino operations counter this whimsical notion– leaving the admirers of the Noble Savage rather disgusted. But tribe such as the Micmacs in northern Maine– whose members before federal recognition earned less than $4,000 per year– are not interested in nobility. Gambling brings in revenue to pay for heat, and buys them food each day. Gambling may be disgusting, but poverty is far worse.

This is a truth many native Americans know all too well. Many live in the most impoverished areas of the United States, and the reservations are often called the "fourth world." Diseases such as tuberculosis, rare in dominant society, ravage reservations in epidemic proportions. In the past, alcoholism may have been as high as 80 percent or more– causing increased incidents of Fetal Alcohol Syndrome (FAS), liver disease, and suicide on the reservations. High school drop-out rates are tremendous, accompanied by joblessness and family violence.

The statistics are grim, and most people simply ask: "Why don't they just leave the reservation, and get a job?"

If it were that easy, most American Indians would have done that long ago. First of all, indigenous peoples stay on the reservation because it is home. Many American Indians place a spiritual value to their lands– it is the center of their religion, their culture. Most tribes have their own government, and many control their territory– for example, Mashantucket Pequot can attribute their second largest casino in the world in Connecticut.

Along with these cases, are the linguistic barriers between some reservation Indians and dominant society. It's still possible to get a wrong number on the Lakota reservation, and get someone whose only vocabulary is "hello." Depending on the reservation, some children still learn English as a second language, and even use their indigenous tongue at school.

Besides cultural and logistical concerns, racism has caused many problems with cultural interaction. Most of these stem from cultural misunderstandings. For instance, some tribes find it disrespectful to look people in the eye while talking with another person– which is considered rude by most non-Indian peoples.

Since Europeans began arriving in America, there has been a movement to either destroy, or "whiten" the Indians. The turn of the century saw an all-out war by missionaries to save the "heathens." Many Indian children were ripped from their homes and forced to attend boarding schools. While there, their native language was forbidden, along with their cultural customs and religion. They were to become "civilized" like their white "brothers."

Most of these students graduated into a life of chronic depression– their white oppressors would not accept them because they were Indian, and their long years of schooling had alienated them from their own people. For this reason, these victims are often called the "lost generation." This time period introduced, and worsened, many of the problem that persist among the American Indian population today. Thankfully, the efforts of the tribal colleges and special Indian programs (such as an "Indian-ized" Alcoholics Anonymous), are slowly healing these ailments. The most famous example is Alkalai Lake– once known as "Alcoholic Lake." Once a town with a population that was literally 100 percent alcoholic, they are today 97 percent sober– but it was a fifteen year process.

Along with the ailments of Indian country, Indian people have been faced with controversy concerning "what to call them." It is standard practice to use American Indian (to avoid the "Do you mean Indians from India, or reservation ones") or native American with a small "n"– though the capital "N" is not wrong. Most native peoples do not mind the use of "Indian"– the joke among Indians is "Well, we're just glad that Columbus was looking for India, and not Turkey."

The last, and best known, controversy is the professional sports team logos– such as the Cleveland Indians, the Atlanta Braves, and the Washington Redskins– concerning whether or not they're racist. That's a touchy one. They are racist, but most people don't understand why they are. Epithets such as "redskin" are derogatory– but along with others like "Injun"– some people believe they're an acceptable substitute for "Indian" or "native American." They have a history of derogatory use against American Indian people, and should not be used– most history textbooks will explain further.

If you're interested in learning about American Indians, begin with Jack Weatherford's Indian Givers and Vine Deloria, Jr.'s Custard Died for Your Sins. Good fiction pieces to read include N. Scott Momaday's House Made of Dawn and Louise Erdrich's Tracks. Also, try to find a few copies of New From Indian Country. Beware of popular New Age materials, and films like Dances with Wolves – these have been panned as leeching on Indian country, and present an inaccurate picture of indigenous peoples.

Attending powwows (there's one in Millsboro, Delaware and University of Maryland, College Park, every year) will also give you an insight to American Indian culture. Etiquette at these events are self-evident. Don't tell jokes like "I can make you speak Indian" (HOW?) or "What time is it by the sun, Brothers?" (I'm not being flippant, people actually do this.)

Finally, no one's asking you to feel guilty about the past. No Lakota man or woman would understand you if you visited the reservation and told random people "Oh, I'm so sorry about everything," while visiting their reservation. When talking about, and visiting, American Indians– just use tact. There's nothing politically correct about that. Ω

Pilgrimage to the Promised Land

A few weeks before break last semester, I saw a commercial on television depicting happy carolers and shoppers in the holiday fread: Christmas) spirit making a pilgrimage to that erstwhile chapel o'lure: Wal-Mart.

Yes indeed, Wal-Mart was depicted as the birthplace of Jesus, with a creche in the window, a Wal-Mart sized tree out front, and the Star of Wonder over its rather steeple-like peak. "Wal-Mart: Home for Christmas," it said, or something else equally insipid, vulgar, and ethnocentric.

I was aghast. The true spirit of Christmas was revealed, by Sam himself, as commercialism. (Really, it has to be true. I saw it on TV.) While I was home with my folks, en route from Burger King (buying buttloads of watches for $2 each) to the mecca of LaVale, land of the mall, Mom and Dad wanted to make a stop at Wal-Mart.

Oh, did I mention I had never been to a Wal-Mart before?

I decided my time had come. To fight thine enemy, one must know thine enemy. So I left my checkbook in the car and walked in.

The first thing I did was check the hours to make sure this wasn't a 24-hour superstore of the type that has ruined towns such as Conway, Arkansas. It wasn't, but

J Tarin Towers

LaVale, Maryland, about half an hour from my hometown of Grantsville, is already mostly commercial. But Wal-Mart was new, and it was encroaching on my territory.

The layout, in my opinion, was a bit haphazard. I wanted to stake out the entire store, and I did. It wasn't as huge as I'd anticipated, although it did include not only a snack bar but a vision center and a 24-hour photo lab.

However, it was big enough to have fun with, and since my parents wanted almost two hours worth of shopping pleasure, I thought I'd sink my teeth in.

I went outside for a cigarette and sat on a caste played: that was lightly covered with newspaper, especially as low riders and pickups with gunracks trundled by.

A man with one tooth leered at me, and I went back inside, stomping on the smiley face on my way in. "Welcome to Wal-Mart, land of low-low prices."

After blithely surveying the clothing section and noting that jumbo prices were waiting, I went in quest for Gay Ken. I have heard rumours that this "special" Ken doll has frosted hair, and earring, freedom rings, cutoff short-shorts, and a purple vest with no shirt. I have yet to find him.

However, in the two aisles (front and back of one aisle) of Barbie and Generic Barbie, I did see seven ethnic varieties and lots of disco outfits. Plus, they had Secret Hearts Ken, which was almost as good. According to the package, when you touch him, "Colors magically change on his chest/underwear, and other private parts."

The toy section didn't impress me. There was an effluvience of Barney. And Barney rip-offs, I'm sad to say. Not satisfied to make cool dinosaur toys anymore, they have to make them look like Barney and appeal to the one-toothed crowd. Like Dino-Roars. Touch them and they — die. Really. Batteries make them urk out a death rattle that would make Grandma jealous.

"Christmas Dial 170 — Christmas 170." I believe they hired someone named Christmas just for the occasion.

After glancing at stationery, notebooks and "best-sellers," I headed to the pharmaceuticals department, legendary for selling below cost to decimate the competition. Saline solution was indeed cheaper than at Rite-Aid — for brand name. But they didn't carry generics or store brand, so they still didn't undersell.

As I was glancing at liquid vitamins, I heard a glubbing which I could only hope was an aquarium. I had seen no pet section. The wall of diapers seemed to be gurgling. I was entranced — led around the corner to an ominous display of dog collars and leashes. If you're into leather, whoomp! there it is. (The sign hanging over this rack reads, "You must be satisfied.")

And there were aquariums. Average prices. Their CDs were more expensive than K-Mart. They had a stingy stock of blank tapes. I remain unimpressed with the mammoth store from Arkansas. I refuse to support its practice of hiring only part-time employees, and paying no benefits to non-management. And, while you may save money if you tend to spend a lot on things like Teddy Ruxpin and giant tubs of caramel popcorn, I found no bargain that couldn't be matched elsewhere by shopping at outlet stores or thrift shops (for clothes), sales (CDs, etc.) or catalogs.

I'll stay home for Christmas, next year. And shop at K-Mart. Ω

Blub

by Tanya Allen

Blub: A satire column in which all members of the WC campus have been turned into aquatic sea creatures and spend their time in discussing campus issues. Yes.

Blub blub blub blub blub. When we left off last semester, everyone on the campus had been swallowed by a huge, gigantic, biblically large blue whale, and were sitting around in its belly, trying very hard not to get digested. To take their minds off of the horrors of peristalsis (the wavelike muscular contractions of the alimentary canal or other tubular structures by which contents are forced onward toward the opening), they engaged themselves in gossiping and complaining — the two most popular recreational activities on the WC campus besides consuming large amounts of alcohol; playing caps (an adult version of Tiddlywinks; and talking about, but not getting (as unless one is beautiful and adored by the gods, dating at WC is the equivalent of incest) sex.

"How long do you think we're going to be aquatic sea creatures?" asked Donald Munsonfish, secretly hoping that the answer would be for "ever," as he was thoroughly enjoying the experience of being a particularly intensely maroon-colored species of sea creature that even he could not identify.

"I don't know," sighed Dr. Garry Clarkefish, "I don't know. I have faith that we will be turned back to people though. I think that in the meanwhile we should use this time to talk about what can be done to improve this great, small, yet relatively unheard-of-by-the-rest-of-the-world school."

"I know how we can start improving the school!" roared out Rae Brownfish, "We can start by getting rid of the damn ice cream cone off of the black memo board thingy in front of the dining hall!"

"Hmm?" said Kristin Callahanfish.

"Oh, you know what I'm talking about!" said Rae Brownfish, "It's pink? And still has a cone on it? The memo board thingy? And since no one uses the memo board thingy as anything besides to suck Rocky Road mirror no one has seen the need to scrape last semester's desert off of it! It bothers me! They should get it off!" She tried to scowl but then remembered that fish can't move their lips or foreheads very much.

"Actually, I like it," said Wayne Sprousefish.

"Well, you would!" said Rae Brownfish. "After all, everyone knows about you and your thing about ice cream...."

"Well, first of all, nobody can be sure whether or not it's really ice cream on that board," said Wayne Sprousefish slyly. "And besides that, I like it because it's become sort of a ... landmark? An institution? Something that makes one feel all warm and happy whenever one sees it. It gives one the same sort of fuzzy feeling one gets from seeing the Casey bust on the pedestal in the CAC."

"Mrs. Casey's breasts are on a pedestal in the CAC?" said Christian Kubickfish quizzicle.

"No, not that sort of bust!" said Wayne Sprousefish. "Bust — as in statue — as in the small statue of Eugene Casey that's on the second floor of the Casey Art Center."

"Did you know that you'll get good luck if you rub the top of that statue's head?" said Julie Shaevichfish affectionately.

"No, way! Really?" said Kimberly Monafish.

"Yeah," sighed Julie Shaevichfish, "it's sort of like rubbing the belly of a Buddha or kissing the Blarney stone...."

"You know, if we ever get Mom and Dad back into people, I think someone should steal that thing," said Lionel Dysonfish, tongue in his cheek.

"Steal what thing?" said Cleo Pattersonfish.

"The Casey bust!" said Lionel Dysonfish.

"Steal Mrs. Casey's breasts?" said Vincent Ramunnofish, who had just woken up from a brief catfish nap.

"NO! The bust! The bust! The statue thing in the CAC!"

"Ohhhhh. Why?"

"For entertainment. Other schools do it ... I mean, every school has a bust, and if the students at the school are cool, they steal it!"

"What do they do with it, once they've stolen it?"

"Well, they... uh... steal it from each other! It becomes a game, you see — a competition. People make it appear briefly at significant places and times — like at commencement, or during a lecture, or at homecoming...."

"We don't have a homecoming!"

"Well, we should," Lionel Dysonfish continued. "And whoever has it should put interesting scarves, hats and bonnets on it, to give it distinction."

"That's would be so horrible!" said Amy Poviskofish. "I mean, how would you like it if some bratty college students stole the bust of one of your loved ones and put a bonnet on it?"

"Well, I wouldn't like it at all if someone stole the bust of someone I loved, especially if it was my girlfriend," said Lionel Dysonfish, "But I'd really love to have my own bust stolen...."

"For Heaven's sake, why?" said Amy Poviskofish.

"Because my bust would get a lot more attention that way than it would if it were just stuck on a pedestal. I'd be talked about, and every time it appeared I'd probably written about — at least as fillers for the film, and there would be a lot of legends made up about me if I was passed around from student hand to student hand — all the activity would keep my memory here and vibrant! It would be wonderful! Gee, I hope my bust gets stolen some day...."

"Well, maybe we shouldn't steal it," said Jessa DeMarsfish democratically, "Maybe we should just move it."

"Move it?"

"Yes," she ventured softly, "to the third floor men's bathroom, perhaps. Just sort of hide it — let the school go into an uproar for a bit, and then thoroughly enjoy the reaction when it is found by the housekeepers or by one of the men who use the bathroom on the third floor. I suppose that something does need to be done about the lack of uproar on this campus — maybe something even bigger than the moving or stealing of the Casey bust...."

"Lack of uproar? What are you talking about? Isn't having the entire campus turn into sea creatures enough for you?"

"Well, someday we're going to all get out of this whale, and eventually become people again, aren't we? And when we were people, we had a definite lack of uproar."

"Wasn't Wal-Mart enough for you? And the firing of Tex Andrews? What more sorts of uproar do you want?"

"Hee, hee, hee" said Jessa DeMarsfish as the belly of the gigantic blue whale rumbled. Ω

The Cove Opens

After Countless Delays, Student Center is Ready to Entertain

Eve Zartman

The Cove is finally open after all the waiting. The students did not seem to believe that it would actually be done on time, but it did open even though some areas are still waiting to be finished. As the head of the interim coffee house renovation project, it gave me a special joy at seeing the student center done the way that it should be. And the new Cove and multipurpose room certainly fulfills it's title of "student center." This weekend's activities were attended by diverse elements of the student body and most people seemed to be relieved at finally having a place to socialize and relax. The smokers were also glad because they finally had a place to smoke on campus and did not have to freeze outside in order to have their nicotine fix.

Before the opening of the Student Center, many people had complained about the lack of time with their friends because there was no place to go where they might run into them. That place has now been opened and seems to have exceeded expectations. This opportunity has been especially welcome because of the snow and ice which has hampered people's social activities after the winter break.

This past Friday was the official ceremony for the opening on the multi-purpose room and seating area of The Cove. Many members of the administration, faculty and student body were out to show their support. The events flowed into the evening when a DJ from Davis DJ's provided music for an SGA sponsored dance. The dance was not particularly well attended in its early hours but picked up speed as the night roled on. The music was mainly that of the early eighties and many attendees made statements like "I fell like I was at a high school dance." The next night's dance did not give the same feeling. The band's name was "Public Service" and most people seemed to have a good reaction to them. They played a wide repertoire of toned down progressive music. An estimate of the attendance was about 200 students and there were a wide variety of groups represented.

Although the tables of the new dining area of The Cove are not yet in place, it was open for people to get a little farther away from the music so they could talk and catch up. It did indeed seem to be a time for people not only to dance but to see all of their friends that had not run into campus since the break.

Some problems that were noted with the new Cove was the ventilation. The blowers are in plain sight, and even highlighted by their pastel color, but were not operational during the festivities. Many complained about the smoke-filled room and the high temperatures that the many dancing bodies created. Many of these problems will be eliminated once the student center is in full working order. Despite these problems, compliments are in order for the maintenance men who had to work hard to accomplish what they did get done of the multi-purpose room on time for this weekend's trial run.

The events were staffed by Dennis Berry's Office of Student Affairs and Campus Recreation, and his trainees were on hand to monitor things so the party would not get out of control. Due to their efforts, underage drinkers were at least few in number, even if not all were caught. For those of you who were there and were wondering what some

Administrative Positions Shift

Bunting Undergoes Changes

Marty Williams, WC alumnus, hopes to increase endowment asVice President for Development office.

Rachael Fink

As the new year gains momentum and the student body here at Washington College becomes embroiled in classes and extra-curricular activities, many changes are taking place within the Administration of the College. In addition to Associate Dean Lucille Sansing moving on, several other members of our community are moving up or out.

As of this semester Kathleen O'Donnell, formerly Associate Director in the Development office, is no longer with us. O'Donnell, a product of Dr. Sean O'Connor's education block, will become the Program Director for the Baltimore chapter of TEACH!, the professional development component of Teach for America. Teach for America is a national teaching core with members in 10 states and the District of Columbia. O'Donnell's new job will consist of management of several support directors in the Baltimore area, who provide assistance for members in professional development. Filling O'Donnell's position in the Development office will be Elicia Gale, recent Yale graduate.

Other changes within the Administration include promotion of several from within our own ranks. Judith Berry, formerly Associate Registrar, has moved up to the Development office. Berry, who started her new job as Associate Director of Development on January 13, will be focusing on prospect research and the conversion to the new benefactor system. While Berry says she "enjoyed working with the student body and faculty," she feels that she has not stopped serving then in her new capacity.

Succeeding Shawn J. Lyons as Vice President for Development is Martin Williams, formerly Assistant V. P. for Major Gifts here at Washington College. Selected from a pool of candidates as the result of a national search, this WC graduate will continue to serve our college with a push toward boosting endowment funding and community support. As Assistant V. P. for Major Gifts, Williams was instrumental in increasing annual giving by 28%, and membership in the 1782 Society by 22%, and "is very optimistic about our future for the years to come." Ω

Toastmasters Club Hones Public Speaking Skills

Monica Simpler

The Fall Semester at Washington College students had the opportunity to gain skills in public speaking. Under the auspices of the Toastmaster's Club, Wendi Eskridge, Sara Boulter, Karla Pozo, and I attended weekly sessions learning how to better our public speaking skills. These skills are not only useful in the job market, they also pay off in the classroom by improving student's ability to conduct classroom presentations required by professors. All involved have learned a lot and had an enjoyable time. Upon completion of the semester, we enjoyed a Toastmasters Graduation Ceremony complete with a very enjoyable feast.

The Spring Meeting of the Toastmasters Club will afford any and all interested students an opportunity to see how our club works. Those who feel highly nervous when they give a class presentation, need help in organizing thoughts for a speech, would like help and encouragement with different types of public speaking or are already proficient in public speaking are all cordially invited. Whatever your status in speaking abilities, we invite you to our meeting.

The Spring Meeting of the Toastmasters Club will be held Wednesday, February 2, 1994 in Hynson Lounge from 11:30 to 12:30. We hope to see you there!! Ω

Department of Buildings and Grounds Spent Winter Break on Cove, Catastrophes

Richard Kane

This winter has been hectic for the Department of Buildings and Grounds. Vigorously working to meet the deadline on the Cove project, the harsh cold weather conditions and associated other catastrophes came at an inopportune time for the Maintenance Department. The Department worked through the semester break on the Cove focusing on the floor space area and restrooms so that the previously planned events which took place at the Cove last weekend would be possible. The Cove project is not yet entirely complete. Maintenance has refocused its efforts on the food serving area with the intention of holding the official dedication on February 18.

Commenting on what Maintenance has been undertaking this semester, director of Physical Plant, Mr. Reid C. Rauldenbusch, said that it would have been hard just dealing with the normal things that we had to do ... the terrible weather made it all the more difficult." On top of the work needed for the Cove project, the abnormally cold weather and precipitation added additional tasks and difficulties.

Rauldenbusch estimated that Maintenance has laid out about ten tons of sand around campus to give some traction to roads and walkways. Washington College in past years has preferred using sand to using salt because of its harmlessness to the environment and pavement. Salt tends to have harmful, corrosive effects both on the environment and concrete pavement and surfaces. Rauldenbusch went on to point out the relative ineffectiveness of salt in such extreme cold conditions as in the past weeks.

The extreme cold did cause some damage around campus in the way of frozen and bursting pipes. For instance, in Decker-Dunning Hall a water line broke due to the cold. The break was not detected until after the thaw when water began flowing inside Decker-Dunning. Rauldenbusch commented that while the incident created a mess, no permanent damage to the building took place. Upon the mess and replacing a few damaged ceiling tiles.

The cold weather also froze water lines in Hynson-Ringald, and some of the Cardinal units. Apparently, at a Cardinal unit the water lines were frozen because one of the protecting wooden panels was removed, thus allowing the cold air in to freeze the line. A half-dozen cats were found to have been living behind the panels.

Another crisis took place for Maintenance on Christmas morning. Apparently unrelated to the cold weather, a faulty sprinkler coupling caused the basement of Reid Hall to be flooded with sixteen inches of water. Maintenance reported that though there was surprisingly no structural damage to the building, everything along the floors was ruined. In Reid basement where the Elm office is located, numerous things were stored including the archives of the Elm which were damaged in the incident.

When asked, Rauldenbusch stated that an incident such as that which occurred in Reid would be unlikely to happen again because the previous system which had lasted for a significant number of years had been replaced. In regards to Decker, Rauldenbusch answered that it could concievably happen again but that steps were being taken to provide insulation for the repaired pipes which would make a reoccurrance less likely.

Overall, Rauldenbusch stated he was quite pleased with the efforts of his staff, stating how they were quick to respond to complaints and came together well in the inconvenient and timed dilemmas which came about. Ω

Board of Visitors and Governors

Scott Koon

Next Friday, February 4, the Executive Committee of the Board of Visitors and Governors of Washington College will meet in Annapolis. The Committee, which consists of the chairs of the standing committees of the Board along with President and Vice-President of the Board, is meeting to prepare for the full Board meeting on the 18-19 February.

Despite campus rumors to the contrary, the Committee meeting should be a fairly routine affair, according to the Honorable Louis L. Goldstein, Chairman of the Board of Visitors and Governors. "Any member of the Board can come," said Goldstein, noting that the primary purpose the Committee meeting is to make sure that the Board will have the time to efficiently address all issues on its agenda at the Birthday Ball weekend meeting.

In a separate interview, President Charles H. Trout confirmed that there will be a full agenda. In addition to the budgetary issues which the Board normally addresses in preparation for the next academic year, they will also be considering the Long Range Plan and related issues.

The Budget Oversight Subcommittee of the Board's Finance Committee has also recently been reactivated. "It's been there all along, but now they have more of a charge," Trout said. Goldstein said this step was taken because "We're all interested in keeping Washington College in a viable position," and that "We want to be sure our College is growing responsibly, and they [the subcommittee] will work together with the President and the Dean [towards this end.]" Ω

WC Model OAS Delegation

Students from Washington College will be taking part in the Fourteenth Model Organization of American States this Spring. The Washington College delegation will travel to Washington, D. C., on March 28 for four days of animated debate on international political issues.

The delegation will be joining students from thirty-four other colleges and universities from around the country. The Organization of American States is a regional organization devoted to addressing key economic, social, educational, political and security issues facing the Americas. This year Washington College will represent Haiti at the Model OAS, which should make for an interesting event given recent events in Haiti.

Participation in the Haitian delegation is open to all students. Any student wishing to participate should contact Dr. Premo at ext. 7769 or stop by his office in Ferguson Hall, room 19. The delegation will hold its first meeting on Wednesday, February 2, at 6:00 p.m., in Smith 13. Ω

Drugs and Alcohol

Dr. Joel Fish, Director of the Center for Sports Psychology in Philadelphia, will speak to the Washington College campus on February 2nd at 4:00 pm in the Casey Forum. His presentation, "Drug and Alcohol Awareness," will focus on identifying the patterns of substance abuse and how students can learn alternative methods for stress management and celebration.

Dr. Fish's visit is being co-sponsored by the NCAA Sports Sciences Speakers Bureau, the Student Affairs Office, and the Lecture Series. Dr. Fish has worked with numerous colleges and has a number of prominent professional athletes as clients, most notably Charles Barkley and Lenny Dykstra. He was the keynote speaker at teh Centennial Conference Student-Athlete Leadership Development Conference which was conducted at Ursinus College in November, in which six Washington College student-athletes participated.

At the request of the Student-Athlete Advisory Council, Fish will also speak to coaches, captains and all of our student-athletes about building team chemistry, communication, being a role model, self-confidence, positive attitude, and respect.

The Washington College Dining Service is accepting applications for positions for Summer Conference workers. Duties will include waitressing, bus-making, kitchen prep-work, event set-up and breakdown duties and any other tasks given by the Summer Conference or the Summer Conferences Liasions. In addition to the regular salary, the WCDS will also pay for room and board on campus.

You can pick up an application from Dexter or Nora Sullivan, and the deadline is March 31 – so get going!!

"Cove," from 5

students were doing wandering around with large yellow name tags, those were the party monitors. Security officers were on hand in case things got out of control, but the only real problem they seemed to have came when it was time to end the party—which seems to be a good sign, as people obviously did not want to leave.

The alcohol policy in the student center is that no outside alcoholic beverages are allowed in any area of the Student Center. All alcoholic beverages are to be bought from Dining Services. This weekend the drinks and munchies were being served through the cafeteria and then taken downstairs. As is the usual alcohol policy, no hard liquor is allowed and only beer and wine coolers were available. No open containers are to be brought outside the perimeters of the Student Center, no matter what the age of the drinker. The monitors will also snag you if you try to bring in squeeze bottles or any such beverage container, as these containers may be used to conceal mixed drinks or private alcoholic beverages.

Such practices are unnecessary anyway, given the affordable prices of beer from Dining Services: $1.25 for a domestic beer and $1.75 for a foreign brand. These prices are not markedly different from those in any bar in town. The only downfall is the funky colored bracelet worn on your arm so the monitors know that you are not an underage drinker and that you bought your alcohol from Dining Services and did not bring any in. Needless to say, don't bring a fake ID in, because it is illegal and they'll catch you. If you are of age and don't want to buy from the Dining Hall you can drink in your room before you come or after you go home.

There were many broken bottles and quite a mess when the party on Saturday was over, but that situation will be resolved once things get in full gear. In the future, beer may be served in cups from a tap rather then in cans or in bottles. The cigarette butts and their burns on the newly tiled floor should be resolved soon by the bringing out of more realistic sized ashtrays and in more quantity. The pool tables will remain covered, due to the possibilities of beer stains and cigarette burns. The television set will also be put back in it's place in the side cove when large parties are not happening.

As for the rest of what is going to happen in the Student Center? That remains up to all of you. If you feel that some areas are not being addressed, contact Dennis Barry or your SGA Dorm Senator so that they can possibly address those ideas. The formal dedication for the snack bar area will occur on the 18th of February and everyone is invited to come. So mark it on your calendars. Ω

Anyone who has noticed the display photos and artist's rendering in Hodson Hall will agree that the Hargroves' work is impressive.

Hargrove explained that the evening will be a "choreographed" production, not just an ordinary dance. There will be various lighting and music cues, all making for a very elaborate undertaking.

The choice for "King" was based on the fact that the Honorable Louis L. Goldstein is a well-known local figure. In addition, Goldstein has attended many of the Mardi Gras balls and other such events decorated by the Hargroves, so he is familiar with his appointed duties.

The "Queen" will be selected from among the WC student body. Hargrove insures that the selection process will not be a "popularity contest."

Hargrove stated that in the past, people have arrived late to the dance. He encourages everyone planning to attend to be sure to arrive on time, so as not to miss any of the excitement.

The organization committee wanted to insure that the costs were kept low. Tickets, which will be delivered to students' mailboxes, are $10 apiece, and the dinner is free for all students on the meal plan. Otherwise, the cost for dinner is an additional $10. Each student will receive one ticket for themselves, and an extra to be given to anyone they choose. The Chestertown community is also invited to the event. Ω

Shoremen Swimmers Heating Up After Win Over Red Devils

However, Women's Swimming Falls To 2-5 Season Record

Erika K. Ford

In an outstanding rally last Saturday, Shoremen swimming trounced Centennial Conference rival Dickinson at home. Winning 127-79, the men's record improves to 6-1, while the women fell to the Red Devils 154-52.

Last year's meet against Dickinson was a huge upset, when Washington pulled from behind to capture the final relay, and ultimately the meet. This victory is the third time this season that Washington has easily beaten a team that finished above them at last year's championships.

Junior co-captain Dave Cola smashed his own school record in the 1000 freestyle by five seconds. Cola now holds the fastest recorded conference time in that event. He also won the 200 butterfly (an event he swam for only the second time,) and now has the second fastest time in WC history.

Pete Ward, Scott Steinmuller, cocaptain Chris Freisheim, and Cola combined to win first place in the 400 free relay.

Ward also had an impressive meet, winning the 200 individual medley with the season's best time of 2:08. He came in first winning the 200 backstroke too.

The Shoremen captured the 400 medley relay with a team of Ty McCarthy, Julien Gaudion, Tim Parent, and Jason Campbell. Tim Whittler, Dave Kraft, Marcelo Brutti, and Steinmuller placed third behind them. Solo, Campbell won the 100 free with a season best time.

The 50 freestyle was stolen by freshman Tim Parent, while Dan Woodall had two important second placings in the 200 and 500 free events.

The Sho'women had a tough meet against 25 Dickinson women, but they provided some key performances.

Their record now stands at 2-5.

Co-captain Amy Draper commented on the women's team.

"All of the girls are working very hard, and we have good individual swimmers," she said. "We're still a small team of only 12 compared to other schools."

"We're looking forward to more record times," Draper continued, "and to swimming in the championships. We hope to finish the season on a high note."

Freshman Eileen Kuriger became the eighth Washington woman to qualify for this year's championships, to be held in mid-February at Bryn Mawr. She improved her time by ten seconds in the 1000 free, and had a personal best time in the 500 free.

Jen Dow had season best times in the 200 fly and 500 free, placing second in each. Dow, cocaptain Jen Green, Colleen Roberts, and Jen Voss took second in the 400 medley relay.

Voss posted second place in the 50 and 100 freestyles. Roberts placed second in the 200 IM and third in the 200 breaststroke.

Amy Draper, Erin Miller, Denise Hakanson, and Renee Bylkas took second in the 400 free relay.

On Wednesday the women swam away at Bryn Mawr.

The next Shoremen meet is at home against Goucher tomorrow at 1 p.m. in the Casey Swim Center.

Team Notes

Against Ursinus on December 4, Washington's men won every event while Ursinus won every event on the women's side.

After snapping a losing streak with a 17-point win over Elizabethtown, the Washington women were blown away by Dickinson last Saturday....

With Eileen Kuriger's performance on Saturday, the women's team qualified their eighth swimmer for Conference Championships to be held in late February. Last year, head coach Kim Lessard only seven women on her entire team. Improvements can be seen on the women's side.

Washington Shoots Down G.C. Bullets

Last Saturday, the Gettysburg Bullets travelled to Chestertown for a Centennial Conference match-up with Washington in women's basketball.

The visitors were rudely welcomed, as the Shorewomen upset Gettysburg 58-52 for their first conference win and first victory at home.

Eboni Taylor led Washington with 17 points, while Allison Wentworth scored 13 and Kelly Rodgers added 12. Nine of Rodgers points came from 3-point shots, as she was three-for-seven from 3-point land.

Washington had to overcome a tremendous effort by Gettysburg's Kelly Geise, who led all scorers with 25 points.

Limiting turnovers was probably the key for Washington. After averaging 25.25 turnovers per game through the first 12 contests, the Shorewomen only turned the ball over 13 times against the Bullets while forcing 24 Gettysburg turnovers. Washington's Pam Hendrickson had eight steals for the game.

With the win, the Shorewomen improved to 4-9 on the season, and made their conference mark 1-5.

Also contributing in the scoring column for Washington were Cherie Gallini (six points), Lee Ann Lezzer (five) and Hendrickson (five).

Washington Men's Basketball Wins Five Of Last 11; Sneaks By Gettysburg

Matt Murray

Since early December, the Washington men's basketball team has faced 11 teams, going 5-6 over the string, including a 2-4 record against conference opponents.

Over the winter vacation, the Shoremen garnered third place in the Catholic Tournament as well as defeating Gallaudet on January 11 as part of their non-conference schedule. A three-game conference losing streak began by dropping a 64-62 decision to Dickinson, but Washington broke the string against Gettysburg last Saturday.

Listed below are summaries from all 11 Washington games since the last issue of The Elm was distributed.

W.C. 72 Gettysburg 71

On Saturday, the Shoremen travelled to Gettysburg, Pa. to face the Bullets in a Centennial Conference match-up. With the win, Washington improved to 7-9 and 2-4 in the conference.

Four players reached double figures for Washington with Geoff Rupert scoring 15 points, Ben Harris and Charles Cummings adding 14, and Adam Poe contributing 13. Derek Cuff and Jerry Davis each chipped in eight points.

Washington led 42-35 at halftime. Harris scored 10 points for the half, including two 3-pointers, while Poe scored eight points in the half, also with two 3-pointers, to lead the Shoremen effort in the first half.

The Shoremen kept the lead throughout the second half. However, after leading 70-59 after two Poe free throws with 6:42 remaining, Gettysburg went on a 12-0 run to cut the margin to take a 71-70 lead with 1:19 left.

Despite the comeback by Gettysburg, Washington took the win after a Cummings basket gave the Shoremen a 72-71 advantage with 52 seconds remaining.

W.C. 56 J. Hopkins 61

The Shoremen fell to 6-9 overall and 1-4 in the conference after a 61-56 loss to cross-state rival Johns Hopkins.

Rupert and Harris each scored 16 points, but the Shoremen failed to get any offensive support from the rest of the team.

In a low-scoring contest, Washington shot only 35% from the field in the first half on its way to a 22-point output through the first 20 minutes.

Washington pulled to within 36-35 with approximately nine minutes left in the game, but Johns Hopkins increased the lead to 11 before the Shoremen cut it to five in the closing minute.

The Bluejays' Luke Busby led all scorers with 17.

Wes Unseld, head coach of the National Basketball Association's Washington Bullets, was in attendence at the game to watch his son perform. Unseld's son, also named Wes, a freshman from Loyola High School saw limited playing time.

W.C. 72 Ursinus 82

Harris scored 17 points, Cummings and Poe each added 15, and Davis chipped in 10, but it wasn't enough to stop Ursinus in a Centennial Conference match-up in Collegeville, Pa.

Ursinus had five players reach double figures, and the Bears led by 10 at halftime, as they improved to 5-5.

Washington fell to 6-8 with the loss.

W.C. 62 Dickinson 64

In a heart-breaking loss, the Red Devils of Dickinson College edged Washington.

Rupert, Cummings, Harris and Cuff all reached double figures for the Shoremen, but it wasn't enough to pull out the win in Carlisle, Pa.

The contest was a sloppy one, featuring 41 total turnovers, and both squads shooting less than 50% from the field.

W.C. 76 Gallaudet 70

Washington evened its record at 6-6 after a six-point win against Gallaudet in Washington D.C.

Rupert led Washington with 23 points, while Cuff scored 17. Harris added 15, and Cummings contributed 11.

Washington trailed by seven at halftime, as Gallaudet's Mike Kent (24 points) and Anthony Jones (16 points) produced strong efforts.

However, Gallaudet committed 17 turnovers and shot only 7-for-26 from 3-point range, which both aided Washington's victory.

W.C. 69 Skidmore 62

In the consolation match of the Catholic Tournament, Washington prevailed by seven despite committing 22 turnovers.

Harris led all scorers with 25 points, including three 3-pointers. Rupert scored 15, and Cummings added 10.

Four players reached double figures for Skidmore.

W.C. 78 Tufts 97

Over the Christmas Holiday, the Shoremen travelled to Catholic University for a tourament.

In the first round, Washington faced a difficult Tufts squad and fell by 19. Cummings scored 22 and Rupert added 18.

It was the first game for the Shoremen without point guard Mark Kenah and second-leading scorer Jay Devlin, who both had grade problems after first semester.

Three Tufts players scored over 20 points.

W.C. 100 Salisbury 89

After a loss to Christopher Newport, Washington played in the consolation match of the Wild Goose Classic here in Chestertown and defeated Eastern Shore rival Salisbury.

Washington reached the century mark in points for the only time this season, as 10 players reached the scoring column.

Cummings led the team in scoring with 24, while Devlin scored 17 and Rupert added 15, as the Shoremen improved their record to 4-5.

W.C. 86 C. Newport 95

A close game throughout, Washington could not overcome a tremendous output by Christopher Newport's Ted Berry who scored 29 points.

Devlin scored 29 points for Washington, including five 3-pointers. Cummings added 18 and Harris chipped in 15, but it was not enough to come back from the visitors' two-point halftime lead.

W.C. 57 Muhlenberg 76

The Mules delivered a setback to the Shoremen in Allentown, Pa. on December 7.

Falling to 3-4, Washington only managed to shoot 34.8% on its field goal attempts and was 0-for-4 from 3-point range. Only two players reached double figures for the Shoremen as Cummings scored 11 and Rupert added 10.

W.C. 94 W. Maryland 89

Back on December 4, Washington pulled to a 3-0 record after a Centennial Conference win over the Green Terriors.

Harris exploded for 30 points, while Cummings scored 17. The Shoremen needed to overcome superb efforts by Western Maryland's Rolando Wekes and Pat Young who scored 26 and 21 points respectively.

Shorewomen Hoops Squad Hanging Tough In Centennial

Matt Murray

Since early December, the women's basketball team has won three of their ten games, including a conference victory Saturday against Gettysburg.

With Allison Wentworth (17.6 points per game) and Eboni Taylor (12.6 ppg) leading the way, the young team (which starts four freshmen and one senior) has exceeded early expectations in some respects.

Listed below are summaries of all of the games since the last issue of The Elm came out on December 3. The Haverford-Washington contest was played after press time.

Washington's next game will be Saturday against Swarthmore at 5:30 p.m.

W.C. 51 J. Hopkins 84

Taylor was the lone bright spot for the Shorewomen in the thrashing from Washington's cross-state rival. The freshman from Germantown, Md. scored 18 points, but the overall team effort was sloppy.

The Shorewomen shot only 40% on their field goal attempts and 68% from the free throw line.

For the Bluejays, five players reached double figures, and the visitors dominated the boards, outrebounding Washington 37-25.

W.C. 62 Ursinus 75

Ellen Cosgrove scored 28 points for the Bears, including the 1,000th of her three-year career. Heather Colvin and Chris Ferrier also reached double figures for the visitors who moved to 8-4 on the season.

For Washington, Wentworth led the team with 20 points, while Taylor notched 15 points and 19 rebounds. Lee Ann Lezzer added 12 points, including two 3-pointers.

While Washington dominated in rebounds, outrebounding Ursinus 60-36, the Shorewomen also committed 21 turnovers and shot 32.9% from the field.

W.C. 37 Dickinson 71

Dickinson dominated Washington defensively and offensively on its way to a 71-37 win at the Cain Athletic Center.

Despite Wentworth's 15 points and Lezzer's 12-point effort, 35 turnovers and a 35.7 field goal percentage destroyed the home team's chances at a victory.

"We've turned the ball over and turned down chances to shoot the ball," Washington head coach Lanee Cole said. "That's haunted us against very good teams like Dickinson."

Dickinson illustrated its strength from the beginning as the Red Devils started the game on a 19-6 run through the first seven minutes of the contest.

W.C. 47 L. Valley 60

Kelly Rodgers led all scorers with 18 points, including four 3-pointers, but it wasn't enough to stop Lebanon Valley as Washington fell, 60-47.

Lebanon Valley played a stifling defense, forcing 30 turnovers, on its way to the 14-point win.

"We're just not controlling the ball well," Washington head coach Lanee Cole said. "One time we go down the court and we control our offense, but the next time down, we throw the ball away."

Washington (3-6) also helped the visitors' cause when it failed to start the game on a strong note. After a 27-day layoff, the Shorewomen came out flat, and Cole decided to burn two timeouts in the first 12 minutes to keep her team in the game.

W.C. 97 Trinity 14

In the consolation final of the Gallaudet Tournament, Washington demolished Trinity 97-14. Eight players reached the scoring column for the Shorewomen, as Wentworth led all scorers with 20 points.

Also in the scoring column for Washington were Taylor (17 points), Erica Estep (17), Liz Mangano (15), Rodgers (11), Melissa Kordula (nine), Gallini (six), and Lezzer (two).

Trinity shot a dismal 18% from the field and committed 36 turnovers.

W.C. 66 Mt. Holyoke 71

In the first round of the Gallaudet Tournament on December 10, Washington threw a nine-point halftime lead on its way to a five-point loss.

Wentworth led all scorers with 26 points, but five Mount Holyoke players reached double figures on its way to its first win of the season.

Washington 63 Muhlenberg 78

In their second conference loss of the young season, Washington committed 31 turnovers and managed only two players in double figures.

Wentworth scored 25 points and Rodgers added 16 for the Shorewomen, but the Mules overpowered Washington from the start.

Muhlenberg held a 42-32 halftime lead, and nine players reached the scoring column for the Mules in the 15-point victory.

W.C. 49 St. Mary's 52

Washington held a two-point lead at halftime, but St. Mary's Cindy Davenport (22 points) led the home team to a three-point win over the Shorewomen.

Wentworth and Lezzer each scored 15 for Washington, while Rodgers added eight.

W.C. 65 Eastern 46

The Shorewomen evened their record at 2-2 after a 12-point non-conference win.

Wentworth, Gallini, Taylor and Hendrickson all reached double figures.

Washington outrebounded Eastern 54-26 while also forcing 23 turnovers.

Leading scorers as of Jan. 23

Men's Basketball Suffers Setback

The Washington men's basketball team suffered a severe setback after first semester grades were issued.

According to The Kent County News, starters Jay Devlin and Mark Kenah were asked by the administration to leave for a semester due to failing grades.

Devlin, a junior from Springfield, Pennsylvania will be sorely missed. A 3-point threat, he was second in the team in scoring, averaging 14.1 points per game.

Devlin's season included a 21-point outburst against Division I opponent U.M.B.C.

Though Kenah averaged only 2.6 ppg, he was the starting point guard for the last two seasons.

A sophomore from West Orange, New Jersey, Kenah was a strong defender and a good passer.

According to unconfirmed sources, both players hope to return next fall.

"Neither one will be back this semester," athletic director Geoff Miller said. "However, they may be able to return next year."

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

Well, a return of the "name game" threatened, but I decided against it (as a big sigh of relief sweeps across campus).

Instead, since I'm not in a very creative mood, I'll just introduce this week's Player of the Week...

For the second issue in a row (remember the one way back on December 3 when Eboni Taylor was name P.O.W.?) a women's basketball player gets this week's honor.

A freshman from Millersville, Maryland, Allison Wentworth, receives this week's award. A member of three 4A State Championship teams in high school, Wentworth was only recruited by Washington, and that recruiting has paid off.

After the Gettysburg game, Wentworth is averaging 17.6 points per game, and her rebound totals place her in the top 25 in the nation.

Also an outstanding sturdent, Wentworth was the valedictorian of her high school class and has done outstanding work thus far at Washington.

So what if she has a goofy smile, stares off into the distance like she's in a daze sometimes, and tries to dominate interviews.

And I know it hurts the average student to realize that yes, she is a Duke basketball fan, but hey, nobody's perfect (go Tarheels).

Overall, she's just one of those people that you can't go wrong with (unless you let her drive over a bridge--she doesn't like bridges). Oh well, I'm just rambling at this point, so how about some honorable mentions--

Jen Green--fighting off a bum shoulder and all, Green still sets an example for the swimming team, as she heads into conference championships for the fourth year in a row.

Adam Poe--Poe has picked up some of the slack from Devlin and Kenah's absence. A regular on the bench for the first third of the season, Poe has recently made some valuable contributions.

Gene Hessey to Retire in June

John K. Phoebus

Washington College was stunned on Wednesday by the announcement of Mr. Gene Hessey's retirement, effective June 30, 1994. Mr. Hessey, Senior Vice President for Management and Finance, has handled the college's finances for the past 24 years. According to a memorandum from the President, Hessey "very simply wants to retire."

As Senior Vice President for Management and Finance, Hessey has been a stable, trusted figure, acting as a faithful steward of the College's finances in times of prosperity and times of fiscal trouble. Hessey's role is both that of financial engineer and senior administrator, each of which he fills fairly and competently. He has assisted the College through the booming Eighties which brought physical and fiscal growth to WC during the Cater years, and has recently provided insight and guidance in less auspicious times.

"I believe it is fair to say there has been no member of the administration more trusted, or better liked than Gene Hessey." — President Trout.

Active in the broader community of Kent and Queen Anne's Counties, Hessey is accessible to students, faculty, administrators and Board members in ways which extend far beyond his official capacities. He is a devoted, amicable man who cares deeply about not only the financial prosperity of our institution, but the well being of its people. His years of work demonstrate that his desire and ability to nurture both. Hessey also serves as Treasurer of the Board of Visitors of Governors at Washington College. The Board serves as the governing body at our institution and Hessey, as an officer, is a member of its Executive Council.

President Trout greeted the news of Hessey's retirement by praising him for his years of service and simultaneously expressing dismay for the loss of such a valued member of the college community. Trout stated that "I believe it is fair to say there has been no member of the administration more trusted, or better liked than Gene Hessey ... he

SGA Gears Up for A Busy Semester

Rachael Fink

Now that classes are going full swing, the Student Government Association is gearing up to change the face of Washington College. With Birthday Ball and the official dedication of The Cove coming up, SGA members have their hands full. But they are not restricting themselves to the planning and execution of these two events. As a result of some intensive brain-storming by the entire SGA, a list of projects was drafted to keep the senators and officers busy throughout the semester and into next year.

One task is the formation of an ad hoc committee on social life to meet sometime next week. SGA President Jamie Baker is planning on inviting representatives from the fraternities, sororities and other groups on campus to discuss the scheduling of events in the new student center and elsewhere on campus. Issues concerning The Cove that still need to be dealt with include the number of student monitors needed to staff functions, and whether or not a group can sponsor an invite-only event using the student center. "We're learning as we go," says Baker, and by the time the perfect plan of action is decided upon "we will have tried a lot of different options." Baker hopes to bring the campus together through the use of The Cove and student center. A bulletin board will be installed in the completed Cove to display an all-campus calendar listing registered parties, elections, lectures and the like. He also hopes to get the Visual Artist's Union to display student art on the walls of the multi-purpose room. The official dedication of The Cove and the student center will be held on the 18th of February, and Baker is looking for a strong student attendance to show the Board of Visitors and Governors, alumni, and

Department Chairs Meet with Dean Wubbels to Reform External Review Process

Scott Koon

At the final faculty meeting last semester a resolution was passed which had been considered at an earlier meeting of the American Association of University Professors. The motion was motivated by "various inconsistencies and procedural problems" related to external evaluations, and called for the suspension of all external evaluations of academic departments "until"such time as the Department Chairs can meet with the Dean of the College to develop a written policy of guidelines for outside evaluations that are acceptable to the Administration and approved by the faculty."

This past Monday the mandated meeting between the Dean and the Department Chairs took place, with President Trout attending in an advisory capacity. The Elm interviewed several of those in attendance, and all agreed that the meeting was highly constructive and that the consensus arrived at will result in many changes in the way external reviews are conducted at Washington College.

On January 18 in a memo sent to the Department Chairs, Dean and Provost Gene G. Wubels proposed a number of revisions in the current procedure. Dean Wubbels said of the meeting that "We just sat around the table and talked for about an hour about the proposed revision, and the faculty suggested a number of additional changes ... I took notes, and now I'm going to revise the guidelines, and the next thing will be to either mail them or to have another meeting with the Department Chairs to discuss the draft guidelines." Wubbels emphasized that the final result of this process will be a set of guidelines which will be "not just Administration-approved, they'll be jointly approved by the faculty and Administration."

Perhaps the most significant of the proposed changes is that the outside reviewers will no longer meet with the Appointments and Tenure Committee. The Guidelines for Departmental Self-Study and Outside Review stipulate that the reviewers spend an hour with the A&T Committee. In the January 18 memorandum it was acknowledged that "The answer is that the duly-constituted personnel policies of the College that are handled by the Appointments and Tenure Committee are not to be part of the review. That wasn't clear, and the faculty wanted us to make that clear. I think we have now."

Whose Center is it, Anyway?

During the entire process of developing the New Student Center, students have been involved. Or at least, students appear to be involved. Our higher ups have allowed the SGA to decide on such issues as whether or not to allow smoking in the facility and what to name the place.

It appears, however, that SGA decisions can be rendered utterly meaningless by the Administration as soon as they become inconvenient. Last semester, the SGA decided to allow smoking in the multipurpose room while banning it in the new eatery. As I noted in this space at that time, the only real effect of this decision was to make yet another place on campus smoker-free.

But at least our right to smoke in the multi-purpose room was preserved by the decision of the SGA, right? Wrong. Now it turns out that smokers are also banned from the area near the large screen television. Apparently, the powers that be do not trust the students not to burn holes in the lovely new upholstered furniture.

At stake is the issue of whether the SGA means anything at all. If the Administration can simply overrule the SGA without anyone challenging it, then our "student government" becomes nothing more than just another club you can join while in college. There are any number of ways we can prevent holes from appearing in the upholstery, such as coffee tables with nice big ashtrays.

There will naturally be wear and tear on our lovely new student center. We should all work to minimize this damage, but we must also be realists when it comes to realizing that the center was built to be used by spirited and active young people. It is not now, and was never intended to be, a mausoleum-like showpiece where we must behave at all times will solemnity and decorum. A certain amount of rambunctiousness should be permitted. This is a college, not a monastery.

And yet it seems that there is the danger that the new student center is not a place where young people are simply permitted to relax and be themselves. Someone decided against having video games and pinball in the facility simply because teenagers and children from town would play the games, which never bothered me. In fact, in my opinion it is all to the good. There is little enough for children to do in Chestertown, yet it was decided to take their games away. Of course, it has been argued that these games caused problems in that it brought kids into our student facility. These kids, I suppose, are simply too young, too poor and too black to fit in on our College campus with its Ivy-league pretensions.

But certain types of behavior are also prohibited for the very same students for whom the center was built in the first place. After last weekend, it is official: no slam dancing in the student center. One of the students prohibited from slam dancing was the Elm's own Twinky Blinky who said "Hey, if we can't slam dance, that's fine. Just don't tease me and get a Ska band and then tell me we can't slam. Just go on getting lame Grateful Dead cover bands, and then I won't come."

Obergruppenführer Berry and his crack student Gestapo will be on the lookout for prohibited behavior. No exiting out the back door, for that is for emergency exit only. Besides, we reserve the right to restrict your behavior in and way we deem appropriate. No moshing: that doesn't fit in with our preconceptions of what Washington College students should be like. No pinball or video games because they attract undesirable elements to campus. (You'd think they were talking about terrorists, not children.) No, I'm afraid you can't bring a beer into the center and relax after classes because we only want you to drink when we can profit from it. But, golly, you kids go ahead and have a good time now!

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor:

Thanks are in order for Mr. Hargrove and all others who have given their time and money toward making what promises to be a wonderful Birthday Ball. However, I cannot help but wonder if this generosity might not be better directed elsewhere.

Upwards of $60,000 is quite a sum. I would like to propose a number of possible uses for this amount of money.

1. Hire a full-time professor for a year.
2. Hire two part-time professors for a year.
3. Put it toward Financial Aid.
4. Put it toward more books for Miller Library.
5. Host several prominent speakers on campus.
6. Ensure that the LFC LifeCycles have foot straps for all eternity.
7. Put it toward renovating a dormitory.
8. Put it toward renovating and modernizing Tawes Theatre.
9. Buy the ELM some equipment. (I bet this letter gets printed!)

This is just a spur of the moment list. There are probably two dozen other uses for $60,000 on this campus. I don't mean to rain on anybody's parade, I just want everyone involved to consider priorities.

I recognize the importance of community-wide social events, but I can remember Black Hearts Balls which were perfectly splendid and had maybe a $500 budget. $60,000 does not necessarily ensure a good time, but it can ensure someone's education.

Have a good time at "Mardi Gras"!

Sincerely,
Justin Cann '93

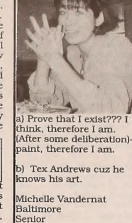
EarthJump Washington College, a Joint Effort

Gosh it's been a long time since we've seen any unity on this campus. Though "The Cove" was packed with students on its maiden voyage, it wasn't the same as the good ole' days of the Coffee House. What this campus needs is a real group effort to bring school spirit back to the student body! It's about time we did something to bring us together as a hole. We need to come together in charitable union; a resounding voice of solidarity. Chestertown: we propose EarthJump Washington College.

In the spirit of "Hands Across America," We envision a bringing-together of the populace of Chestertown in a show of Environmental and Cultural awareness. On Saturday, February 5th—that's tomorrow afternoon for those of you reading this today—at 2:30 pm, the countdown to EarthJump begins. At 3:00 the ground will shake with the resounding force of the impact of the multitudes that have gathered in a spirit of conscientious unity. In one massive show of effort we will demonstrate the ability of a few brave souls to move the Earth, if only their desire be strong enough. The force of the entire crowd jumping in one synchronized movement demonstrates just how profound an effect mankind has on the future of this planet. If we can move the planet with the sheer force of our legs, we can do anything—yes, we can mend what the destructive forces of technology have torn asunder in the pursuit of the almighty buck: viz. our planet and our people.

Rudy Weitz, Andrew Stone, Aaron Pierce, Scott Koon, Brian Matheson, with special thanks to Moonpile and Tom



As the great poet Jim Morrison once said: "We have ravaged and plundered and bit her and ripped her, stuck her with knives in the side of the dawn, tied her with fences and dragged her down," (The Best of the Doors, disk 1, "When the Music's Over," track 11; 7:18-7:35). The great Cretaceous extinction which wiped out the dinosaurs and many other species will pale in comparison to the one which callous and short-sighted barons of industry are working so assiduously to bring about. The dinosaurs were just dumb animals, incapable of preventing their demise—will some future sentient race descended from cockroaches one day say the same of us? As I do support the freedom of speech with stony adamancy, I have allowed the preceeding text to remain. I must, however, voice my exception and, indeed, outrage to the use of such condecending and blatantly speciesistic language by one of my co-authors, whose name and revolutionary intentions shall remain unrevealed—BKM.] We must no longer ignore death rattle of our dying world. We must protest the ignorant abuse of our fair planet. We must forever fight to raise the consciousness of the world at large to the urgency of this apocalyptic crisis. There can be no rest until the threat to our Mother Earth and our blessed society are eliminated. For the sake of our comm-unity, we must come together in sol-id-ar-i-ty with the oppressed people and species of Gaia.

Future of Washington College Graduates is Bleak

George Jamison

This is a thought for everyone who is about to utter into the real world. Beware! It is not all the fun and glory that we are lulled into believing. In fact, be prepared to be bored like you have never been bored before. Sure, it all seems exciting and glamorous to graduate from college and doing what you always wanted. But wait until you finally become accustomed to this perennial way of life that millions before have undergone.

What I am trying to say is that in the next few years, we all will become prey to the monster that we have always tried to escape.

We will looking for a job in order to support ourselves so that we will not end up living with our parents. We will have to start paying back the student loans that we took out in order to attend a high-priced, private school, the same institution that we thought would be a stepping stone to obtain all too-elusive respectable job only to find that it did not really matter which institution of higher education you attended because there are no jobs for college graduates unless you have brilliant networking skills or nepotistic credentials.

We will not be able to work at any fast-food dives because we will be over-qualified and the management will not want "educated" individuals telling them how to run their businesses in a better, more productive manner.

Or we will be enrolling in more institutions of higher education in order to take out more loans and soak up more information in order to pray to God that there will be less competition for the even more elusive and respectable jobs that we were not eligible for with only a bachelor's degree.

But in the end, it all turns out the same. We will wake up at an all-too-early time of the day in order to make it to work on time and avoid the hassles from the boss. We will work our respective "eight-hour day, forty-hour week", travel to our homes in lemming fashion, open up the mail, bitch about the bills and the fact that you never receive anything in the mail of much importance so what is the point of the Postal Service anyway, fix dinner, eat dinner, watch hour upon hour of bad television and go to bed. Only to start it all over again the next day.

Oh, what a bleak and wonderful world to which we all have to look forward. But don't worry about it for too long. There are some perquisites. If you have cable, you can channel surf for hours on end until you find something that you like. And after you have done it long enough you will get into a system that is rather comfortable and healthy. Take me for example. When I don't feel like doing my work or have done it all, I watch television. I am what you would call a TV aficionado. I have found the set of television shows that I could watch the rest of my life. It all starts at 3:30 in the afternoon, since most of my classes and work is done by this time. I watch an hour-and-a-half of cartoons, preferably Tiny Toons, Animaniacs, and has assiduously and humanely safeguarded the interests of Washington College and those who have worked here." While wishing he would not retire, Trout wished Hessey and his wife well in their years ahead. The President stated that he asked Hessey three times to remain here, but the Sr. Vice President was firm in his decision.

Due to the difficult financial situation of the College, the selection of a successor to Mr. Hessey will be one of the most important decisions to be made by our College this decade. Trout indicated in the letter that a search committee would be appointed by next week. The task of such a valued individual must be lamented, yet we must also be thankful for Mr. Hessey's years of dedicated service. Ω donors that the students appreciate the time, effort and, yes, money that went into the renovation of the building.

In another effort to bring the campus together the SGA is working on plans to set up non-athletic, inter-dorm competitions. This idea, to be passed on to Rec Sports possibly, will facilitate the interaction between the dorms and members of the dorms through "capture-the-flag-like games," in hopes that more students will become involved in campus wide activities that do not rely on athletic skills or prowess.

An event still the beginning planning stages is Parent's Day. There was much positive feed-back concerning last spring's SGA run Parent's Day and Baker is confident that&Junior class president Ken Pipkin will organize another successful day.

The SGA is branching out this semester, and planning on helping the Maryland Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society plan and execute a 10K walk in April. The walk will start and end on campus and Baker hopes to elicit support for the cause from the college community. All money raised goes to support services and research and prizes are awarded to those participants raising over $75.

Several long term projects the SGA will be addressing in the weeks to come include a new and improved version of the taxi service that was experimented with last year. Baker thinks that increasing advertisement will help the service get off to a better start this semester. Proposed changes include trips to local bars, which will cut down on the amount of driving under the influence of alcohol. While Baker says it may "seem strange" to offer such services, he feels that it will be of value and simply makes sense.

Another program in the infant stages of planning is the reselling of used books to the SGA. The SGA is "seriously considering" setting up a program by which students can sell their books to the SGA, and buy used books for much less than the cost of new books in the WC Bookstore. While the hows, whens and wheres of this program have not yet been decided on, the idea is one that the SGA will be working on very hard this semester.

Of utmost importance to the SGA this semester are the completion of the revised Honor Code and the newest version of the Long Range Planning Committee's report. If everything continues on schedule the new Honor Code will be in the handbooks by fall. This is, however, a big if, as the revisions still have several hurdles to pass through. The updated version of the LRP report, issued in mid-December, is

"We have a vested interest in getting our opinions in."
—SGA President Jamie Baker

an issue for Baker, personally, as well as for the SGA as a whole. Baker is hoping to get a student response to the Administration to show that there is interest in the long term plans of the College. Baker has been a member of the Long Range Planning Committee since it began.

Another issue for which Baker is hoping to elicit student response concerns the budget cuts expected next year. "We have a vested interest in getting our opinions in," states Baker. "People are going to have to give on this," and Baker thinks that informing the administration on what items constitute priorities for students will insure that the services the students rely on will still be available.

The SGA is also planning on instituting some internal changes. Towards the goals of facilitating communication and increasing effectiveness, more power will be shifted to the committee chairs within the Senate. Also towards this end, programs will be structured differently to ensure that Senators will be better able to accomplish their talks in a timely and efficient manner. Ω this meeting is "a gratuitous source of confusion." The A&T Committee is an advisory committee to the President which concerns itself with faculty hiring and promotions.

In an interview the Dean said that while this might give the appearance of improperly linking personnel matters and external departmental reviews, its appearance is in no way related to the way the College makes decisions about hiring, retaining and promoting faculty. "One of the serious complaints was about the confusion of whether the reviews, and to what extent the reviews, dealt with personnel," Wubbels said. The answer is that the duly-constituted personnel policies of the College that are handled by the Appointments and Tenure Committee are not to be part of the review. That just wasn't done and the faculty wanted us to make that clear. I think we have now."

Wubbels said that

"There were a lot of positive suggestions about how these reviews are to be done and in particular how some of the abuses which have occurred in the past would be very difficult if not impossible to occur in the future."
Dr. Al Briggs

the meetings between the A&T Committee and external reviewers have never had an impact on individuals coming before the A&T Committee. "We properly should not, we have not, we never intended to—but there was confusion about—whether or not this was a process of going out and soliciting outside expert opinions through a channel different from the one specified in the faculty handbook," Wubbels said. "The Administration's point of view is that we have never intended to do that, we didn't do it, and that there has been a wall of separation between that duly-constituted process and the outside review."

The faculty contest this assertion, arguing that the reason for raising the issue in the first place was to stop actual abuses. Dr. Albert W. Briggs, who was present at the meeting as the Chair of the Mathematics Department, said "There were a lot of positive suggestions about how these reviews are to be done and in particular how some of the abuses which have occurred in the past would be very difficult if not impossible to occur in the future."

Bennett J. Lamond, Chair of the English Department, said "The team that came to evaluate the English Department did not know why they had to meet with the Appointments and Tenure Committee. They had met with some of the individuals on the Appointments and Tenure Committee in other contexts—Tom Cousineau and Sean O'Connor, for example—and some of these same issues were brought up, but nothing having to do with Appointments and Tenure as such. They felt it was an odd body to meet with."

One probable outcome of the discourse over controversy is that the reviewers will meet with the Faculty Council instead of the A&T Committee. Academic Council is chaired by the Dean, and the A&T Committee is chaired by the President.

Wubbels said another proposed change is that the outside reviewers would submit their reports to the Department Chairs for factual verification and corrections. "Not changes of the content of analysies, but correction of errors. It happens, they [outside reviewers] sometimes get things wrong."

Another change sought by the faculty regards review of reviewer's reports by the Academic Affairs Committee of the Board of Visitors and Governors. This is currently allowed for, but faculty members expressed concern that the highly technical nature of such reports renders them useless when applied to an extra-departmental body, and that specific points made in such reports can ultimately undermine the development of a five-year departmental academic plan which should be far more appropriate for the Board's consideration.

Dr. Garry E. Clarke, Chair of the Music Department, said that this change would better serve the purpose of the reviews, adding that these documents "were not intended to be something for the Board. They were intended to help the department—and supposedly help the Administration in helping the department. Many faculty were concerned because initially, when this idea was first talked about, there was no hint that the Board would be involved in any way."

Clarke said this change is not meant to decrease the Board's role in the academic affairs of the College: "I've worked with the Academic Affairs Committee of the Board over the years, and that Committee can be a helpful and valuable source of looking at academic issues, but what an external review team is talking about to a department is often of a very technical and a very focused kind of nature. Something that they may suggest with reference to music is not even something that it would be in the Board's interest to be considering. I made the comment in the meeting that this is an issue which is very much questioned, and the Dean and the President seemed agreeable to addressing it."

Another change is that it seems that many more review teams will be composed of two members. Currently review teams are made up of three members, and cutting down on their number where possible would save the College a substantial amount of money. Ω

Biographers to be Honored at Convocation

Angela Panton and Kiona Estravit

June 1, 1946, President Truman received an honorary doctorate of law from Washington College at commencement. He was not the only President of recent years to receive this honor from the College; President Eisenhower was honored in 1954. A second opportunity has been given to Washington College to relive this event. In celebration of George Washington's birthday, the biographers of Truman and Eisenhower, David McCullough and Stephen E. Ambrose, will be honored with doctorates of letters.

David McCullough has been renowned for his national bestseller Truman, which won the Pulitzer Prize for biography in May 1993 and was on the New York Times bestseller list for forty-three weeks. McCullough other works include The Johnstown Flood, The Great Bridge, The Path Between the Seas, Mornings on Horseback, and Brave Companions, which is a collection of essays on great figures past and present. McCullough, a distinguished writer, has received the National Book Award for both The Path Between the Seas and Mornings on Horseback. Furthermore, he has won the Samuel Eliot Morrison Award, the Cornelius Ryan Award, the Los Angeles Times Biography Prize, and a Guggenheim Fellowship.

Mr. McCullough is currently President of the Society of American Historians. During his productive lifetime, he has received ten honorary degrees in the areas of humanities and engineering. Despite his tight schedule he still manages to spend some time teaching at Cornell University and the Wesleyan Writers' Conference. For his efforts he has been rewarded the New York Public Library's Literary Lion Award and the Pennsylvania Governor's Award for excellence in the area of the humanities. Due to his dedication to the community, he has been accorded the Harry S. Truman Award for Public Service.

McCullough, known to millions as the host of the PBS series "The American Experience," is also the narrator of such prestigious documentaries, as, LBJ, The Donner Party, and The Civil War. In addition, McCullough has received an Emmy Award for his contribution to the "Smithsonian World" series.

McCullough's ties with Washington College are not restricted to his role as Truman's biographer. McCullough's grade school teacher, Mr. Cocohran, is an alumnus of Washington College. Mr. Cocohran was responsible for teaching McCullough English and Art. This was the deciding factor in McCullough's decision to accept this honor.

Stephen Ambrose, the biographer of Eisenhower, is a preeminent scholar in the field of history with a particular interest in World War II. His expertise has led him to be a renowned author and columnist . His publications include Handbook on German Military Forces, a bi-weekly column in the Baltimore Evening Sun and many articles in prestigious magazines and newspapers such as American Historical Review and the New York Times Book Review. Currently, he is senior fellow at Rutgers Center for Historical Analysis, Boyd professor of history at U.N.O., , a member of the Society for American Historians of Foreign Relations and on the board of directors for the American Committee on World War II.

Ambrose has recently returned from Europe where he has been researching the invasion of Normandy. His latest publication "D-Day Revisited," in The Quarterly Journal of Military History deals with recollections of the invasion by eye witness military personnel. Ambrose has been researching the battle of Normandy ever since he first worked for General Eisenhower in 1964.

There will be a President's Forum, on "After D-Day: Truman, Eisenhower, and the America They Helped to Shape," on February 19th. Students are encouraged to attend and avail themselves of the opportunity to discuss this period of recent history with experts uniquely qualified to answer questions. There will also be a book signing featuring the honorees at the Bookstore.

The ceremony honoring these two scholars will be held in Tawes Theater at 2 p.m. on Saturday, February 19th. The invitation is extended to all students and faculty and will prove to be a stimulating afternoon. McCullough and Ambrose will provide a link to our own past at Washington College by bringing to life those two enhancing our understanding of Truman, Eisenhower and the times in which they lived. Ω

Elicia Gale Replaces O'Donnell as Associate Director of Development Office

Beth Welch

This semester Washington College acquired a new Associate Director in the Development Office. Elicia Gale has arrived at her office in Bunting to help plan the College's financial prospects for the coming years.

A recent graduate from Yale University, Gale replaces the former Associate Director, Kathleen O'Donnell, who left the College for a managerial position with Teach for America. Gale says her previous jobs have helped her prepare for her new position, having dealt with public relations and working with people in general.

Gale views her new duties as forms of fund-raising. One of her goals is to raise more money each year through our annual fund, which pays for fifty percent of each student's education here. Theoretically, the College needs to raise one out of every three dollars in order to support financial aid, faculty salaries, the library, lab equipment, computer services, student activities, and dorm and building maintenance.

The utmost goal this year, Gale states, is to increase the annual fund by increasing participation in the fund raising activities of seniors, parents, alumni and friends of the college to one hundred percent. Gale hopes the increased annual fund will finally lead to the greater satisfaction of every student on campus— so much both academically and socially that they will be "so thrilled with the experience... that they will tell everyone they meet [about the College]... and put Washington College on the map."

Gale, feeling education is of utmost importance, is excited about working for the college. She grew up in the area and realizes how

CHICKEN LITTLE'S KITCHEN MIDDEN

FRONT AND CENTER, in the kitchen, my broom and I have been sitting and waiting quietly for a long time.
Brass pots, copper pans, whisks, and sifters; all are still.
Outside is the end of day and I watch as it moves towards me.
Not smoothly, but in fits and starts like an emotional miasmic tar spit up from an argument between old friends. It half-fills everything with the black activity of nothing. I watch until I can't see.
I light a match.

IN A SUDDEN HARUMPH the entire thing crystalizes in mid-drift and falls to the ground, shattering into fifty-nine angular pieces. I sweep up the obsidian shards, put them into an old gunny sack and lug their lift down the ancient howling cellar steps to the basement where they will dream fine and deep forever.

Postcards such as this one are printed by the O'Neill Literary House Press to celebrate poetry at Washington College.

The Fall, 1993 winners of the O'Neill Literary House Poetry Post Card Contest are: Kelli Youngblood, '97 —for "Unlike Elvis, Superman Lives"
Paul Small, '97 —for "Lawn Furniture"
J. Tarin Towers, '94 —for "...Tomorrow's Wednesday and I"

The contest was judged by the poet Erin Murphy. Each of the three winners will have their poem printed as a post card at the literary house press room by Mike Kaylor and student apprentices.

Contest entries are picked from the Broadside series. The series will also print short, one-page pieces of fiction. Writers whose work appeared in the Fall series are still eligible for the Spring. Submissions for the Spring semester are now being considered and should be sent to Tanya Allen through campus mail, literary house mail, or E-mail.

Student Center Proposed to Board

Geoff Garinther

"They seemed to be genuinely interested," said Student Government Association President Jay Young after his Committee on Student Facilities last Friday presented to the Board of Visitors and Governors' Buildings and Grounds Committee a proposal to turn the basement of Hodson Hall into a student activities center.

"It's a very solid and impressive plan, and it's hard not to agree with it," said Young of the proposal, which includes a cost estimate, blueprints, and an artist's conception of the renovation.

The Board's Budget and Finance Committee was expected to consider the proposal and its more than $45,000 preliminary cost estimate last Wednesday.

Young said he was "very optimistic" about the Financial Committee's consideration of the proposal. "I have no concrete reason to be so, but I have that feeling because it's been so warmly received by everyone."

The SGA's presentation last Friday came in response to a Buildings and Grounds Committee request for a detailed proposal for the long-sought after student activities center. Young, who offered both a written and oral presentation, told the Committee that "Right now on campus there is no real central place where people can get together and interact socially.

"We really do need a place for socializing. We think it might help the retention problem, and it also might help Admissions."

Young said the major change would be a "reinstatement of the purpose of the snack bar." In the proposed renovation, the Coffee House would be expanded to include the snack bar, and hours for the multi-purpose operation would be expanded on weekends.

The plan also includes a renovation of what is now the mail room area into a large-screen TV lounge. The office space adjoining the Coffee House would be remodeled into a game room.

A Maintenance Department estimate place renovations to the interior of the proposed center at just over $15,100. Estimates for demolition and some of the larger interior work brought the total cost to more than $45,000.

The SGA's written summation of the proposal outlines "advantages of that render (each room) to be both practical and necessary." The Coffee House "needs desperately to be enlarged and improved, as it is such a vital part of the social life on campus," states that summary. The Down with the Ship!

If a ship is sinking, would you jump off of it? Would you look for a lifeboat, or let the children go first? If you were a man, would you let a woman take your space on the lifeboat? If you were a woman, would you fight him for it?

Students, the degree is a metaphor for jumping off of a ship that may still be afloat. A Master's Degree, MFA or Ph.D. is insurance that if your first ship sinks, you'll have others to keep you afloat.

Students have it easy. They get to pick an institution, any one they want, provided that they can 1) get enough financial aid to stay there or 2) get their parents to pay for it. They can even transfer, almost at will, if their grades are okay.

Employees of a college don't have it so easy. They may be from the area originally, and their occupation may be a welcome way to stay in the town they grew up in. People who move to a new place to work at a college have to set up new roots, new friends and doctors and business acquaintances. Or they can choose to remain outsiders, permanently drifting until something better comes along.

Either way, people in a college community have to do lots of thinking when they decide to change jobs. The comfort of having a library and fitness facilities at one's disposal, and having a large group of people with at least one similar interest (academia) in common, is a tough one give up.

That's why so many students get their Bachelor's degree, go straight to grad school, and slowly drift from one into professordom. It's comfortable, it's viable, it's acceptable, and it's rewarding.

Until the ship starts sinking. Is this place going under? I don't know. People are scared. Students are wondering if their degree will be worth anything in five years, or ten, or twenty.

Administrators are finding outs while they can. We've had, in the last four years, a lot of turnover in areas like Financial Aid and Development. Lots of administrative-types stick around long enough to get a free Master's in English or Psychology and then say, see-ya.

Then again, lots of WC graduates just can't get enough and acquire permanent or semi-permanent jobs here. Or in town.

Washington College seems to be a magnet that draws some back indefinitely and repels others with force.

But is the magnet ship-shaped, and if so, is it going down? And who's going to be the brave captain that goes down with it? Or is Lord Jim See "Dirt," on p. 8.

The difficulties at the College aren't just financial ones. There are morale problems that students often sense sooner than the professors who often seem oblivious to non-academic problems: "I had no idea that the housekeeping staff was paid less than my baby-sitter," etc.

After spending several weeks all stuck in the middle of the belly of a great blue whale many of t h e students/faculty/staff/sea creatures of the Washington College campus started going stir crazy.

"Eeeeeeeyaaaaaaa!" screamed GEOFFREY P. SIMMSfish, "I Want out of this! I don't want to be inside the belly of a great blue whale anymore!"

"Heeeeeyaaaachaaaa!" shouted REX R. VOGANIfish. "I don't want to be a fish anymore!"

"Neeenernneenerneenerpeek a!" howled AMY OSBORNEfish, "Who got us into this nonsensical mess in the first place?!"

"I don't know!" deliberated ALISON J. DELIBERTOfish. "But whoever it is, I think we should KILL THEM!"

"You know who I think must be responsible for all this?" said DR. JOHN A. CONKLINGfish. "I think it's Tarin Towers."

(There was a hush as all aquatic sea creatures waited with baited breath to see what he would say next.)

"I think it must be...The English majors!"

"The English majors! The English majors started chanting. "It must be the English majors! Kill them! Kill them! Kill them 'till they're dead!"

"After all," said DR. E D G A R A N D R O BUSCAGLIafish, "As everyone knows, the English majors were beginning to be the downfall of this college, even before all of this fish-business started happening!"

"Uh...how so?" genteelly asked BENNETT LAMONDfish, (a pike) as he turned white.

"Well, look—there's more English majors on this campus than there are any other type of major, and therefore the other departments are suffering, because not enough attention is given to them! This school places too much of an emphasis on English! What about all of the other departments, like business, and science, and psychology, and math, and art, and etc.—don't we matter as well? It's all English! English! All anyone cares about here is English!"

"Well, maybe that's because all of the other departments...suck?" quietly ventured RUDY WEITZfish, an English major.

All the majors but English majors immediately screamed, "Kill the English majors! Kill the English majors! English majors are evil!"

"No, no, no, no, no!" said BENNET LAMONDfish, "Listen to me! I do agree that some English majors are evil, but not all of them, not all...the only evil English majors at WC are those who have fallen under the influence of..." he raised a trembling dorsal fin, "HIM!" Everyone turned and looked at the evil ROBERT DAYfish.

"The lit house..." KEITH WHITEFORDfish hissed.

"The lit house..." BRENDA STANLEYfish hissed.

"Wait a minute!" said PATRICK GEISSELfish, "So, what you're saying is, everyone on the Washington College campus has been turned into a fish and then been swallowed by a great blue whale because of...lit house English majors? And because the English major in general...is so popular? You're all crazy! You've been in the belly too long!"

"The literary house sucks! It's filled with Upperclassman Lit house English majors! And they're all really pr•entious and fake!" shouted a Freshman writer and pre-English major.

"Oh, shut up," said TARIN TOWERSfish, flicking the Freshman on the head. "People always make fun of what they don't understand...There are always a few Freshman writerfish who put on a big act of despising the upperclassman lit house fish, and then end up turning INTO upperclassman lit house fish when they themselves move into the upper classes!"

"There are not! No Freshman fish ever does that!" protested TANYA ALLENfish. "The lit house! The lit house! 'Twas brillig...What's going on? Nothing's making sense anymore! I must be dreaming! Somebody help me, I think I'm having a stream of consciousness! Intellectual angst! Oh! Oh!"

"FREAK!" shouted a bunch of sciencefish. "You must be on drugs! All lit house freaks are on drugs!"

"Somebody get me something black!" whimpered TANYA ALLENfish. "And coffee....must have coffee...."

"Kill the lit house freak! Kill the lit house freak!"

"No! No! Must have coffee...must have coffee...You're all a pack of cards! You're all...a p a c k . . . o f casaarrrddssss....."

And then the great blue whale opened its mouth, burped, "YAWP!" and vomited the entire W.C. population into the Chester River. Ω

Mankind ek-sists in an essential tension with her Mother Earth. Like that of a lyre, this tension—i.e. the basic conflict inherent in man's relation to earth—between planet and people is fundamental to Man's essential nature as a creature who dwells, but must be finely tuned in order to allow for the proper communi-cation of the Truth of Being in such a way as to fac-ill-itate the execution of the un-folding of the esistentiality of the pot-entiality of the beast-ality of the rad-icality of the inten-tionality of this precious thing that we all are familiar with as the essence of the act-ivity of our thinking being into language (we mean by this, of course, dwelling: viz. the ad-mittence of both Earth and Sky, Divinities and Mortals, into the logical space defined by the subjective and arbitrary convent-ions of popular linguistic usage in reference to the realm in which the wonder of the bringing-about of the coming-into-being of the things of our world which man-kind, in her infinitesseimal wisdom and infinite pretentiousness, creates herself (e.g. sky-scrapers, automobiles, computers, feminine hygeine products, Nachio Chesier Doritos™, etc.) and which we call artifacts); this natural tension, when seen in the light of the unity embedded in our minds and through the frosted lenses of our conceptual framework, thrusts us out against the nothingness—against which all beings are re-cognized as such—and into a state of anxiety which reveals the true essence of Being itself and which also stands in opposition to the wonder we ek-sperience in Kantemplation of this essence after its revelation. This reductionist structure of our scientific society attempts in futility to array the Dionysian chaos of the 'song of nature' into an orderly manifestation of its own Apollonian will. As Nietzsche said in The Birth of Tragedy, "Here over, we must make as sharp a distinction as possible between the concepts of essence and phenomena; for music, according to its essence, cannot possibly be will." The essential nature of music revealed by our earthly origins, is purely phenomenal; but with that will of modernity bends nature into its service, siphoning from it all of the energy of its tumultuous beauty. The will of the people—acting in solidarity—is a Juggernaut that is invincible, its powers possess the potentiality for good or ill. That this will has already laid low the Lord our Father is well known, must we plunge this self-same dagger into our fair Mother?

Only talk is cheap, and this essay has already accumulated enough twenty-five cent words to buy itself a thesaurus. To realize our goal we must take concrete action. As Marx and Engels wrote in The Communist Manifesto "When people speak of ideas that revolutionize society, they do but express the fact, that within the old society, the elements of a new one have been created, and that the dissolution of the old ideas keeps even pace with the dissolution of the old conditions of existence. To "be an environmentalist" or "be a socialist" is not enough, for the unfortunate fact is that there would be no environmentalists or socialists if our planet and our politics had not already begun the spiraling descent into the abysmal depths of hopless, abject ruin. Our strength is contained in our love in our hope. Revolutionary ideas spring not from a Utopian daydream that things will inevitably get better, but from the realistic fear that things are inevitably getting worse. As the millennium approaches our thoughts are not of paradise but of hell on Earth. To paraphrase Fogo, we have seen the Antichrist, and he is us.

What is now needed is a shot in the arm heard around the world—we must apply the defibrillator of action to the broken heart of our Mother Earth. Only that saved is a planet earned, and a sow's ear purse by any other name is a terrible thing to throw good money after the sour grapes of wrath have cried over the spilt milk and honey I shrunk the children are our future: teach them and let them lead a dead horse to water without beating it.

But the viscous cudgeling of Rodney King is but one example of how our society has criminally engaged in the systematic oppression of the proletariat by the likes of Leona Helmsley and William Kennedy Smith. We must start now if we intend to get a jump on the environmental bandwagon. Saturday afternoon the cry of "EarthJump" will resound throughout the greater Chestertown community. All right and left-thinking human people will be in attendance to decry the imperialistic, gay-bashing, big business, anti-gun, polluting, father-raping, race-ist, sex-ist, age-ist, species—ist, class-ist, abortion-ist, looks-ist, weight-ist, height-ist lobotom-ist pig-dog oppressors who have maintained an iron-fisted stranglehold on the American people for so long.

If you hold any thoughts of a world free of pollution for our children or your descendants you must act and act now. This demonstration is not merely an outlet for the social activist in all of us, it is a mandate of the people, for the people, by the people, through the people within the people and without any people at all to recognize the grandeur of our planet. Please join your comrades tomorrow, in Martha Washington Square, for this display of solidarity and the universal support shared by all Chestertonians—not students in this great comm-unity that we call our home sweet home. Garfield and Friends. Then the Ricki Lake Show. I find it amazing that the only people that appear on this show as guests are either really stupid or country bumpkins without any teeth. A full hour of Roseanne starts at 6:00. At 7:00, a break to do some more of my work because the only shows on at that time are Wheel of Fortune and Married with Children and who wants to watch Vanna White turning letters and the Bundys are not as entertaining as they used to be when I was a freshmen in the heyday of the all-male Kent dorm.

But, at 7:30 is the highlight of the night, Jeopardy! I never miss an episode. I think the reason for this is that Alex Trebek is so damn pompous that I just wait to see when he embarrasses himself. Plus, there is a lot of intellectually challenging questions that are fun.

At 8:00, it becomes tricky because the major networks have their own scheduled shows. But, I have figured this out. On Monday nights, I watch CBS. Tuesdays, I watch ABC. Wednesdays, I watch nothing because I am working for this very same paper all night. Thursdays, I turn to NBC. And I try to avoid television at all costs on Friday and Saturday because it sucks.

At 11:00, it becomes even more tricky. I can either turn to MTV and watch an hour of Beavis and Butthead or wait until 11:30 and watch David Letterman. But most of the time, my roommate decides to watch Wings on USA. Not that I mind because it is just as pathetic and silly as Beavis and Butthead and Dave.

12:30 begins the ever so touching and artistic Thirtysomething. And if you are interested in the plot so that you will not be confused, Hope just had a miscarriage, Michael and Elliot have just started working for Miles Drentell after they had to shut down their advertising business, Nancy is all about to discover that she has cancer, Gary was turned down for tenure and fallen in love, Ellen has just started therapy and fallen out of love, and Melissa stood up to her grandmother and wants Gary to be in love with her.

And for those of you that do not believe that this is what I do almost every night, come talk to me. I will be able to assess your personality type and prescribe the perfect television schedule. And think, this is what I came to a highly-priced, private institution of higher education to learn. With my English degree I think that I will try to land myself a job with TV Guide. At least I will be able to enjoy my job and pay back my loans. Hopefully. Ω going to escape with his life and leave the immigrants sleeping in the hold to drown?

Should we be panicking? Is the administration we have going to be able to save us by itself? Or is the Board going to step in and make resolutions that no one will be able to follow?

The difficulties at the College aren't just financial ones.

There are morale problems that students often sense sooner than the professors who often seem oblivious to non-academic problems: "I had no idea that the housekeeping staff was paid less than my baby-sitter," etc.

Not all professors are in the dark. Some are kept there unwittingly, some like staying there with a good book, and some are never told where the light switch is.

I just wish someone would come out and say, "Yes, everything is going to be all right."

And I hope that if they do, they're sure that it's true. Ω

Expansion of the snack bar area would increase revenues, which could then be reinvested in the student center. It would also provide more student job opportunities because the facility would be a "student operation administered, managed, and supervised by students."

The summary also states that the proposed gameroom's most attractive aspect...is that while a much needed service is provided large revenues are generated."

The proposed TV lounge would serve a dual purpose as both a television room and an extension of the Coffee House area.

Committee questions included concerns for vandalism and the availability of student assistance. But, Committee Chairman Arthur Kudner said, "I think (the Committee) looks favorably upon such a plan."

Said Young: "There are just so many advantages, it's hard not to like it." Ω

Shoremen Spank Goucher

Women's Team Falls To Cross-State Rival 152-53

Erika K. Ford

Although they were the underdogs in last Saturday's swim meet against Goucher, the Washington men came out kicking to win. This strong victory continued their seven-meet winning streak.

Washington's men are now 7-1 after the 119-89 victory.

The Shorewomen in the 200 individual medley, making the score 47-46 Washington at intermission.

Parent added first place and a season best time in the 100 butterfly, with Steinmuller and Ryu Kawai winning fourth and fifth respectively. Campbell, Freisheim, and McCarthy went 2,4,5 in the 100 free, making the score 66-65 Washington.

"Our last few meets haven't been too challenging," said captain Preisheim. "But this meet was a change. Goucher was pretty cocky coming in, but we still beat them."

Pete Ward pulled a key win in the 100 backstroke, with a 57.2 time.

Dave Cola continued to be undefeated in the 500 free, capturing a season's best time of 4:59.54. Woodall came from behind to grab second, with Czekaj took fifth to pull Washington ahead, 92-77.

Campbell and Gaudion iced the cake with a 1-2 punch in the 100 breaststroke. Each had season's best times of 1:03.8 and 1:04.70. The 200 free relay team of Cola, Parent, Ward, and Freisheim wrapped it up with a first place win.

Coach Kim Lessard said, "We had a great team effort today. After easy wins the past six meets we needed to be the underdog. The team showed today that they are ready to challenge Franklin&Marshall for second place in three weeks at the Centennial Championship." (F&M is the men's team's only loss this season.)

The women's team continued to have strong individual performances, although their record fell to 2-6.

Eileen Kuriger again lowered her seed time in the 1000 free, placing second, while Liz Likens took fourth.

swimmers lost 152-53.

The 200 medley team of Ty McCarthy, Julien Gaudion, Scott Steinmuller, and Chris Freisheim placed second. Tim Whittier, Dave Kraft, Marcelo Brutti, and Mike Bowman's team followed to claim third.

"We had a very positive attitude after the Goucher meet," McCarthy said. "We had just come off a very intense training period and a lot of our times were even better than expected. It was uplifting to enter as the underdogs and come out victorious."

Goucher's win in the 200 medley gave them an early 11-6 lead. Dan Woodall swam to a key first place in the 1000 freestyle, with Dave Czekaj's fourth place pulling Washington to within two points.

Captain Dave Cola switched places with Woodall to win the 200 freestyle with a 1:50.1 time. Kraft and McCarthy won fourth and fifth, to put the Shoremen in the lead, 29-26.

Tim Parent, Jason Campbell, and Gaudion went 1,3,5 to increase the lead by ten. Goucher came back however, placing 1,2,5

Washington is gunning for an even better performance in this year's conference championships.

Jen Voss added two important second places in the 50 and 100 freestyles. Denise Hakanson followed her with third in the 50 free.

Captain Jen Green captured second in the 100 back. Jen Dow grabbed third in both the 100 fly and 500 free.

Robin Woollens swam three personal best times in the 50 free, 100 free, and 100 breaststroke.

"The small size of our team has been a factor affecting our record," Woollens said. "Our personal times are good, but we've needed more swimmers."

Jen Dow and Erin Miller met Conference Championship Qualifying times in the 400 IM, moving to fourth and fifth places on the all-time Washington charts.

Both teams will travel to Gettysburg to swim tomorrow afternoon. The last home meet will be held against Swarthmore next Wednesday, February 9 at 6:30 p.m.

Shoremen Hoopsters Smash Swarthmore Garnet 94-75

Washington Pulls Even At 9-9 For Season After Three Consecutive Conference Wins Push Record To .500

Matt Murray

For one night, he was Superman. And then he decided to share the wealth with his friends.

Charles Cummings scored 30 points last Saturday on Washington's way to a 94-75 romp over Swarthmore College. Cummings scored in every way, shape and form in the first half with 11 field goals during the period, including three 3-pointers.

"When Charles gets the ball in his spots, he's usually going to score," Washington head coach Mike Hart said. "He's spotting up and knocking it down, but he's also got a good enough drive to blow by people and cut to the basket."

However, after exploding for 22 points in the first half, Cummings decided to share the scoring with his teammates in the second.

"I was feeling it in the first half," Cummings said. "But I knew even though I played well, we were only up by seven at halftime, and I knew we had to get other people involved in order to win."

Cummings involved plenty of his teammates during a 26-2 run midway through the second half when Washington (9-9) blew the game open.

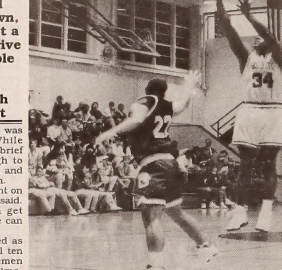
After Swarthmore (6-11) had pulled within three at 41-38 with 18:37 remaining, the Shoremen took charge and dominated the Garnet. An Edmund Hicks field goal gave Washington a 51-38 lead and forced a Swarthmore timeout with 13:52 remaining.

The timeout didn't help the visitors, though, and the Shoremen continued to roll. Adam Poe's 360-degree spinning lay-up ignited the home crowd and gave Washington a 65-40 lead.

Poe's 10-point performance was the first time he's scored in double figures this year at home. However, he has helped to make up for the loss of Jay Devlin and Mark Kenah, as Poe has scored in double figures twice on the road with 15 against Ursinus and 13 versus Gettysburg.

"Opportunity came to Adam and he's taken advantage of it," Hart said. "I'm really happy with the way he's played."

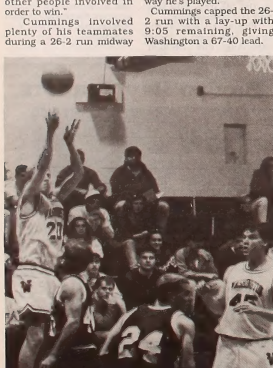
Cummings capped the 26-2 run with a lay-up with 9:05 remaining, giving Washington a 67-40 lead.



"When Charles gets the ball in his spots, he's usually going to score. He's spotting up and knocking it down, but he's also got a good enough drive to blow by people and cut to the basket."
--head coach Mike Hart

The rest of the game was academic. While Swarthmore made a brief run, it wasn't enough to cut into the huge lead, and Hart emptied the bench.

"We have a lot of talent on our team," Cummings said. "We know if we can get everybody involved, we can beat anybody."



Everyone got involved as much as possible. All ten players on the Shoremen roster saw playing time, and all ten scored. It was the home debuts for Washington's Paul Kenny and Mark Armstang.

Sophomore center Ken Lapp finished the game with a 10-foot jumper to give Washington the 94-75 win.

Charles Cummings exploded for 30 points against Swarthmore.

Geoff Rupert scored 18 points against Swarthmore last Saturday.

On its way to its third consecutive victory, Washington made 65% of its shots from the field while also forcing 19 Swarthmore turnovers.

"They played a very intense game," Washington assistant coach Sonel Shropshire said.

Cummings' 30 points was a career high. Geoff Rupert finished with 18 points, Poe added 10, Derek Cuff scored 9, and both Ben Harris and Jerry Davis scored 8.

"If we play good defense, we're going to get easy baskets," Hart said. "I keep telling these guys that defense is going to win the games for us. And tonight our strong defense gave us a good offense."

Team Notes

Washington travelled to Wesley last night (results were unavailable). The team's next contest will be Saturday at 8:00 p.m. against Muhlenberg College. The Mules defeated the Shoremen in their last meeting, but this Saturday, the top spot in the East Division of the Centennial Conference will be on the line, and the game will be in Cain....

Geoff Rupert is closing in on the 1,000 point mark. Rupert who had 18 points last Saturday against Swarthmore is within a dozen of the milestone. Rupert averaged over 15 points per game as a junior and is averageing nearly 13 points per game this season....

Adam Poe, who languished on the bench for much of the earlier part of the season, has recently become an instrumental piece of the Washington puzzle. Poe, a junior from Livingston, New Jersey, has recently hit double figures in points against Swarthmore, Ursinus, and Gettysburg....

After starting the season 4-5, Washington has put together a 5-4 record since Christmas Break including its recent three-game streak. Coach Hart feels the team is just now adjusting to the loss of Mark Kenah and Jay Devlin.

Sho'women Shock Swarthmore 60-42

Matt Murray

Two in a row, and they're looking for their next victim.

The Washington College women's basketball team won their second consecutive Centennial Conference contest Saturday night when Ebond Taylor's 19 points powered the Shorewomen to a 60-42 victory.

Washington (5-9) outscored visiting Swarthmore (2-13) 27-9 over the final 9:20, leaving the Garnet far behind.

"We knew that we should've been beating that team by a lot," said Washington forward Allison Wentworth (13 points) referring to the 25-23 halftime score in Swarthmore's favor. "We just came out in the second half and played like we should've been playing from the start."

Once again, fouls were the problem for the Shorewomen, as Wentworth could only play 10 minutes in the first half after drawing her third personal foul. With Wentworth in foul trouble, and Taylor and Lee Ann Lezzer on their way to four-foul nights, Washington started off a sluggish note.

"I was getting very frustrated," Wentworth said. "They were calling it very tight underneath, and it was tough to adjust."

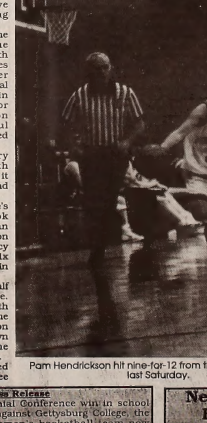
Karen Yohannan-Borbee's Swarthmore squad took advantage early taking an 11-10 lead and holding on 25-23 at halftime. Nancy Rosenbaum scored six points to lead the Garnet in the first half.

However, the second half was a whole new ballgame. Taylor and Wentworth both scored 11 points during the half, and Pam Hendrickson hit clutch free throws down the stretch, finishing the night 9-12 from the stripe.

"I was really impressed with Alli (Wentworth), Lee Ann (Lezzer) and Eb (Taylor) playing for so long with so many fouls while still being a force on the boards and on offense," Washington head coach Lanee Cole said.

Cole was satisfied with the adjustments her team made in order to win.

"I told them at halftime that you have to work the ball," she said. "We have to get the ball inside. I didn't want to see them throwing up a 3-pointer in transition.



"We just worked our power offense and plugged it inside."

After two wins against conference opponents, Washington's players feel as though they're ready to put together a string of victories.

"We're finally starting to play together as a team," Wentworth said. "Things are starting to fall into place."

Washington finally played together as a team on Saturday, as the Shorewomen dished out 19 team assists while committing only 17 turnovers.

Besides Wentworth and Taylor, Kelly Rodgers scored 11 points, Hendrickson, contributed nine, Lezzer added four, and Cherie Gallini chipped in two.

Pam Hendrickson hit nine-for-12 from the free throw line last Saturday.

Washington College Press Release

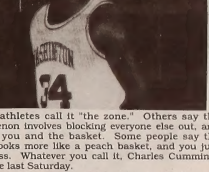
With its first Centennial Conference win in school history on January 29 against Gettysburg College, the Washington College women's basketball team now possesses a 4-9 overall record in its first year of intercollegiate participation.

Freshman center Ebon Taylor (Germantown, MD/The Bullis School) currently ranks second in the Centennial Conference with 12.5 rebounds per game. In conference game's, her 10.7 rebounds per six games gives her the eighth best average at 9.3. As of January 16, her 13.1 rebounds per game average ranked her 16th in NCAA Division III. Her rebounding has helped Washington rate as the 150th strongest rebounding margin (10.8) in NCAA Division III. On November 20, Taylor pulled down 24 rebounds against Gallaudet.

The six-footer has also been a scoring threat. Taylor scored 17 points in the upset over Gettysburg, and she currently averages 12.6 points per game. Her season high in points was on November 19 when she scored 20 against Hunter College. Additionally, Taylor has blocked 10 shots in 13 games.

New Sports Editor

The Elm would like to welcome a new co-sports editor to its staff.



Jeffrey Lee, a freshman from Long Island, New York, is a member of Washington College men's novice crew.

Lee plans to major in biology, and his sports interests include rowing, basketball, golf, and tennis.

He replaces Kate Sullivan and joins Matt Murray on the staff this week.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

Some athletes call it "the zone." Others say the phenomenon involves blocking everyone else out, and it's just you and the basket. Some people say the basket looks more like a peach basket, and you just can't miss. Whatever you call it, Charles Cummings was there last Saturday.

The senior captain scored 22 points in the first half alone. Cummings scored in every way, shape and form--from the free throw line, from behind the 3-point arc, on slashing drives, and on pull-up jumpers. He just simply could not miss.

In the second half, Cummings decided it would help the team more to open up the offense and dish the ball to his teammates. For his unselfish play after scoring at such a prolific rate, we award him this week's Newt's honor.

Cummings finished with 30 for the game while Geoff Rupert followed with 18. Rupert could also be close to a Newt's POW honor if he can top the 1000 point mark this week.

In other news...

It's official, Chris Camillo is the scrub of the week. First of all, he's got some terrible sideburns, and secondly, he's wearing some really lousy looking flannel shirts. Get with the program Chris.

For an honorable mention this week, fan of the week goes to Chris Hargett. Hargett, who should be considered the 6th man on the basketball team (Hey Coach Hart, he even deserves a jacket and jersey) is that really annoying guy in the stands who yells really loud and cracks everyone up. He's gotten quite a reaction from visiting players as they have often told him to shut up. Now, in my book, if they're paying that much attention to Hargett, they can't be paying too much attention to the game (he atleast deserves a jacket coach). However, Hargett is not without respect for visiting basketball players. When Ted Berry, of Christopher Newport converted an alley-oop, Hargett

Deficit Reduction

President Accentuates the Positive While Faculty Ponders Pay Cuts

Scott Koon

At the faculty meeting this past Monday, President Trout reported that approximately three-fourths of the Board of Visitors and Governors attended the February fourth meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Visitors and Governors. President Trout said that while such meetings are open to the entire Board, it is highly unusual for so many non-Executive Committee members to attend. "One wonders about the motivation, Trout said, "I thought the motivation might be like the motivation of people following an ambulance hoping to see a wreck.

If any expected such an occurrence, they were disappointed; Trout characterized the three hour meeting as "collegial." The main result of the meeting appears to be a redoubling of the President's resolve to solve the College's financial problems. "The Board's tolerance of this deficit, my tolerance, and I believe the tolerance of many of you, is gone," Trout told the assembled faculty.

Trout said that the deficit had been pegged at $965,000, but that a number of measures had reduced this figure. Net tuition revenue from new students this semester is $65,000. The Board is also willing to move from a five percent draw on the College's endowment to a six percent draw, which would enable the College to apply about $240,000 to the deficit. This increased draw is conditioned on the College reducing the deficit by making matching spending cuts totaling $240,000.

In addition, Trout said that the Board asked at the Friday meeting that this year's deficit be no more than $300,000. This indicates the need for further cuts, although Trout said "I really, at this moment, couldn't tell you what they would be."

In a subsequent interview with The Elm, President Trout said that students should find no cause for alarm in the College's financial status. He emphasized that the deficit represents only two percent of the College's budget, and that the only reason this shortfall is of any real consequence is that the College has been running similar deficits for three years running. When asked if he would pledge that financial aid to individual students would not be cut, Trout said that while some aid "won't be packaged exactly the same," students need not worry because "the commitment is there."

Trout also said that there is much good news in the financial situation at the College, as annual giving is up twenty-two percent over last year, Board giving has risen dramatically and the College recently received a pledge from the Kerr Foundation for $125,000.

Wednesday Winter Wonderland Causes Canceling of Classes

Beautiful to behold, but treacherous to tred upon.

Sledders love the frictionless ice...

...but Sue C. had another perspective.

This Wednesday the College closed due to adverse Winter weather for the first time since the great storm of '79. Different members of the College community had differing reactions to the icy onslaught. For Joe Cathers of Buildings and Grounds it meant working at six a.m. dumping tons of sand on the College. For Eva Browning, Mr. Hessey's secretary, it meant wearing socks over her shoes to prevent slipping on the ice. (According to Mrs. Browning, any socks will do.) For at least one student it meant sliding down the side steps of Middle Hall, only to find upon his abrupt landing that all classes had been cancelled.

Reverend Riley Responds to Religious Right

Rachael Fink

The first William James Forum of 1994 was held Tuesday night in Hynson Hall. After a dinner honoring guest speaker Rev. Meg Riley and attended by professors, students and members of the newly formed Unitarian Church here in Chestertown, the crowd of over 20 people was invited to discuss "The Political Agenda of the Religious Right" with Rev. Riley, Director of Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Concerns for the Unitarian Universalist Association.

To start with some background information Riley drew the distinction between Fundamentalists and the Religious Right. One is an expression of faith and the other deals with a political agenda. Riley estimated that about 50 million Americans consider themselves Fundamentalists, but only 20 million of those are active members of the organizations that make up the Religious Right.

The political power of the Religious Right has grown much since the disbanding of the Moral Majority in the late 1980s. While noted television evangelist Pat Robertson lost in the 1992 Republican Primary, his campaign did compile a list of 175 thousand names of Religious Right activists. Ralph Reed, Director of the Christian Coalition, used these names to start a very effective grass roots campaign with chapter in every state. The Religious Right has become a very profitable business, with many branch organizations pulling in many millions of

Instant Solvency

In his report at this past Monday's faculty meeting, President Trout grimly related the gravity of the College's current financial crisis. "If we do nothing," he said, "the deficit at the end of this year would be $965,000." He then went on to inform the faculty how the Administration and the Board had taken steps to whittle the gap down to $500,000, and that the Board had asked that the deficit for this year be no more than $300,000. He went on to say that somehow we will have to make cuts to reach that figure.

It does not need to be at that time that the problem was not that we are spending to much, but that we are earning too little. I wondered what an under endowed school could do to enhance its revenue. Increasing the endowment (and therefore endowment income) is a laudable goal, yet it seems obvious that our College is so far behind that efforts in this area do us little good, given the immediate nature of the crisis. What can we do?

The answer to all our problems occurred to me the next day while having a discussion with Justin Cann on the merits of establishing a brewing club at Washington College. It hit me like a diamond bullet right between the eyes; Washington College needs to brew, market and sell its own brand of beer.

This is a serious suggestion. We already have our own brand of wine- why not beer? For half the price of a new student center, Washington College could set up a profitable microbrewery. The higher education business is in a slump, but the beer business is booming. Small sized breweries are springing up all across America. Why shouldn't we make a smart business decision and diversify?

We could hire one full time brewmaster. The rest of the labor would be provided free of charge by a Brewing Club. (Which, I'm willing to bet would soon be the most popular club on campus.) The College could set up its own brewpub in the Cove.

This step would kill a whole flock of birds with one stone. We have seen how attaching the name of a patriot to a beer can be a successful marketing ploy-why would Washington Beer be any less popular than Samuel Adams? And, unlike the Samuel Adams company, we have a clear right to use Washington's name. (Of course, Washington drank Madeira, not beer, but who drinks Madeira nowadays?)

This College agonizes about how to distinguish itself from comparable institutions. Brewing our own beer would truly set us apart from the pack. Each bottle of beer sold would be a marketing tool for the College. The typical premium beer drinker is an affluent middle-aged male. These men are highly likely to have college aged children. Washington College would instantly become the college of choice for lovers of beer.

Washington College Beer would mean more money in the till, more students in the dorms, and more prestige for the institution. Some might say that it would be sullying the school's good name to enter into the brewing industry. Poppycock! Beer has class nowadays. Besides, Trappist monks have been brewing their own beer for centuries, yet you never hear anyone complain that this is an undignified activity for the Catholic Church to be involved in.

What (besides education) is more central to American collegiate culture than beer? I foresee Washington Beer eventually becoming the most popular beer at colleges across the country. We could even produce a whole line of brews, such as Valley Forge Ale, Liberty Lager and Patriot Porter. Before long, we'd get letters from colleges around the world requesting information on how they could set up their own breweries.

And that's when we'll know that we've truly succeeded.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

"Wicked." A few facts about Birthday Ball, as reported on the front page of the January 28 issue, were misleading or mistaken. I want all to know that the extravagant decorations were not a College investment but a donation from Carey Hargrove's family who have offered this gift to lift our wintertime spirits. Your article also mentioned that "each student will receive one ticket for themselves, and an extra to be given to anyone they choose." There goes my annual budget! Each student will receive a personal invitation and an extra invitation to mail to anyone they choose." These invitations and envelopes are available the CAC mail room. The costs of dinner and dancing, as quoted on your invitations, must be sent with your advance reservations to the Alumni Office. You may charge your dinner and dance fees by including your student I.D. number(s) on your response card. One other quote , "It's going to be an evening like nothing Washington College has ever seen" is absolutely true to its word. See you there!

Reflections on Brotherhood: Fraternal Life at Washington College

Lionel A. Dyson

As the day of commencement approaches, I find myself becoming nostalgic for the halcyon days of my youth spent here at Washington College. Like most seniors, I am acutely aware that the end of my undergraduate career is fast approaching, and this awareness gives rise to frequent reflection on the aspects of my tenure here that I cherish most. Of course, the multitude of positive memories is far too numerous to recount in any detail. However, there are those experiences that stand out in the midst of my reminiscence. Of these notable experiences, the overwhelming majority have derived from my membership in a fraternal organization.

Since the second semester of my freshman year, I have been a brother of the Beta Omega Chapter of Kappa Alpha Order. I make this distinction not so much as a plug for my fraternity, but by way of a disclaimer. As any informed member of the Washington College community can attest, there is a considerable difference between the temperament and caliber of the various groups that ascribe to the characterization of 'fraternal organization.' In addition to the three organizations officially recognized by the college administration — Theta Chi, Phi Delta Theta and Kappa Alpha Order — there are two unrecognized groups — Phi Sigma and the Lambdas. Each group has its own traditions and characteristics that render it readily distinguishable from the others, and I would be grossly in error if I gave the impression that the sentiments which I express are commonly held by the diverse memberships.

I would also be remiss if I failed to mention the bonds of sisterhood which are fostered in the ranks of the three sororities — Alpha Chi Omega, Alpha Omicron Pi, and Zeta Tau Alpha (technically a fraternity, being non-aligned with a complementary male organization) — are meritorious in their own right. However, despite my gleeful ponderings of the myriad possibilities, I have never had the opportunity to empirically appreciate membership in a women's greek letter organization. I am therefore unqualified to comment on the experience, and cheerfully defer to any interested woman who wishes to provide an informed vantage in a further edition of The Elm. That said, I do feel supremely qualified to impart my personal impressions of fraternal life here at W.C. through my involvement in Kappa Alpha Order.

Membership in Kappa Alpha Order has dispelled many of the stereotypes and biases that I had previously been exposed to regarding fraternities. The mere mention of the word 'fraternity' to the

So Many Holidays, so Little Cheer

Mark Phaneuf

February is the shortest month and gets little respect as far as months go, but it really is an important time of year. First, there's Ground Hog day; however that oversized rodent is just the beginning. February Fourteenth is an important holiday: Mrs. Brady's birthday, Valentine's Day and living legend Florence Henderson turns fifty on that day. Can you believe that, a half a century! This date is not to be confused with the eleventh when Burt Reynolds also turns fifty, even though his hair is considerably younger.

And they say you don't learn anything valuable reading The Elm!

The fourteenth is also Valentine's Day. A whole day devoted to reminding you that you don't have a boyfriend, girlfriend, or— in this day and age — both. It's a wonder they don't call it "I'm a loser and will die a miserable loner, thanks for reminding me, you big dumb jerk Day." About all you can do to celebrate this dub'ous day would be to send your grandmother or Aunt Eileen a card and hope you get one back with a check or some cash in it.

And if you do have a significant other, you'd better get them something really special or they'll never let you forget it. "Hey honey, are you ready to go to our thirtieth wedding anniversary party?" "No, I'm not going. Did you forget that time in college when you only got me a lousy stuffed platypus for Valentine's Day? Well, I haven't." Keep gift-giving simple. Get a woman roses, lots of them. Get a guy clean white tube socks, even more of them.

The aforementioned Ground Hog Day is a stupid holiday but it is a harmless one. No one feels the worse for it, except for maybe the surprised varmint and the handler it mauls. Valentine's Day causes much wider heartache and actually reinforces the idea that we are alone and life is meaningless. Christmas is like that too but at least you get some time off from school and work.

And just who was this Saint Valentine guy anyway? There are more important figures to name days after. At least Saint Patrick did that thing with the snakes, but what did Saint Valentine do, give everybody in some small Italian town heart-shaped boxes of candy? Saint Peter walked on water, but he doesn't have a holiday. Just think— It could be a winter occasion with lots of ice-skating! Moving away from the religious sphere, how about an Alex Trebek holiday where everyone speaks in Jeopardyese:

Tom: "Boy, it's just so sunny and warm, I'm feeling great.

Bill: "What is "How are you doing today?"

It may seem silly but I think it could catch on. It's no dumber than using a weasel to determine if there's going to be six more weeks of winter or not.

As if the holiday of V.D. isn't enough for the shortest month of the year, Washington College has the Birthday Ball, celebrating the birth of our first President. George Washington an esteemed and revered figure in America, yet even he couldn't support his own special day. His birthday had to be merged with the birthday of that other great leader and party animal Abraham Lincoln.

See "Phaneuf" on 4

"Phaneuf," phrom 3

But the Birthday Ball promises to be quite the social event. Thanks to an incredible amount of funding and organization by a student's father, who did something for Clinton's inauguration and something else for Donald Trump, the Ball promises to live up to its motto "More than your high school prom, seriously."

There is a Mardi Gras theme, with lots of colorful decorations and an orchestra. The last point leads me to ponder the possibility of the Zim Zemeral playing the latest Pearl Jam. I suppose they couldn't do worse than the actual band. There will be much liquor consumed throughout the night, so be careful with your gowns and tuxedoes. Puke stains are a real bitch to get out of formal wear.

Hey! You beat yourself up enough for being by yourself on Valentine's Day, why not come to the Birthday Ball stag? That doesn't mean you are a social misfit no one wants to be with or that you have a better chance of being Tony Harding's next sweetheart than getting a date. Besides, the way things go at these events, people don't always go home with the person they came with, so you might get lucky. Never give up hope!

Ground Hog Day, Valentine's Day, President's Day— what does it all mean? Aside from all of these events, we cannot forget February is the lucky month to contain the fiftieth birthdays of two American classics: Burt Reynolds and Florence Henderson. Now why couldn't they have holidays named after them? Write your congressman about this gross injustice. Drive safely. Ω

Hessey Reflects on Retirement

Rachael Fink

Last weeks ELM contained the sad news of another of our community leaving us. Gene Hessey, Senior Vice President for Management and Finance and Treasure of the College, announced his intention to retire in June. In an interview with The ELM, Hessey expressed his sadness at leaving an institution for which he devoted much time and energy, but stated that he was "looking forward to it in many ways." Hessey hopes to do a bit of fishing, and take up his golf game which has been neglected for some time. A new grandchild is expected in mid-summer and Hessey and his wife are look forward spending more time with the family.

When asked what he saw for the future of Washington College, Hessey was very positive in his response. "I have every confidence in a bright future for Washington College." Hessey feels that we are "at the end of the demographic down turn" in terms of potential new students, and that we posses the physical plant and services to acomodate an increase in student body in the years to come.

Concerning a successor to Gene Hessey very little is yet know. According to Hessey, plans for a search are being made by the President and the Board. Mark Maciejaj, Chairman of the Board Finance Committee, explained to the ELM that Hessey's position as Treasurer of the College is elected by the Board, and that the two positions now being filled by one person did not have to remain as one. A new Vice President for Management and Finance will be chosen by the President, the Finance Committee of the Board, and the Board as a whole. Maciejag stated that the Board "will want to have a lot of say about who that person is. ... It is an important position." Maciejag ended by echoing what is being felt by much of the Washington College community, Hessey's are "big shoes to fill." Ω

Nuclear Proliferation

Paul Briggs

A year ago this month, the North Korean government refused to allow the International Atomic Energy Agency to inspect suspected nuclear waste sites. Not long afterwards, North Korea threatened to withdraw from the Non-Proliferation Treaty. This raised concerns that they might be developing, or might even have the capacity to build, a nuclear bomb. Since then, the United States government has tried to negotiate a deal with the regime, with dubious success. Although North Korean President Kim Il Sung has agreed not to withdraw from the Non-Proliferation Treaty, he has not agreed to comply with its requirement that the IAEA be permitted to inspect the sites. If North Korea continues to block inspections, the IAEA will recommend that the Security Council impose economic sanctions against it. There is talk in Washington to the effect that the Clinton administration will abandon its efforts at negotiation and give the IAEA its full support.

It is extremely unlikely that sanctions will deter Kim Il Sung's regime in the slightest. Any more serious action, however, would risk military confrontation with North Korea- indeed, some fear that even imposing sanctions might trigger such a confrontation. President Clinton, already wrestling with health care reform, welfare reform and possible air strikes against Serb-held positions in Bosnia, certainly seems to has no desire to re-fight the Korean War.

Even if North Korea agrees to inspections at this late date, it may not mean anything. Throughout the negotiating process, North Korea has quibbled constantly over minor procedural issues. This may indicate that the regime is trying to buy time, presumably to hide all evidence of wrongdoing. It may also be very difficult for the IAEA to reach any definite conclusions about the state of North Korea's nuclear technology. This being the case, the international community is more justified in suspecting the worst.

If it seems like a daunting task to force what is by all accounts the most brutal of the world's remaining communist governments to abandon any effort to produce a bomb, it is. Disarming a nation that has committed itself to building or acquiring nuclear technology has never been easy or safe. In 1962, when President Kennedy heard that the Soviets were planning to equip Cuba with nuclear missiles, the result was the famous Cuban missile crisis. While no one doubts that Kennedy made the right decisions at the right time in this matter, the fact remains that the world could not and cannot afford the sort of brinkmanship that was practiced by both sides.

In 1981, when Israel was concerned about the construction of a nuclear reactor in Iraq, then-Prime Minister Menachem Begin decided to launch an air strike against it before it could be completed. The raid was a complete success - the reactor was destroyed and the pilots made it safely back to Israel. This surprising action was not a spur-of-the-moment decision on Begin's part- in fact, it was carefully planned and timed to minimize both civilian casualties and radiation leakage. Nonetheless, it was almost universally condemned by the international community. The Reagan administration, in one of the milder criticisms voiced, described the raid as a "unprecedented" and warned that it would "seriously add to the already tense situation in the area." Today, however, it is generally agreed that without the Saddam Hussein would have had nuclear weapons by 1990. As it was, it still was not enough to extinguish his desire for weapons of mass destruction- even after his forces had been humiliated in the Gulf War, the Iraqi dictator continued to harass, block, and generally interfere with U.N. inspectors trying to examine the remains of his nuclear program.

We now know that South Africa, at one point during the 1980s, succeeded in manufacturing a nuclear device without anyone noticing, but that the government decided not to test it, and eventually got rid of it. It is comforting to note that nuclear technology seems to have a sobering influence on the possessor. How long will it be, however, before it falls into the hands of someone not amenable to such influence?

Although politicians speak optimistically about the possibility of achieving a "nuclear-free world," the reality is that there is no precedent for simply unmaking an entire technology. Even if every bomb on earth were scrapped tomorrow and all information on making them were destroyed, the memory of them would remain, and sooner or later someone would reinvent them.

There are two known occasions on which weapons technologies have been suppressed in their infancy. Leonardo da Vinci kept his submarine designs secret out of fear that they would be used as weapons. When an Italian chemist offered Louis XIV a method of germ warfare, the king paid the chemist a handsome sum, and his research. Today, of course, submarines have been in use for a century, and if biological weapons have never been used it is only because chemical weapons are more efficient and less risky.

In the future it will be more difficult then ever to stop proliferation. The global supply of weapons-grade radioactive material is increasing, and becoming more and more difficult to keep track of. The coming "information superhighway" will complicate matters further. With thousands of miles of fiber-optic cables sending vast amounts of data back and forth into every corner of the world, how easy will it be to keep military secrets out of the hands of dangerous governments and organizations? The only long-term solution that comes to mind is to do everything possible to encourage the growth of democracy and economic prosperity in all parts of the world, so as to lessen the chances of irresponsible governments coming to power in nuclear states. Realistically, however, this seems a much more formidable task than trying to coerce Kim Il Sung's notorious governments into compliance with interna-tional law.

It may turn out that North Korea, unlike Saddam Hussein's Iraq, has no ambition to possess the bomb. At this point, however, this seems highly unlikely. How this crisis plays itself out will have enormous impact in determining the course of the future of nuclear proliferation. Ω

Anguish in America: Millennium Approaches

Now, the first thing I have to say about the end of the world is that the new decade, new century and new millennium will begin not in the year 2000, as is fallaciously believed by one-third of all Jeopardy contestants, but in 2001. (There was no year Zero; therefore a decade begins not with the zero-digit but with the year ending in one).

So, feel free to party like it's 1999 all you want, but we'll make more — at least one more year after that fateful New Year's Eve.

Why do we feel the world is going to end? Well, I read an article in Omni recently which said the predictions of Nostradamus which said that most translations of his works about the end of the world predicted it would occur in the five years after the coming of the new millennium.

However, no one can pinpoint exactly which millennium he meant. As far back as there have been calendars, people have been afraid of endings of major time periods; many world religions have holidays around the time of Winter Solstice to prevent the sun from disappearing at the end of the year. And at the end of each century, there have been major celebrations and religious revivals to try and appease whatever gods are pissed.

Since no one can be sure that this millennium is the big one, people have begun to look for signs that we are in the Last Days. Raining frogs is nothing. That happens in the Midwest all the time.

Speaking of the Midwest, it's important to note that the number of natural disasters per year has seemed to be increasing of late. Floods, fires, earthquakes (which make the earth move not only in Utah and Pennsylvania), hurricanes, volcanic eruptions (which make the seas boil), etc. — all of these have seemed to be happening more often. Or perhaps just more often in our little part of the world. In fact, the Federal Disaster Relief Fund is about tapped — they don't have enough funds left to repair the damages in California by a long shot, and if any other catastrophes come our way, there may be little the government can do.

Which leads us to the four horsemen: War, Famine, Pestilence and Death. Death is a given. People die every minute. Which is why I always thought it was silly that he was a horseman at all.

However, sometime around 1949 or earlier, the number of people currently living equaled the number who had ever lived, at any time. (This is a controversial statistic which depends on where you draw the line between simians and people, but for my purposes, it works). And the population has grown since. Therefore, the number of deaths is now at an all-time high.

Especially when you consider the workings of the other horsemen, and the natural disaster factor. War could almost be considered as prevalent as death, since there are few, if any, countries in history with no conflict in any part of the world.

Today, conditions in Bosnia-Herzegovenia, Central America, Peru, South Africa, Ethiopia, Cambodia, Afghanistan and the Middle East, not to mention inner cities all over the world, add up to humanity's being about to be a very warlike species.

Although Israel and Palestine are continuing to try to end their long-term action in itself is pointed to both by Nostradamus and various astrophysicists as a condition which will closely precede the world's end.

The AIDS epidemic, now undergoing containment to any high-risk group (any sexually active person who has been less than monogamous since 1977 or so is now in a high-risk group), has often been called a plague. Hence, pestilence. The resurgence of deadly influenza, tuberculosis and hepatitis all offer confirmation of Mr. Pestilence's work.

And the combination of disease, war, and catastrophe encourages Famine, especially considering overpopulation and the world's homelessness crisis.

Other signs of doom are usually an increase in the weird and unexplainable. The Ricki Lake Show, Perry Ellis Grunge, Barney, McCrabCakes, OPP, the newsgroup alt.sex.enemas, the Roberts-Lovett wedding, and Crash Test Dummy action figures are all signs that this world is going to Hell in a bucket.

Turning to our own campus as a microcosm of the known world, as it's so lovingly called at freshman convocations, odd things are also happening. Hell, as they say, has frozen over. Gene Hessey has retired,

The Great Blue Whale that all the Washington College aquatic sea creatures/students faculty and staff had been stuck inside during the past few months gave a great big "YAWP," and vomited everyone out into the Chester River. He then swam straight into an ice burg, which pierced him in the belly, causing him to die.

The WC aquatic sea creatures fled from the deflated Great Blue Whale, and as they swam KIMBERLY A. SPRAGUEfish suddenly realized that it was getting right near Valentine's Day. "Hey, you know what?" She said to ANNA MSELLAfish. "It's getting right near Valentines Day!"

"You don't say," said ANNA MSELLAfish.

"I do," said KIMBERLY A. SPRAGUEfish.

"Well, what good does that do us?" said JEN HANIFEEfish, who was listening in. "We've all been turned into fish, remember?"

"Yeah, so?"

"So Valentines Day has no meaning for us anymore—Fish can't fall in love—they're not physically sophisticated enough! I mean—fish can't even have sex! Female fish just plop out a whole lot of eggs, and male fishes swim around and spew sperm on them...there's absolutely nothing romantic about fish sex."

"SOME aquatic sea creatures can have sex!" piped up TODD LINEBURGERfish. "I know, because I'm a freshman, and read BEAUTIFUL SWIMMERS by William Warner. Crabs have sex! The male crab latches onto the female crab and gives her 3 whole days of foreplay, until she's ready, and then he travels around with her a long time more—to protect her until her shell gets hard again!"

"It's a beautiful thing...," murmured MARIADANA FUCHSfish (a crab) as she floated by, our maintenance crew finished The Cove in time for the first weekend back, and the dining hall regularly serves vegetarian meals.

What's next? Only time will tell. Of course, we won't be there to listen. Ω

RYAN MAHONEYfish happily attached to her.

"Ugh, WC Crab couples." said ANDREA NOLANfish. "I'd like to shoot them all. Kill them! Kill them! Kill them! Kill them 'till they're dead!"

"There's really not that many of them," said PATRICK OPLINGERfish. "One can probably count the number of WC couples on two hands."

"Yeah, that's the thing about the social life on this campus," said HELEN PITTSfish. "It seems like everyone either hooks up with a lot of people or else gets joined at the hip with one person in a sort of mini-marriage—there's nothing in between! There's no dating here...."

"Especially since the movie theater downtown closed!" said MARY BIRDfish. "What are students without cars supposed to do when they want to go on a date with someone? Go to the Cove and play air hockey?"

"They don't even have change machines down there!" said BRANDON HOPKINSfish. "Imagine bringing a date down there and realizing that you don't have any change! You'd have to leave her and run all the way to the Exxon and get some! How embarrassing!"

"You could always ask a date to the Birthday Ball," said LAURA HEIDELfish.

"Not any more," said JEN HANIFEEfish. "Fish can't dance."

"Fish can't dance—I guess that means no ball, then. What a shame," said STEVE BROWNfish "$60,000 they spent on the ball—all gone to waste. And I was going to go as Krusty the Klown! Too bad, too bad."

"Too bad they didn't put the money to something the school really needs instead!" said HEATHER PILARfish, "like a couple of new assistant professors, or some renovations for Health Services, or advertising—why doesn't this school put a glop of money into advertising sometime—why don't they do something to get this school known to people outside of Maryland?"

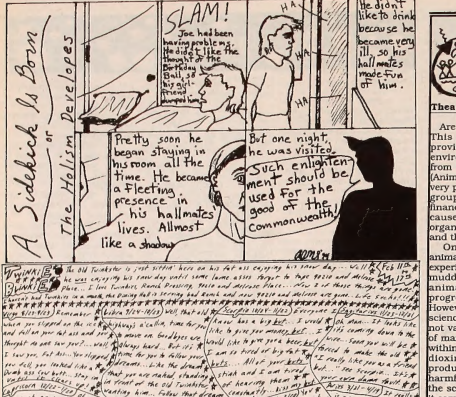
"Sigh." said KEITH MORGANfish. "It was a nice idea, though."

"Well, I guess the only thing left to be said in this Valentine's Day column," said ELISA HALEfish, "Is..."

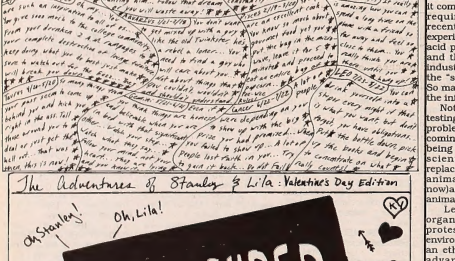
"We know," said everyone. "Condoms. Condoms. Condoms."

"After all," continued ELISA HALEfish, "We have to remember this: this school still has no official AIDS policy, so if any of us gets AIDS, there's no policy to protect us from discrimination and harassment, and there's no guarantee that we'd have unrestricted access to WC facilities, or even that we'd be allowed to attend classes as long as we weren't engaging in behavior that would endanger others, and as long as we were physically, mentally, and psychologically able to. There's also nothing here that would assure us confidentiality, or that would provide support services to help us get counseling and medical care...There's also nothing that would set up committees and educational programs to teach students about the virus and how they can protect themselves from it! This school is simply not prepared to deal with AIDS. Be careful, everyone—be careful."

"Condoms. Condoms. Condoms." Everyone chanted.



"And now," said BETH McCOYfish, "That's enough griping for a while. Let's everybody form in a circle and join fins..."



And everybody did. They held fins, and smiled. And although fish aren't supposed to be physiologically capable of feeling love a warmth began to be felt by all, and the ice on the Chester river began to melt, and everyone felt cosy. And suddenly there was a POP! And PRESIDENT TROUTfish suddenly turned back into a human being.

"BLUB!" he shouted, "AGH! SOMEBODY HELP ME! I'M DROWNING!" Ω

Are all environmentalists animal rights activists? This is a question commonly asked and I intend to provide a couple of answers and insights here. The environmentalist movement has effectively distanced itself from the animal rights movement. Groups such as ALF (Animal Liberation Front) are considered radical and not very positively with wise. As we all know, in order for a group, activist or otherwise, to achieve progress the financial situation is important. More importantly, the causes of animal rights activists and environmentalist organizations although closely interrelated are not one and the same.

One big issue- or dare I say THE main issue with animal rights activists is the use of animals for scientific experimentation. This is where the situation gets a bit muddy. Many people argue that experimentation with animals is necessary for there to be true scientific progress, while still others insist it's the only way. However, there are a few stumbling blocks in the path of science. Often the data obtained from tests on animals is not valid when dealing with human life. The application of many of these tests has been dubious and questioned within the scientific community itself. Chemicals such as dioxin, DDT, saccharin and cyclamates-all cancer-producing elements in lab tests with rats are not be harmful for humans in benign, normal doses. For years the scientific community has been facing confusion when it comes to results from tests on animals. The nutritional requirements for humans that were the norm until recently (diet centering around meat) were based on experiments with rats. The problem was that the amino-acid patterns in rats are different from those in humans and thus the nutritional needs also differ. Of course, industries benefited by tests jump on the results and use the "scientific knowledge" for their own economic profit. So many mistakes have been made that we no longer take the information seriously.

Not all animal rights organizations condemn animal testing, when used correctly these tests can solve many problems. I think the most positive thing that is coming out of the entire situation(other than the well-being of animals, of course) is that we are forcing the scientific community to consider the "Three R's"- replacement of animal tests, reduction in the numbers of animals used (we use some 20 million a year right now)and refinement of the scientific process to lessen animal suffering and increase accuracy of results.

Lets add a twist here. Many environmental organizations rely on data from animal tests when protesting or proving that a chemical or product is environmentally harmful. The issue in question is largely an ethical one. It's a trying situation and despite the advances being made towards more sophisticated scientific methods, most scientists agree that animal testing will always be necessary. However, it is not an entirely black or white situation and there is a common ground on which both movements can stand. Both groups can work together to insist the scientific community take responsibility and help preserve our Earth and our Creatures.

He said that it would also give the College a downtown campus.

Dean Wubbels addressed the faculty and thanked them for their participation in the Middle States Self Study and the Long Range Planning process. He also said that the College would appoint a new Associate Dean to replace Dean Sansing. The Dean also spoke to those come from within the College, and will probably be a two or three year term position, Wubbels stated.

When Senior Vice President for Management and Finance Gene Hessey stood to deliver his report, he was greeted by a standing ovation. "I had no idea the financial markets would react so negatively to my retirement," said Hessey, whose upcoming retirement was announced last week. Hessey said that by his reckoning he had attended 154 faculty meetings. Hessey expressed relief that he would not have to attend any more.

Dr. Steve Cades, chair of the Faculty Finance Committee, said that the three faculty members of his committee were working together to find ways to cut expenses. He said his committee was considering a system akin to progressive taxation, wherein no one earning under $20,000 would have their salary cut and the size of the "post-facto salary reductions" would increase the further one went up the pay scale.

Professor Day from the Faculty Affairs Committee introduced a resolution which would change the procedures for selection of the Faculty Secretary. After much discussion, the motion was passed without amendment. Ω dollars annually. For the most part this money is used to tie up liberal organizations in lawsuits, thereby draining funds and energy from such organizations. This goal of this effort is to prevent liberals from accomplishing any proactive measures.

In addition to immobilizing organizations like the ACLU, the Religious Right hopes to take over control of the Republican Party. According to Riley, the Religious Right has control of the Republican Parties of twelve states and won 25% of the delegates at the 1992 Republican Convention. In addition to attempting to seize control of the nation's political agenda by dominating the Republican Party, the Right would like gain control over the future of America by taking over the school system. Their goal is to convert all schools to Christian institutions by 2010. Towards this end there are school voucher initiatives being proposed in 16 states across the US.

After Riley finished filling in the audience about the history and activities of the Religious Right, the floor was opened to questions. The sentiment in the room was that the Right seemed far more organized than the large but splintered left. Riley urged the audience to "not get into this polarizing stuff ... be informed ... take elections seriously, and fight for decent education in this country." Her advice was that liberals had to become "really active and really deliberate" to counter the moves of the Religious Right.

The stimulating lecture/discussion will be hard to top, but the William James Forum will strive to do just that, with lectures on the 22 of February and 21 of March. Professor Alban Urbanas will talk in February on "Aristotle, Nietzche and the Meaning of Ethics." In March, Jim Woods, author of The Corporate Closet, will speak on "Sexuality in the Workplace." Students, faculty and other members of the Washington College extended community are invited to come and enjoy these thought-provoking evenings. Ω uninitiated conjures up visions of the film Animal House: beer-swilling, arrogant, obnoxious Neanderthals whose sole pursuit in life is the never-ending pursuit and hoist of notches on their bedposts. This crass Hollywood imagery has been reinforced by examples of reality imitating art. Many campuses across the nation continue to be plagued by fraternities that enshrine this negativity and thereby reinforce the popularly held image of the entire greek system. Regrettaby, the exceptions to this blanket statement are its hapless victims, since one of the cardinal rules of public opinion is that perception is reality. It is far easier to accept a preconceived notion of an unknown variable than to observe judgment until one has reviewed all of the facts.

The facts are that the benefits of fraternity membership at Washington College are enormous. While some would argue that the intimate size of the student body makes membership in a fraternity socially constricting, it would be difficult to find a dedicated fraternity man on this campus who was not socially involved in various campus groups. Indeed, it is more often than not the case that the more active students on the campus are greek. Even after graduation, members of greek letter organizations tend to remain more involved in alumni life as members of the alumni association or the Board of Visitors and Governors. Additionally, our College President, Charles Trout and our Associate Dean of Students Edward Maxcy are members of fraternities.

This past Saturday, the brothers of Kappa Alpha Order hosted a Kappa Alpha AlumniFest at which several generations of brothers congregated to reassert the ideals that unite us all. One of the alumni brothers responded to the criticism that fraternity life is not a necessary adjunct to a successful social life on this campus given its size by stating that a non-greek graduate can not return to 3rd floor Caroline or 2nd floor Kent ten years from now and announce "Hey, I'm back!" and be welcomed with open arms by the present residents.

The over four hundred men who have graduated from Washington College as Kappa Alphas since 1936 will always be welcome at Middle Hall. I can only assume that the same holds true for the brothers of Phi Delta Theta and Theta Chi; membership does not terminate with graduation. Fraternal life can yield other dividends as well; I have received two job offers and one law school recommendation from fraternity brothers. This does not begin to address the feelings of manly affection and loyalty that one partakes for every single day as a brother. The parties, late-night conversations, academic assistance, and camaraderie are indescribable. The benefits are limitless.

The notion of (non-biological) brotherhood through group affliation is one that has its roots in biblical times. It could be argued that the twelve disciples of Jesus Christ were an early incarnation of a fraternity. A group of men bound by ideological tenets, united for a common cause (in this case, the dissemination of the teachings of Christ), it is analogous to the affiliation that my brothers and I enjoy. We are a diverse assortment of individuals socially, ethnically, geographically, racially, and intellectually. There is no such thing as an archetypal KA; we are scholars, athletes, socialites and hermits. Despite these differences, we share a belief in the Kappa Alpha Order motto "Dieu et les Dames" (God and Women), which reflects the ideals of religious faith and devotion to the courteous regard for women that was the hallmark of the knights of old.

This Friday, the men who have been selected for membership in the re-cognized fraternities will receive bids to become pledges and eventually brothers. Many of the men will eagerly accept without a moment's hesitation, and undertake a great adventure that they will remember fondly for years to come. Some of the men will agonize over the decision for up to two weeks as they debate the pros and cons of this crucial choice. To those men, I offer this piece of advice: there are times in your life when you will come to a crossroads when you have to choose between "the road less travelled by" or take the safe, well-travelled path. If you shirk the challenge of membership in a fraternity, it will not drastically alter the apparent course of your life for the worse, but if you accept the challenge, it will almost certainly enhance your life beyond your wildest imaginings. Good Luck to the Pledge Class of 1994.

Random Violence Affects all of Us

Jen Waldych

Last Wednesday night I was sleeping. I felt a cold coming on and went to bed early in hopes of fighting it off. It was a little after 10 when my mother's voice on the answering machine woke me up. I picked up the phone. "What, Mom?"

"Jenny, are you okay?"

"It's just a cold. I was sleeping."

"Did you see the news today?" My mom asked.

"No, just the highlights. I went to bed early. Look, Mom, I really don't feel well so..."

"Jen, did you hear about the teacher who was shot?," my mom interrupted.

"Yeah, That was the clip of the woman on the stretcher. It came after the picture of the burning building, and before the clip of the Tonya Harding update. Film at 11. What are we getting at here, Mom?" She had woken me up out of a mind-numbing Nyquil sleep. I was in no mood to play games. I wanted to get back to bed before it wore off. My mother taught at a middle school in a horrible area up until this year and I thought she was about to go on a rampage about how glad she was to be out of there.

"Jen, that was Mrs. Lombardi."

"Julie? Miss Julie?" I sat up in bed. My arms were numb. Julie Lombardi is my next door neighbor. My mother went on, telling me the story as I sat there frozen, blinking. I managed to catch the gist of it. Somebody tried to carjack her. She wouldn't get out of the car. He shot at her 6 times from the passenger side. He shot her in the face.

"He shot her in the face"— that much I heard very clearly. After that I wasn't listening any more. I was thinking about her. I know her. Her name is Julie. She's young. She has big, brown eyes and a shy smile. She has a husband named Marty who likes cars. She has a little boy. His name is Nicholas and he is the most beautiful and bright and adorable boy I've ever seen. I could see them in my head. They were at the pool. Nicholas had his little floaties on and Julie was playing with him in the water. How could someone aim a gun at this kind, dedicated woman who has been teaching underprivileged city kids for 20 years? I wondered if he would have still been able to knock her teeth out and rip her face apart with that bullet if he had known all this.

How can people hurt each other like this? How could someone decide that a car, a thing was worth taking a woman away from her husband, her child, her parents, and all the kids at that school who depend on her? How could someone be so callous to the rest of the people on earth?

Then I realized that we all do it everyday. The television washes over us, wave after wave of static until the news is just a familiar rhythmic sound: an arson here, a shooting here.

I didn't even notice. I turned it off and went to bed. But I was sleeping before I even shut my eyes. It wasn't until it was my next door neighbor's turn to who was shot that I woke up. We're numb to the violence in this country, and as long as we continue to sleep through it, it won't stop. This time it was little Nicholas's mom who was shot. But it could have been my mom— or yours.

Julie Lombardi is very lucky to be alive. She is undergoing massive facial reconstructive surgery and she has a chance for a full recovery.

I don't know if it's any good to put this in The Elm. I don't understand this world or what happened so I don't really know what to say. But I do want to say that I'm not writing this just because it was my next-door neighbor. I'm writing because the news is not so distant; it's our problem, too. And maybe I'm still in shock, but I just hoped that we would all care about it. Ω

How To Be A "Dukey" at the WAC

By now I am sure you have heard about the crazy at the basketball games who discusses world politics in the visiting team. Well, I am sure you have. Being ected as Newt's fan of the week, I feel obligated to p my fellow classmates become the best basketball s in division 3. First let me tell you that I really nted to go to Duke and be a "Dukey," but fortunatly my father and my high school GPA and oh s not forget, that funny little draw the face with the ce test SAT score was not up to par. I even tried to in by telling them that I was Bobby Hurley's twin ther, but everyone one knows at the WAC that I am bby Hurley. As you see I am in Chestertown and ay at peace, I don't think so!!! I have decided that d put me here to be the sixth man on the basketball n (can I please Coach Hart have a jacket, jersey, or ville ever socks, or better yet some of the shoes with lights).

I think it is time to get to the important issue here. ere's top ten ways to be a "Dukey" at the WAC. If you low these steps you too can be a "WACY."

1 To be effective you need to put names with faces (I getting there fifteen minutes early is adequate time memorize). Also if you can put a cute little name on nt of theirs, all the better. Ie. prettyboy Jimmy(WM) teddy Ruxpin(CNC).

2 Since the visiting team is our guest in the Cain ter, it is neccesary to introduce yourself to each one them know that you are there. I like to call them by me, as if you know them, and once you have their ention do not get scared to be honest with them and

3 let them know how bad you think they are.

3 The warm up time is a critical time in the life of a ker. Make a mental note of who talks back to you they are talking to you then they are obviously not ntrating on the task at hand. Score 1 for the ker!

4 Game time! As soon as the visiting players come to the floor for the jump, make sure you put all your ds onto the center. If he has the glasses call him mem or if he is not strong direct him to our state of art weight room!

5 As the game progresses make sure that you keep k of all screw ups the visitors make. I like to count takes and let the player at fault know about his up ups until he scores again.

6 Talk to the opposing coach! After all, he is our pal. If his team isn't quite sure where the basket is, polite and offer your insight. I find it easier to call assistant coaches by the color of their tie.

7 Foul shots can win or lose a game. Ask opposing ers, while on the charity stripe, about their High hool, haircut shorts, etc. I prefer the Chris Farley mercial on ESPN!

8 If we are going to win, as usual, it is extremely portant to be gracious winners, I don't think so!!! member to tell their coach to warm up the bus. After there is nothing worse than losing and sitting down cold bus plastic!

9 If someone is obviously really good and you have ain them all game, go up and shake their hand. ows like to remind them that I am Bobby Hurley!

10 The most important step is to Be Respectful! ese players are human (although they can't play ketball to save their lives) and I am sure that they k hard to be on the JV, I mean Varsity team. After they are on the court (most of them at least) and we in the stands!

On a different note I would like to thank my friends, ecially Dave, Michelle, Kelly, and Jerry, for helping deal with JAKE's passing. Jake was not just a bird, was my best friend! We miss you Jake!

Don't forget about lacrosse season. You can get a while heckeling!

--Chris Hargett

Editor's Note--Chris Hargett is a junior from Annapolis, Maryland whose hobbies include sailing, skiing, and yelling at opposing basketball players. Yes, he is the annoying guy you hear yelling at every men's basketball game. His lifetime aspirations are to be a bum and sail around the world.--MM

Gettysburg Teaches Washington A Lesson

Top School In The Conference Earns Respect

Erika K. Ford

Last Saturday, the Shoremen and Shorewomen swimming teams travelled to Gettysburg where both squads were handed a loss.

The Washington men were on a seven-meet winning streak before falling to Conference champs Gettysburg, 146-59. Their record is now 7-2.

Gettysburg has won the Centennial title in swimming for the past six years. Coach Kim Lessard said, "On Saturday they proved why—they have superior depth."

The Washington women lost 167-36. They too were victims of their opponent. They now stand at 2-7.

Gettysburg women have been league champions for 14 years, and nationally ranked for the past six.

The men's medley relay team of Pete Ward, Julien Gaudion, Scott Steinmuller, and Jason Campbell swam a season best time to capture second place.

Commenting on the loss, Steinmuller said, "The guys have done really well this year, but it's also good to realize that we have a long way to go in terms of improving."

"Our team's been inspired by a quote," Dan Woodall said. It's called 'breaking the mold', and at each practice and meet that's what we try to do. We're inspired by that idea."

Pete Ward was Washington's lone star of the meet, winning the 100 backstroke. He also swam the opening leg of the 200 free relay that placed second with Dave Cola, Chris Freisheim, and Tim Parent.

Parent took second in the 50 freestyle, while Cola had second in the 500 free.

For the Shorewomen, Colleen Roberts managed two third places in the 400 IM and 100 breaststroke.

"This meet against Gettysburg was our hardest and most nerve-wracking," Roberts said. "Everyone was nervous going in. We just tried to put up a good show against the best team in the Conference."

Eileen Kuriger continued to improve her seed time for championships, knocking another two seconds off and placing third in the 1000 free.

Upon reflection, Kuriger said, "I think it's cool that the team is so close. Although our record may not show it, we all work very hard at what we do. I just honored to be a part of it all. And I think we'll do great at Championships."

On Wednesday night in the last scheduled meet, Swarthmore came to Chestertown. Coach Lessard said, "We have never beaten them before, but we have a great chance to now." (A score was not available at the time of print).

Washington swimmers will wrap up their season at the Centennial Conference Championships, to be held at Dickinson on February 18th.

Hart Follows In Father's Footsteps

Coaching Path Has Taken 11-Year Stop At Washington College

Matt Murray

One of Mike Hart's fondest basketball memories is of the 1990 NCAA Division III Regional Final which sent the Washington College Shoremen to the Final Four after a win over Western Connecticut. Hart was an assistant coach for the 1990 Shoremen, but what made the moment special was that he got to share the victory with his father.

Hart's father, Dick, is an Anne Arundel County legend. He was the only basketball coach in Andover High School's history, and his 30 years in coaching (29 at Andover) produced a 330-294 record, five regional titles and two trips to the state finals.

He died less than a year after Mike's Shoremen capped a 26-6 season with a trip to the Final Four.

In 1990, Dick Hart was named the first coach in North County High School's history after Andover and Brooklyn Park merged, and he would have been the only coach in county history to start two programs. However, he never assumed his new position and died on February 2, 1991. Today, the North County gymnasium bears the name Hart Hall.

Now, Mike is following in his father's footsteps. After 10 years as an assistant coach at Washington, Hart heads the program in Chestertown this season, while head coach Tom Finnegan is on sabbatical leave.

"I grew up in the gymnasium, and my dad was the only coach Andover ever had," said Hart who played for his father at Andover from 1976-79. "I saw the enjoyment he got out of coaching, and the big reason I started coaching was that I saw how much my dad loved what he did."

Mike Hart didn't waste any time entering the coaching ranks. After playing for two seasons at Western Maryland College, Hart transferred to Towson State for academic reasons and began coaching the junior varsity team at Meade High School.

Hart joined the Washington College staff for the 1983-84 season. It's been a productive 10 years for the Shoremen with Hart as an assistant, as Washington has compiled a 173-86 record in his time in Chestertown, including three trips to the NCAA Tournament.

This season, with a 10-10 record after a 81-77 loss to Muhlenberg onFebruary 5, Hart is pleased with his team's performance.

"I think we're doing alright so far, especially after losing two starters to academics after first semester," Hart said. "We have a pretty tough schedule, so I think we're getting better as time goes on, and I think the last couple of games we've played really well."

Hart also feels the transition has been made easy for him from the people at Washington College to his full-time employer, at Peoples' Bank of Kent County.

"Everyone at school from Coach Finnegan to (athletic director) Geoff Miller to the equipment people have made the situation as easy for me as they could," he said. "Other than just some long days, things have been great, and the bank's been really cooperative as well."

The players have also made the adjustment. Hart has forced an up-tempo offense to go with a strong defense. His team has responded.

"We have more of a fast-paced style now," said senior Geoff Rupert of Sykesville, Maryland. "Things are more laid back. He (Hart) is more of a player's coach."

Hart feels he's taught his players the right way to do things, and his style allows them to develop those ideas into plays on the court.

"I try to teach the kids so they can make decisions when they're out there," said Hart, who believes a strong defense is the key to winning. "I like to give general rules on what they want to do and then let them do it."

Hart believes his relationship with his father helped him develop as both a coach and a person. He insists that any success he finds in coaching is a result of learning from the best.

"When my dad was my coach, if I had a bad game, we didn't bring it home," Hart said. "I guess his philosophy was that he wasn't going to make me do anything I didn't want to do. But I asked for help on how to improve my game, I had better be ready to work hard."

Hart hopes he has been able to motivate his players to work hard this season, and while he realizes this year may have been a one-shot deal at Washington with the winningest coach in school history returning from sabbatical next year, he is hoping he may get a shot at a head coaching job elsewhere.

"Head coaching jobs don't come along that often," he said. "But if the opportunity came up somewhere, I would be interested, and I'm hoping this one-year experience will open doors."

No one can retell the stories of Dick Hart's successes better than his son. While he is currently 324 wins short of his father's career high school record, Mike Hart hopes that as he passes through the college ranks, observers will be able to see a bit of his father's coaching style in his own.

"Any comparison to my dad in a positive sense would be a great accomplishment to me," Hart said.

Mules Sink Shoremen 81-77 In O.T.

Controversial Basket At The End Of Regulation Lifts Visitors To Victory

Y. Jeffrey Lee

After picking up an 89-81 victory against Wesley on February 3, the Washington College Shoremen entered last Saturday's competition against the Muhlenberg College Mules with a four-game winning streak.

Washington (10-10) was determined to put away the Mules for good and take the top spot in the East Division of the Centennial Conference.

However, a controversial call at the end of regulation demoralized the Shoremen, and Washington could not put together a streak in overtime.

"It was a tough game," captain Charles Cummings said. "We had the ball in our control most of the time throughout the game with a few tough calls. We played real hard and shot real well."

With a full capacity crowd, the players showed an immense determination. However despite the winning streak and the enthusiastic home crowd support, Washington came up short against the Mules 81-77. The loss leaves the Shoremen at the .500 mark.

The game started evenly and the two squads were tied at 20-20 with 8:24 left in the first half. Muhlenberg took a brief two-point lead with 4:23 to go, but the strong play of Ben Harris (12 first half points) led Washington back to a tie at 37 at halftime.

As the second half was underway, Harris and Cummings exploded to combine for 25 points during the half. This led to an early lead for Washington by two with 15:57 remaining.

On a spurt, the Shoremen quickly took charge with a 5-0 run. Cummings' one-handed slam brought the capacity crowd to their feet. This gave the Shoremen

"Well, they've got to make a call and I guess they made it. It's one of those games where tough calls have to be made and I guess if the officials called it against Muhlenberg, I'm sure they'd be pretty angry too."
--head coach Mike Hart

with a 9 point lead with 12:20 remaining.

With 3:37 to go, Washington took its largest lead at 61-51.

However, with Muhlenberg forwards Dennis Adams and Chris Bedell, the Mules brought themselves within two with four seconds remaining in the game. At the buzzer, Muhlenberg tied the score with a short jumper.

"Well, they've got to make a call and I guess they made it," head coach Mike Hart said. "Coming down the stretch, the kids played real hard and made those free throws at the end.

"It's one of those games where tough calls have to be made and I guess if the officials called it against Muhlenberg, I'm sure they'd be pretty angry too."

The home crowd refusing to believe that the game was tied grew restless and frustration took over. With overtime underway, the Mules took a sudden lead with a 6-0 run with 2:30 remaining in the game.

"With a tough call at the end, we just came out flat in overtime," Cummings said. "I mean tough calls are made in a game like this and I'd rather have points and win instead"

With time running out, Washington themselves unable to catch-up and fell short. The loss probably left the Shoremen without a chance to qualify for the conference playoffs.

For Washington, Harris scored 28, Cummings added 18, Geoff Rupert added nine, Jerry Dale had seven, Edmund Bell scored 11, and Derek Cox and Adam Poe each chipped in with two.

Muhlenberg Trounces W.C. In Centennial Conference Game

By Jeffrey Lee

The Washington College women's basketball game carried a 6-10 record into last Saturday's Centennial Conference Eastern Division contest with Muhlenberg College.

However, a stifling Muhlenberg (9-9) defense forced 24 Washington turnovers en route to a 80-53 Shorewomen defeat. The 21-point blow out sent Washington (6-11) reeling to its second straight defeat after a 70-56 loss to the College of Notre Dame.

The Mules took an early lead with an 8-0 run six minutes into the first half. However, with solid passing plays inside, Washington closed the gap, bringing themselves within two.

After a Muhlenberg timeout, the Mules extended the lead with a 9-0 run to make the score 20-20 with 5:41 remaining in the half.

Down by ten, Washington senior Eboni Taylor and forward Allison Wentworth led a Shorewomen spurt to close the gap to 37-34 in Muhlenberg's favor at halftime. Taylor and Wentworth combined to score 27 of the team's first 34 points.

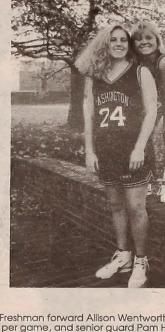
Unfortunately, personal fouls once again haunted the Shorewomen. Taylor finished the first half with four personal fouls, and her fifth foul sent her to the bench for the rest of the evening.

"I don't know what happened," Taylor said. "I just ran into foul trouble."

The second half did not look too optimistic. Washington dug itself deeper into the hole. Muhlenberg guards Eileen and Ellen Ogozalla led the Mules to a 6-0 run three minutes into the second half. Down 43-34, Washington called timeout.

Not only did fouls haunt the Shorewomen during the latter part of the second half, Washington also had already reached double figures in turnovers.

The Shorewomen did not score until 14:31 remaining in the game, and they trailed 50-36. The smart passing plays that were executed by Washington in the first half seemed to have disintegrated.



"Definitely turnovers and foul troubles made it tough," head coach Lanee Cole said. "We have to make some adjustments."

As the game progressed, the point spread grew even larger. With 1:30 remaining in the game the score was 80-49.

During the second half, Washington as a whole team was able to score only 25 points compared to 34 points in the first half, leaving frustrated Washington players and fans to wonder what went wrong.

"With Eboni's fourth personal foul, Eboni had to leave the game," Cole said. "Last time we played Muhlenberg, we lost by 15. We prepared for this game like we prepare other games, and I know we are a better team."

Besides Taylor and Wentworth, Lee Ann Lezzer scored 16 points, Kelly Rodgers and Cherie Gallini each added four, and Liz Mangano chipped in two.

Freshman forward Allison Wentworth averages 17.4 points per game, and senior guard Pam Hendrickson averages 3.5 assists per game for Washington this season.

Lezzer Records Triple-Double In Bryn Mawr Victory On Feb. 1

CHESTERTOWN, MD—

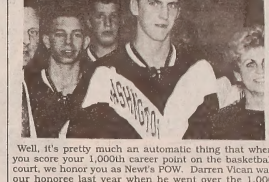
Lee Ann Lezzer (Millersville, MD/Old Mill) accomplished the first triple-double in Washington College women's basketball history February 1 against Bryn Mawr College.

On her team's way to its third consecutive Centennial Conference win, Lezzer scored 16 points, pulled out 11 assists, and tallied down 10 rebounds. In the 72-53 victory. She was also proficient from 3-point range, hitting on four of six attempts for Washington, which is now 5-9.

Washington, in its first season of intercollegiate competition, has now defeated Gettysburg, Swarthmore, and Bryn Mawr in conference play. Lezzer, a 5-foot-9 freshman guard is currently averaging 10 points and 4.5 assists per game for the Shorewomen.

Washington, which starts four freshmen, now holds third place in the East Division of the Centennial Conference with a 3-5 conference record.

Lezzer's 16 points, 11 assists, and 10 rebounds against Bryn Mawr were all season highs. College and former high school teammate Allison Wentworth (Millersville, MD/Old Mill) scored 20 points in the Bryn Mawr victory.



Lezzer continued her string of strong games in losses to the College of Notre Dame and Muhlenberg.

Against Notre Dame, Lezzer was 2-for-4 from 3-point range, and finished with nine points for the evening. She also recorded five assists.

Against Muhlenberg, the freshman guard exploded for a season high 18 points including three 3-pointers. She also had four rebounds and three assists.

Well, it's pretty much an automatic thing that when you score your 1,000th career point on the basketball court, we honor you as Newt's POW. Darren Vican was our honoree last year when he went over the 1,000 mark, and this season, another Shoremen whom we all know and love has topped the mark.

Geoff 'Rup' Rupert has had a sterling 4-year career here in Chestertown. The senior forward scored his 1,000th against Wesley on February 3, and he has had a pretty consistent season for Washington.

However, this week we have a whole slew of honorable mentions so I'll get to them right now...

Men's Swimming--Scott Steinmuller and Chris Freisheim. They've both getting the job done in the pool, and one of these days, they'll win the whole award with honors.

Women's Swimming--Colleen Roberts and Jen Green have been strong in the pool for the women's side. Even though the team's record does not reflect a very successful season for the women's swimming team, it's been a good year to improve in the Casey Swim Center.

Women's Basketball--Freshmen Eboni Taylor, Allison Wentworth, and Lee Ann Lezzer have continued to carry the young team. Lezzer scored the first triple-double in school history against Bryn Mawr (see left), and both Wentworth and Taylor are averaging double figures in points.

Men's Basketball--Even though Rupert gets the glory this week for his career mark, Charles Cummings and Ben Harris have been carrying the team. Harris scored 22 in the loss to Muhlenberg, and Cummings has continued to build on last week's honor with strong games against Wesley (24 points) and Muhlenberg (18 points).

All in all, it's been a productive winter at W.C. and there's still lots of action to come.

Congratulations to Geoff Rupert for scoring his 1,000th career point against Wesley last week. Rupert, a senior from Sykesville, Maryland, has had a strong 4-year career for the Shoremen.

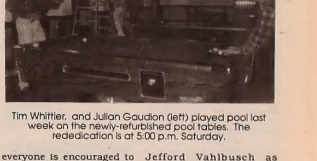
Birthday Ball Weekend

Rachael Fink

The weekend is finally here and what a weekend it will be for the Washington College community. There are quite a few events to occupy students, faculty, and Board members alike. Starting early Friday afternoon, the entire campus will be awash with people braving the slush and puddles to attend a variety of activities.



At 2 p.m. Saturday afternoon the entire College is invited to Convocation, held in Tawes Theater, in the Gibson Fine Arts Building. David McCullough, author of Truman, and Stephen E. Ambrose, author of Eisenhower: Soldier and President and Eisenhower: The President, will be honored with doctorates of letters. Shortly thereafter, the President's Forum will be held. At 3:30 in the Forum, McCullough and Ambrose will discuss After D-Day: Truman, Eisenhower, and the America They Helped to Shape. There will be an opportunity for questions from the audience as well as a book signing at 10:30 a.m. at the Washington College Bookstore.

At 5 p.m. on Saturday afternoon, the official re-dedication of The Cove and remodeled Student Center will be held. Students are encouraged to attend to express our gratitude to those who helped plan, finance and carry out this project on our behalf.

Friday night the usual combination of parties will be held, with students gearing up for the gala Birthday Ball. The Writer's Union, Visual Artist's Union, Peer Educators, and GALA are sponsoring the annual Black Hearts Ball in the O'Neill Literary House. Attendance is invitation only, and it seems as if half of the campus has been invited. Attendees are encouraged to wear black and/or red.

There will also be a Pan Hel dance at the Cove from which will be open to all from 10:30 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. Attire is semi-formal, admission is free and there will be a disk jockey.

Saturday morning, when most people will still be snug in their beds, Cain Memorial Gym will be transformed in to Mardi Gras, New Orleans style. The formal dinner will start at 7:30 p.m., and everyone is encouraged to be on time for the opening ceremonies which will start promptly at 9:30. The entire event promises to be unforgettable, with German instructor Dr. Jefford Vahlbusch as emcee, the Honorable Louis L. Goldstein as "King," and the "Queen" selected from among the student body. Ω

Tim Whittier, and Julian Gaudion (left) played pool last week on the newly-refurbished pool tables. The rededication is at 5:00 p.m. Saturday.

Countywide Police Force Proposed

Rachael Fink

On Tuesday, February 15, a public hearing concerning the proposed Code Home Rule Bill No. 2-94 was held at the Board of Education Meeting Room in Chestertown. Bill No. 2-94 was drafted as a result of an extensive investigation into the current law enforcement policy and the feasibility of a County Police Department, by the County Police Advisory Committee. This bill, to be added to Chapter 5 "Health and Safety" of the public local laws of Kent County, will, if voted into law, establish a County Police Department. In accordance with the established laws concerning county government, the Kent County Commissioners held the public hearing to garner responses to the proposed changes in law enforcement.

After a brief explanation of the history of concerns about law enforcement in Kent County, Charles MacCleod, County Administrator, went through the report of the Advisory Committee and the proposed legislation. In essence, the changes will simply "take what exists today and segment it ... into two agencies," said MacCleod. The cost of such a transition will exceed 17 thousand dollars, not including personnel expenses which are estimated at an increase of 45 thousand dollars annually. By instituting the change, the County Commissioners hope to enhance "inter-agency coordination," according to MacCleod.

After this explanation by MacCleod, the floor was opened to concerned citizens of Kent County, many of whom raised serious questions about the feasibility and costs-sity of creating a County Police Department. A resident of Betterton questioned the jurisdiction of such a department and whether or not unincorpo-rated municipalities within Kent County would be able to rely on the department for law enforcement. Commissioner Gary Bell said that these concerns "will be taken into consideration" before the March 1 vote.

State's Attorney and Chief Law Enforcement Officer for Kent County, Susanne Hayman, was present to voice her opinions concerning the wording of several parts of the proposed bill. Hayman commended the Committee for their through and thoughtful examination of the issues, but felt that some of the wording of Bill 2-94 needed clarifying so as to prevent confusion in the future. Among the phrases that Hayman thought should be changed were "criminal acts" and "strictly enforced," found in section 5-1-14, which outlines the duties of the Chief of Police. "Criminal acts" does not include civil matters which can be enforced by a police department, such as procuring alcohol for minors. Hayman felt that the word "strictly" implied policy matters, which are under the discretion of the Chief of Police and therefore not applicable in local law.

Following Hayman's comments, several citizens of Kent County spoke in opposition to the proposed legislation, -citing the apparent lack of need for a change. According to MacCleod, no services will be offered by the County Police Department that are not currently being handled by the Sheriff's Department. However, the Commissioners expressed hope that cooperation between county offices will increase under the proposed legislation. Some of those voicing opposition felt that the problem was not with the current law enforcement organization, but between the current Sheriff and the County Commissioners, thus the proposed change could be unnecessary following the next elections.

Another concern paramount to most attendees at the public hearing was the increase in power of the County Commissioners. According to Bill 2-94, the County Commissioners would appoint the Chief of Police, rather than having the position be filled in a county election, as is currently the case with the Sheriff's position. In the opinion of those raising objections to Bill 2-94, this would put too much power into the hands of the County Commissioners' office and deprive the citizens of Kent County the right to determine who is responsible for maintaining law and order in Kent County.

The County Commissioners' office will be accepting written responses to the proposed legislation through February 28, and citizens of Kent County are encouraged to read the report and recommendations of the County Police Force Advisory Committee and Code Home Rule Bill No. 2-94, as changes in the law enforcement agencies are of

Casey Speaks on Crisis Investing 2

Towers Gives the Dirt on the Freshman Reading 4

Crisis Investing

Last night Douglas Casey (yes, the same one whose mother donated the Casey Academic Center) gave a presentation for the Jones Seminar in American Business at Washington College entitled Crisis Investing for the Rest of the '90s. Unfortunately, this presentation took place while I was in Elkton, Maryland, arranging for the printing of the newspaper you are now reading.

Fortunately, Mr. Casey graciously sent me a copy of his latest book Crisis Investing for the Rest of the 90's (Birch Lane Press, $22.50), so I've got some idea of the content of last night's lecture. Normally, I wouldn't read something entitled Crisis Investing for the Rest of the 90's, as I'd assume it to be as entertaining and informative as watching the Nightly Business Report. I also don't have any money to invest in crises, but that's another beef altogether.

After having to opportunity to talk to Mr. Casey last fall, however, I knew that Crisis Investing for the Rest of the 90's wouldn't be just another get rich quick book. And it isn't. (That's right, kids, it's book-report time!) Okay, I'll admit it, I've only read the first five chapters so far, but I gotta tell you, it's a real page-turner.

Crisis Investing is an overtly subversive investment guide for the ideologically conscious investor. It would be impossible without oversimplification to classify it as merely anarchistic. Mr. Casey advocates the maximization of both personal and economic freedom in the hope that people will "...structure their lives so that the government—which is to say taxes, regulation and inflation—is a non-factor." Basically, Crisis Investing advocates an individualistic revolution which would render government irrelevant to the people as a whole by freeing one citizen at a time.

Naturally it takes money to lead this sort of life. And Casey advises us on how to go about making the kind of money necessary to achieve the desired level of autonomy from government. Mr. Casey instructs the reader on how to turn war into war profits, why political strife is a boon to the international real estate speculator, how to realize obscene returns by investing in gold stocks, and which money market funds to steer clear of.

What is truly remarkable about this eccentric combination of investment advice and political philosophy is that the two are blended together seemlessly without internal contradiction. A central thread of Crisis Investing is that it is normally the case that "... a genuine public service lines the benefactor's pockets." New age honest graft with a surprise twist. An example of this is how buying real estate in the Third World is not only profitable, but it allows for the preservation of lands which would otherwise be vulnerable to environmentally destructive exploitation. Casey informs the reader not only how to make money, but how to feel good about making money, one of the chapter subheadings is "Money as a Zen Experience." In it Casey writes "People who blame money for the evils of the world suffer from a lack of responsibility at best; assigning blame isn't an optimal way of making evils go away. In fact, readily assigning blame elsewhere has caused most of the poverty, war and general misery that history catalogues."

While some of Crisis Investing for the Rest of the 90's seems a bit glib, that does not detract from its virtues. Casey writes with the utter self assurance of a man who knows he is right. It is probably more important as a work of political philosophy than as an investment guide, and yet remains thoroughly entertaining and fun to read. Frankly, it is refreshing to read an investment book as eclectic and thoroughly radical as this one. I can't wait to finish it.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

This year's Birthday Ball has attracted much attention and all indications point to a well-attended event. The SGA has expressed its concern over available parking in the area surrounding Cain Gym. The SGA has made the following recommendations and requests your assistance and support.

Students who park their vehicles in the lot adjacent to the Casey Swim Center, Fine Arts Center and Life Time Fitness Center are requested to move their vehicles to other parking areas. This will allow easier access for our visitors.

The SGA will be providing free transportation in the form of a shuttle service for those living in the Chestertown area. The shuttle will pick up and return riders home during the Birthday Ball hours. To make arrangements for this service, please contact Washington College Alumni Affairs at extension 7812.

The SGA and I would like to thank you in advance for your support. Please call on us if we may be of assistance.

Sincerely,
Jerry Rhoderick

A Cynic Gone Soft

Thea Mateu

A wave of lonelinessand self-pity sweeps over me. So, 'tis the season to be jolly. You'd think the holidays had ended with New Year's but No! we have to have Valentine's Day as well. In Puerto Rico it's even worse, they're probably still boozing up and celebrating the Epiphany (January 6) at home. Love and joy come to you. I roam the aisles of the crowded supermarket – must they play those cheesy love songs? I must look like I'm stalking someone. I look petrcingly into people's eyes, looking for that familiar blankness. Could I be the only lonely person on the night before Valentine's Day? Is it possible that only I am alone? (And you didn't believe the self-pity thing!)

A man with a long white beard walks by me merrily humming. He wears overalls that are stained and old and his hands are rough with the labor of years. He is beautiful. He smiles. How could I ever judge? Ever be harsh. For the fleeting moment that our spirits connected I looked in his eyes and attempted a smile I saw that we are not that different, the man and I. He smiles and hums along. I wonder if he knows a part of him stays with me. I walk on, pretending to examine the price of cereal but still looking at the people walking by. Strangers? Maybe not.

A woman with her baby walks past me. She moves toward the baby section. I smile at her and at the baby. I don't even need to force the smile this time. The baby giggles and the young mother rushes on. How could I ever judge her? Blame her for being young, for being a mother? She hurries along, smiles briefly at me and looks down protectively at her daughter. How could I blame anyone for choosing motherhood over the Joys of Madly Rushing Looking Busy and Pretending To Be Someone Important. The baby looked back at me and gurgled. I lower my head but not before waving at the baby and blowing a mental kiss. I keep on scanning the aisles, examining things I didn't need. Trying to find Meaning. The meaning of Love, of the Holidays of...Life.

Surprisingly enough I saw it there on these people's faces. Young woman walking and selecting cookies for her home. Little children thinking of Valentine's . and good things to eat. So much hope in their little eyes, but the cynic in me is taking a holiday vacation. I can't just bah humbug them off and say they'll learn or some harsh comment. I can't do it. I treasure the hope in their little eyes. The trusting in their little hands as they hold on to mommy or daddy or sister or brother or cousin or friend. I treasure the look on another young woman's face as she plays with a ring on her left hand looking dreamily at the kitty litter. Well okay, so kitty litter is not the foundation of dreams but a home, the promise of a home was written so clearly on her face.

There is so much to learn from people. I have been looking for knowledge in all the wrong places. When I stopped and heard the laughter of two men talking and didn't even bother to judge justify or mar the moment. I drink in their laughter and their smiles. The good wishes that actually sound sincere! I even treasure the sour-faced cashier. It's been a long day at work and it's cold and nasty and it's a holiday. I understand. I don't blame. I allow myself a few minutes of self pity as I wait in line. I think of the flowers I don't have awaiting at my door, the four-wheel drive vehicle I don't have (I don't have any vehicle but that's okay), the family and friends who are not here, the warm arms that are not here waiting for me.

And yes, it saddens me, but I have a lot to be thankful for. I have a lot of beauty around me that I haven't been bothering to see. It's there though. I write out my check and carry home my provisions with a lighter heart. I feel cleansed of the bitterness that was eating me like a cancer. I feel that I am one with the world. Maybe I should go to the supermarket more often. Ω

Freshman Reading

J. Tarin Towers

Wednesday's Freshman Reading was a wonderful look at the promising crop of fresh-faced newbies. Many of their works were about sex, including a comparison of the Hershey's Kiss to, as general consensus interpreted, the rectum.

Two of the readers talked about aging. Note: I am three years older than these young poets, and if their bones are creaking as they fondly remember their childhoods, I guess I'm just a heartbeat away from the crypt.

What I really learned from the reading, aside from the fact that 25 percent of the readers have the same taste in poetry as the chair of the English Department, is that nothing brings people together better than a good hunk of cheese and some chips and salsa.

Yes, it was a heartwarming scene, professors and students mingling in the middle living room of the Lit House, stuffing their faces with chocolate chip cookies and other lite fare.

And the conversation was of the sort that makes the rest of the campus fear the intellectual rigor of the Lit House — you know, that bunch of freaks that sits around drinking wine and smoking opium and talking nonstop about philosophy and poetry.

"Did Roseanne get plastic surgery? I mean, she looks really bad now. Her face doesn't move as much either."

"Didn't you have a crush on rat-girl last year?"

"Is Post Raisin Bran some sort of Modernist propaganda?"

"The new Beastie Boys was nothing more than Pollywog Stew and Cookypuss. I laughed heartily."

True. There was conversation over whether Old English thanes really appreciated the bards who read Beowulf, but that conversation involved beer, so it wasn't too disparate from the rest of the campus.

Speaking of the rest of the campus, what other fora are there for freshmen to showcase their many talents? Seniors of course are recognized at Commencement for their four-or-so years of striving. And the shiny academic and athletic stars in all classes get various forms of recognition throughout their tenure as students. (Don't misinterpret this. Students can't really get tenure.)

But how can non-writer-type Freshmen get recognition for their piddly little lives? But then, on second thought, why should they get any recognition? They think they have things so tough. Ha!

I mean, back in my day, we didn't have Beavis and Butthead! There were no cable hook-ups in the dorms, and no phones in the rooms! We had to send

So, Beth McCoyfish had just had all of the typically carping WC students /staff/ faculty/ aquatic sea creatures join in a circle and hold fins, and a great feeling of mutual love had just been produced, and everyone was feeling all hunky dorey, and the feeling of mutual love and hunky doreyness worked some magic somehow, and there was a pop! And President Troutfish turned back into a human being and started to drown. "Blub!" he shouted, "AGH! Somebody help me! I'm drowning!"

"Hey, hey! Look at that!" said Luther Dudichfish. "President Trout has just turned back into a human being, and now he has started to drown!"

"Wow." said Tyler Staelinfish. "Maybe we should do something about it."

"Blub! Help me! Help me!" President Trout screamed and writhed.

"You know, President Trout's name reminds me of a song," Aimee Erhartfish said.

"It does?" said Tony Fortfish.

"Yeah," said Aimee Erhartfish. "That 80's one, by—what's it called...Tears for Fears? The one that goes:

"Trout...Trout...Let it all out

These are the things we can do without

Come on...I'm talking to you...Come on.

"It's a protest song, you know—they sing it at Board meetings, whenever there's something someone wants President Trout to use his influence do something about."

"That's funny, Aimee."

"Thank you," said Aimee.

"Blub! Blub! Help!" President Trout choked out again.

"Guuuuuuys....," said Chris Calhoonfish, "President Trout is drooowning. Aren't you going to do something about it?" He looked at Graham Mundafish.

"Me?" said Graham Mundafish. "Well...I don't know—I'm sure someone else will do something."

Chris Calhoonfish looked at William Hillyerfish.

"Me? Nah—Not me. I'm too apathetic."

"Yeah," said William A Hobbs IIIfish. "I mean, you've got to keep in mind that this is an apathetic campus."

"It is not an apathetic campus!" said Keith Morganfish. "There are a lot of us here who are not apathetic! I'm not apathetic!"

"Yeah, right."

"I'm not! Just listen to how much I do around here: I'm the President of Hands Out. I'm also the Secretary/Treasurer of the Historical Society. Plus, I'm also really really active in Terra Firma as well. In addition, I'm the one who puts out WAC Happenings. Plus I do a radio show at KHS, but that's not really connected WAC, so I guess I shouldn't have mentioned it...."

"So why don't YOU save President Trout?!" said Chris Calhoonfish to Keith Morganfish desperately.

"I can't...I'm too busy."

"I used to be as busy as that," said a dazed and frazzled looking Senior fish. "Now I have to go see the counselors at Health Services every Tuesday..."

"You guuuuys! Don't you realize what President Trout represents?!" said Chris Calhoonfish. "He's the figurehead of this College! He's a symbol for everything this College represents! And he's drowning! And none of you are going to try and save him?"

"Well, why don't YOU try and save him?" said Katina Duklewskfish.

"But...but...but there's nothing I can do! I'm only a Freshman!"

"At this school," Keith Morganfish said in a paternal fashion, "Class doesn't matter. This place is small enough that—even if you're a Freshman, you can be someone. You can be a leader at Washington College, even if you're only 17.... Anything you want to do, any movement, magazine, club, activity or whatever you want to start here, you can start—and if the faculty, administration, staff and S.G.A. believe in what you're doing, they'll help you out as much—monetarily and otherwise—as much as they can!"

"Yeah!" said Jason

singing telegrams to our professors if we wanted extensions on term papers! And we had to hand-write our papers, and mimeograph them! And we liked it! We liked it!

This really was a writing school back then. Even art students had to write 10-page papers justifying each and every painting they did with the $10-per-gallon chalk-mud fresco-paint they bought at the bookstore. We all wrote. In blood! We had to indulge in cultural terrorism for fun, and we liked it! We liked it!

So no, maybe no one who isn't a writer deserves recognition. Physics? Who cares?. Drama? Act this, baby. Psychology? Go play with your rats. Art deco? Stinks. No one knows what anyone does on this campus, because no one cares! And we like it that way! Ω

Building A Swimming Super Power

It's really ashame that some sports get more attention than others. Since the dawn of time, there have always been high profile sports and low profile sports. Chances are, if you don't play football, basketball, baseball, ice hockey--or at Washington College--lacrosse, you aren't going to get much attention for your respective athletic achievements.

I've always tried to recognize the "little people" in athletics--the people who play soccer, field hockey, volleyball, tennis, and all of the other low profile sports. I like to attend tennis matches, swim meets, track meets, and field hockey games and cheer for the home team. However, it wasn't until someone brought up the point on Monday that I truly stopped to think about how lopsided the high and low profile sports are on this campus.

I'm not going to sit here and tell you about unequal funding or unequal facilities or special benefits given to players of certain sports or anything, because I don't have the data to support that argument. I am going to tell you about 17 guys who have been working their butts off since September but have received little or no recognition.

That's right-- the men's swimming team.

You probably didn't even know we had a swim team from the looks of the average student turnout at a meet. And now that you've discovered this article is about the swim team, you'll probably skim over it to the next page. But wait! Give me a second, this is important.

First of all, the men's basketball team still draws a crowd with a mediocre record. That's all well and good.

Sports Commentary

I'm glad the student's support the basketball team. However, there's something special going on over in the Casey Swim Center, and I think you all should know about it.

This season, the men's swimming team holds an 8-2 record. That's an .800 winning percentage! Last year, they posted a 7-2 mark. Only men's lacrosse did better on this campus last year.

However, there's more to this swimming fairy tale than wins and losses. When junior captains Chris Freisheim and Dave Cola and the gang came to Chestertown in 1991, they finished a distant ninth in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships in the team's second varsity season to complete a 2-8 campaign.

With a strong recruiting class and a great deal of improvement, things looked better last season.

In the 1992-93 campaign, the team finished seventh at Championships, only 11 points out of fifth place. Its only losses of the season were a 109-95 setback to Swarthmore and a 111-89 loss to Elizabethtown. In the team's victories, the men outscored their opponents by an average of 47.1 points per meet.

Overall, the 1992-93 season showed a drastic improvement in only the team's third year at the intercollegiate level. The men narrowly lost to Swarthmore, but they picked up a huge win over Dickinson. Last year, they could taste fourth place at Championships, but a few unlucky breaks set them back to seventh.

Here's the scary part-- they're better this year.

The men's swimming team heads to Centennial Conference Championships at Bryn Mawr College this weekend with a very legitimate shot at taking third. The Shoremen's only two losses this season have come at the hands of conference power Franklin & Marshall 105-97, in the first meet of the year, in a contest that was so close it was won on the last event, and nationally ranked Gettysburg (148-59).

However, even though this year's record still shows two losses, the young team has shown even more improvement. Washington has blown out Swarthmore and Dickinson this season by 37 and 48 points respectively. The Shoremen also easily handled Elizabethtown (one of last year's losses) in a 137-70 rout.

In its victories this season, the men's team has won by an average margin of 53.6 points per meet.

Here's the even scarier part-- it's a young team that keeps building each year.

The Shoremen don't have any seniors on the roster, so the entire squad will return next year, which means they should be even better. Also, the men have taken in a quality recruiting class each of the last three years.

It started with this year's juniors two years ago.

WC Tries For Big Splash

Swimmers Go To Conference Championships

Erika K. Ford

Wrapping up a successful 8-2 season, Washington College sends its largest swim team ever to the first Centennial Championships at Bryn Mawr this weekend (February 18-20).

Fourteen men have qualified to swim for the Shoremen. Last year Washington finished seventh in the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships, but this year they may be ready to capture a spot in the top three.

This season the Shoremen have defeated four of the teams that finished ahead of them at championships, so opportunity is knocking.

"This team has great depth," head coach Kim Lessard said. "Everyone has a chance to place in one or more events. They have a chance at the second place (team) finish if they each swim the way they should."

"The relay teams have a chance to be in the top three in all five events, while last year only one relay placed in the top three. They're ready for the challenge and very excited."

This is only the third year that Washington is sending a team of men to the championships. MAC champion and captain Dave Cola will lead the group swimming the 200, 500, and 1650 freestyle events, looking to place in the top three in all.

"We're pretty confident about the team in general," Cola said. "Hopefully we'll get second place. We've progressed this season since the loss to Franklin&Marshall-- and we'll try to give them a run for their money."

A bronze medalist in 1993, Scott Steinmuller will again compete in the 100 and 200 butterfly and 200 IM which are events he placed in at last year's championships. Peter Ward, who has been having a great season, should place high in the 100 and 200 backstroke and the 200IM.

Jason Campbell, who also placed in three events last year, will swim the 50 free, and100 and 200 breaststroke, with quickly improving Julien Gaudion hoping to place right with him in the same events.

"The team's the most prepared we've ever been," Campbell said. "Nobody's ever a shoo-in, but Washington and F&M will give Gettysburg a run for the championship.

"The meets will be exciting with a lot of fast times, I think. For myself, I'm keying in on the 100 breast and 50 free. We have our best shot ever at being a top three team this weekend."

Captain Chris Freisheim, who placed in the 400 IM and 100 free last year, will also aim high in the 200 freestyle race. Tyler McCarthy hopes to add to his 100 back scoring last year with high finishes in the 200 back and 50 free. Tim Whittier (who placed his freshman year but was off last spring) should also place in those three events.

The men's swimming team is gearing up for Centennial Conference Championships this weekend at Bryn Mawr

Dave Czekaj, scorer in the 1650 free, hopes to add 500 and 1000 back victories. Dave Kraft, who has continued to improve all season also hopes for wins in the backstroke events.

"It's exciting knowing that everyone has a good chance of placing," Kraft said. "I think that really says something about the team's depth and dedication to this sport."

An outstanding freshman group will be very instrumental to the final points. New school record holder Tim Parent hopes to place in the top three in the 50 free, and in the top six in the 100 and 200 fly events. Dan Woodall hopes to be right behind Cola in the 500 and 1650 free meets, and to place high in the 400 IM.

Ryu Kawai hopes to figure high in the 100 and 200 fly and 400 IM, and Marcello Brutti will be competing in the 200 and 400IM and 200 breaststroke.

"Gettysburg is the clear favorite," Lessard said. "But the race for second should be quite exciting. We're ready for it."

Last week the Washington men finished their regular season with their first ever win against Swarthmore, 121-84. With the victory the Shoremen improved to 8-2 overall.

Cola broke his own school record in the 200 free while Ward set two school records with his 200 IM and 200 backstroke times. Parent added a fourth Washington record of 22.58 seconds in the 50 free.

Besides Freisheim (Jenkintown, PA) and Cola (Dover, DE), the Washington program recruited Jason Campbell (Cape May, NJ), David Czekaj (Huntington, NY), Scott Steinmuller (Washington, CT), Tim Whittier (So. Paris, ME) and Mike Bowman (Chester, MD).

Their first season was also Kim Lessard's first year as the men's head coach, and her first recruiting class the next year was just as spectacular.

Lessard brought Julien Gaudion (Chestertown, MD), Chris Craft (Silver Spring, MD), Scott Steinmuller (Lawrenceville, NJ), and Peter Woodall (Riverside, CT) to Washington College. Now sophomores, all four men have provided valuable contributions.

However Lessard wasn't finished. She continued to assemble a top conference power when she recruited freshmen Mike Brutti (Argentina), Michael Davis (Drexel Hill, PA), Ryu Kawai (Japan), Tim Parent (Dover, DE), Justin Thomas (Kingston, Jamaica), and Dan Woodall (Dover, DE).

Now entering its 18 the men's swimming team will head to the championship meet with a real chance to finish at the top three. And let's not forget second place isn't out of the question. Franklin & Marshall is favored to take second behind Gettysburg in the 10-team meet, but Washington nearly upset the Diplomats earlier this year, so why not do it again.

As far as Gettysburg goes, they're a big, mean, slim that any upset is a ways in the making, and Washington's best shot is probably at second. Any Washington-Gettysburg confrontation is a real David vs. Goliath matchup.

But who knows, David slew Goliath.

Sho'women To Swim This Week With Little To Lose

Erika K. Ford

Following a difficult regular season (2-8), the Shorewomen are going to this weekend's Centennial Championships with little to lose, but quite a bit to gain. Last year's team will be replaced by a larger and much stronger group in 1994.

Captain Jennifer Green (the only senior) will try to place once again in the 100 and 200 backstrokes. Green will also swim on all one of Washington's relay teams.

"We all have a chance to do well," Green said. "Everyone has a chance to place. Hopefully we'll break a few relay records."

Colleen Roberts (who placed in all three of her events last year as a freshman) will try again to score high in the 100 breastroke and 200 and 400IMs.

Jen Dow will again swim in the 100 and 200 butterfly races, which she placed in at the last championships. Dow also hopes to add the 200IM to the scoring.

Captain Amy Draper scored last time in the 200 fly and hopes to add a 100 fly victory for Washington.

Once again a group of strong freshman swimmers will be important. Jennifer Voss will compete in the 50 and 100 frees and will join Green in all five relay events. Voss joined Green, Roberts, and Dow to set a record in the 400 medley relay during the regular season.

Erin Miller, who has become Washington's second fastest all-time backstroker (behind Green), has a great chance to place in the 100 and 200 back and in the 400IM.

"It's going to be a tough meet, but everyone will work very hard," Miller said. "Personally, I'm nervous for my races, but I'm looking forward to the weekend."

Renee Bylkas will swim in the 100 and 200 fly also, hoping to contribute points. Eileen Kuriger will swim in the 500 and 1650 freestyle events.

"The women have been working really hard and are very supportive of each other," head coach Kim Lessard said. "The championships will give them an opportunity to swim their best times and set new Washington College swimming records. They should do really well."

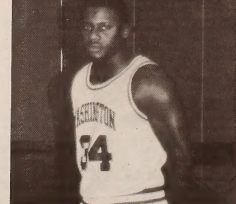
Last week in their final meet of the season the Shorewomen lost to Swarthmore, 129-70. Jen Voss won the 50 free, while the 400 medley team of Erin Miller, Colleen Roberts, Jen Dow, and Denise Hakanson took first place.

Dow added a season best time in the 100 fly. Kuriger did her fastest time in the 500 and 1000 freestyles, with Draper right behind her in the 500 free with a season best.

Men's Hoops Holds Haverford To 56 Points On Way To Win

CHESTERTOWN, MD--

The men's basketball team beat the Haverford College Red Wave last Saturday by a 70-56 score.



Five Shoremen scored in double figures on the way to the 14-point victory.

Ben Harris scored 15 points with Geoff Rupert adding 14, Derek Cuff scoring 13, and Jerry Davis and Charles Cummings each contributing 12.

Washington took a commanding 37-27 lead at halftime. The Shoremen defense held the Fords to a 39.4 field goal percentage in the first half including 12.5% (2-for-16) from 3-point land for the half.

Washington didn't do much better shooting the ball, but the Shoremen's 48.7% clip was significantly better than Haverford.

Overall, Haverford only shot 29.8% from the field for the game, and only two players reached double figures for the Red Wave with Chris Guiton scoring 14 and Seth Eilberg adding 10.

Charles Cummings scored 12 against Haverford.

Haverford attempted 33 3-pointers for the game but only made eight of them for a dismal 24.2%.

Women's Basketball Surprises Haverford Red Wave, 59-38

CHESTERTOWN, MD--

The Washington College women's basketball team also scored a win over Haverford last Saturday, 59-38.

Eboni Taylor exploded for 23 points, while the Old Mill connection--Lee Ann Lezzer and Allison Wentworth-- added 14 and 13 respectively.

Washington made 42.9% of its shots from the field as opposed to 23.6% for Haverford, and the Shorewomen hit four of their nine 3-point attempts.

Only one player reached double figures for the Fords, as Claudette Pirwitz made four of 13 field goals and five of seven free throws to score 13.

As usual, Washington committed more fouls, turned the ball over more often, and made less free throws than their opponents.

However, these factors did not have as much of an effect in this game because Haverford shot the ball so poorly, and Washington did its usual stellar job of rebounding by grabbing 42 boards.

For the entire game, Haverford could only manage to make 13 field goals--one every three minutes.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

This week's Newt's P.O.W. honor goes to a pair of very deserving athletes. Swimming co-captains Jennifer Green and Amy Draper have been working hard in the Casey Swim Center all year long and have gotten little recognition for their exploits.

Draper, a junior from Felton, Delaware and Lake Forest High School, heads to her third Conference Championships this weekend. She holds the school record in the 200 medley relay along with Green, Colleen Roberts and Denise Hakanson with a 1:59.52 time.

Green, a senior from Lutherville, Maryland and Towson High School, will swim in her fourth Conference Championships this weekend. Green holds school records in the 100 backstroke (1:05.65), 200 backstroke (2:19.77), the 200 freestyle relay (1:48.4) and the previously mentioned 200 medley relay.

Additionally, they have been leaders for the young women's swimming team.

Now to the honorable mention:

Derek Cuff put up 13 points for the men's basketball team against Haverford. The freshman has had some solid games for the Shoremen this season.

Lee Ann Lezzer scored 14 for the Shorewomen against Haverford. The freshman from Millersville, MD has made solid contributions.

Dave Cola, Pete Ward, and Tim Parent all broke school records last week in the win over Swarthmore. They hope to improve their marks this weekend.

In other news...Chris Hargett and Jay Derbis were surprise finalists in this week's caps tournament. Hargett noted: "It was like being the Indianapolis Colts and going to the Super Bowl. Everyone who was there hated us. I loved it!" However, the dream ended with a loss to Ken Lapp and Brian Tipton, who impressively overwhelmed the competition all night. Thanks for trying out Hargett and Derbis!

Dean McIntire Honored

Dean of Student Afrairs Maureen McIntire accepts a list of those who donated in her honor from Board of Visitors and Governors Chairman Louis Goldstein

Scott Koon

This past Friday afternoon Washington College re-dedicated its Student Center in Hodson Hall. The center was dedicated to honor Dean Maureen Kelley McIntire for her many years of service to Washington College and its students.

In his remarks to the many assembled students, faculty, staff, trustees and friends of the College, President Trout thanked Student Government Association Presidents Jamie Baker, Jen Del Nero '93, Sparky Kelly '92 and Stu Neiman for their perseverance in pushing for the renovations, calling them "snklebiters maximus" for their tenacity. The President also pledged to sing "Wake Up Little Suzy" at the next karioke night to show his appreciation of those who have made the opening of the new Student Center possible.

Chairman of the Board of Visitors and Governors Louis L. Goldstein '35 also sang the praises of the new Student Center, saying that it marked a remarkable improvement over the situation when he was a student and no such center existed. "I can see people are going to have love in their hearts and music in their souls," said Goldstein, adding that "This is a great opportunity for students to stay on campus and stay out of trouble."

Board member Thomas Maher also thanked those involved, particularly Christian Havemeyer and the students who "pushed for" the renovations. Maher also said "I'm happy that they changed the name to the Cove, because in my day it would have been the Cave."

Dean McIntire also spoke at the dedication, noting that this is the third iteration of the Coffeehouse and thanking the SGAs of twenty and thirty years ago who originally came up with the idea of a Student Center in Hodson Hall. In an interview with the Elm, McIntire said "I'm honored, I'm thrilled, I'm humbled, but more importantly I'm surprised" to have the Student Center dedicated to her.

In his presentation to the audience, SGA President Jamie Baker said "I can't tell you how well used and appreciated the Center is." Baker expressed the hope that "it's not merely a student center," but a center for the entire College. Baker then announced the dedication of the Cove in honor of McIntire.

The Center also bears the names of W. James Price and Katherine E. Schroeder. Board of Visitors and Governors Vice Chairman Clifford Schroeder said of the dedication to his mother "In a larger sense it's dedicated to all our mothers and the ladies in our lives."

The Office of the Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation was donated by the Crestar Foundation. Director of Student Activities and Campus Recreation Dennis Berry said of the entire facility that "It's going to allow students to have a hand in orchestrating their leisure life. It opens up another avenue on student activity. As long as we can keep ourselves flexible to student needs, it's just a matter of how creative students are going to be," in devising uses for the facility. Ω

Board of Visitors and Governors to Increase Dorm Funding

Scott Koon

Birthday Ball Weekend is normally a busy time in the affairs of the College. This weekend was no exception, with a Board of Visitors and Governors meeting on Saturday followed by a special faculty meeting on Monday.

Dale Adams, Chairman of the Board's Student Affairs Committee, said that deteriorating conditions in some dorms "cannot continue, cannot be allowed to continue." Adams identified Cecil, Dorchester, Talbot and Cardinal as "crisis" areas.

The Board took a positive step in ameliorating these difficulties by increasing the budget for physical plant by a full twenty percent. Additionally, the funds for repair and replacement have been increased from nothing to $150,000. The Board's contingency account—which is used to pay for unexpected expenses—is also due for to increase from $200,000 to $350,000. All of these steps reflect the Board's resolve to continually improve student life at Washington College, and should result in noticeably more attractive and better maintained dormitories next year.

The Board meeting on Saturday was an eventful one. The Board approved new Affirmative Action and Sexual Assault Policies for the College. Additionally, the Board installed Martin Williams as Vice President for Development.

The Board also once again tabled the Domestic Partners Policy which has been sought by the faculty of the College, this time with the understanding that it be considered by the ad hoc committee which is currently reviewing all employee benefits and compensation at the College. The rationale for doing so is that it would be imprudent to approve new benefits for employees at a time when existing benefits are being examined.

Mark Schulman, Chairman of the Board's Admissions and Financial Aid Committee, reported that the College's total number of applicants for admission are down about 20 percent over this time last year. Schulman noted

Cove to Open Tonight, Hopefully

Rachael Fink

The day has finally arrived - maybe. The staff of the new and improved Cove are anxiously awaiting the opening of the kitchen, only to be put on hold by the County Health Inspector, who is due to arrive around noon today. Assuming everything is approved The Cove will be open tonight. Rose Usilton, Associate Supervisor of The Cove, told The Elm Thursday afternoon that everything is ready to go as soon as the word is given. The entire staff is excited about getting back into the swing of things and Usilton says "it will be nice to get to know the students."

For our dining pleasure, a new menu has been created, including Italian, Oriental, Mexican and even vegan entrees and sandwiches. Bread and pastries will be baked daily and a new selection of drinks and juices shall be offered. Everything from hand-dipped ice cream and soft-serve frozen yogurt to cream cheese croissants and orange-cranberry muffins will satisfy the sweet tooth and at $3.99 subs on jumbo fresh baked rolls will be a "really good deal" for serious connoisseurs. Beer and wine will be served seven days a week from 4 until closing for those who like to relax with a brewski after classes.

Usilton thinks that "this student body will be very pleased," and wanted everyone to know that her "door is always open," and the staff will be taking suggestions for changes and improvements as the Washington College community learns it's way around the new facilities. Ω

Hard TimesMean Opportunity

Lately there's been a lot of concern about the financial status of Washington College, and with this concern has come the corollary concern that prospective students will be scared off by talk of financial problems at the College. This has left this newspaper in a difficult position. The Elm obviously is an organ of the College, and yet as a student newspaper we have the obligation to report the news to the entire college community. We've been faced with several options regarding the reporting of financial problems of the College. One is not to report them at all. I honestly considered this possibility recently. I love Washington College, and wouldn't want to do anything to harm the institution.

But not reporting the truth is possibly even more damaging than total honesty. An atmosphere without frank, open reporting often exacerbates the rumor mill. Another possibility would be to report the news with total honesty but in language which is intentionally obtuse in order to obfuscate the climacteric disposition of the College's pecuniary predicament. But that would be just as bad as the first option and besides, since this is a college newspaper we try to keep the language on a ninth grade reading level so as to remain accessible to the entire student body.

So that leaves us with the third option—which really has always been the only option—namely, that of being totally candid. It could just be that access to information is vital to people making informed decisions. It could just be that the College itself is strong enough as an institution that it can stand conducting its affairs in an open manner, free of censorship. This is a time for the entire college community to work to extricate ourselves from this mess. We certainly couldn't begin to do that if we all didn't know there was a mess to extricate ourselves from.

So for anyone out there who thinks the College is in dire jeopardy of bankruptcy, let me make it perfectly clear: Washington College is doing just fine, thank you. There is absolutely no cause for alarm. The College has survived for two-hundred and eleven years, including several decades in the nineteenth century when there was just one professor and a handful of students. Compared to that, this is nothing.

Sure, there will be some austerity, but when all is said and done the cuts which have to be made amount to only five point of the College's operating budget. The faculty, the Board and the President are committed to slashing the deficit while minimizing the impact on student life. Some of the cuts already made show how this is possible. It was announced at the last weekend's Board meeting that the annual 1782 Society Gala is to be canceled this year. Do the members of the 1782 Society deserve a party? Absolutely!, right now we can't afford it. The members of the 1782 Society love the College, and we need not buy their support by throwing them a swell party.

Does that mean we won't at some point reinstate the 1782 Society soiree? Of course not, and I'm sure that at some point in the no so distant future we are certain to resume giving pay raises to faculty members as well. Does that mean everything's hunky-dory? No, but the situation isn't abysmal, either. We should look on the current financial challenge not as an obstacle, but as an opportunity to examine ways to make Washington College an even better place to live, learn and mature.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

I was dismayed at the contents of the "DIRT" column in last week's Elm. What is usually an insightful and generally clever piece became a dismal article painting the Freshman Poetry Reading in hues of salsa, cheese, and feces.

Whether or not an exercise in sarcasm or irony, the article came across as being regrettably unprofessional, even going so far as to target a few individuals for personal editorial judgement.

I am by no means chastising Ms. Towers; she is of course entitled to her opinions. I only wish to provide another perspective on the Freshman Reading.

When one disposes of one's personal grievances, one might find that each participant in the reading did a fantastic job, pleasing both the students and the faculty present. Some of the material did cover topics such as aging and sexual love but this by no means should detract from the experience of young poets reading poetry they consider to be worthwhile. The spirit of a reading is to breathe life to the written word in coupling it to an individual voice; something in which both the poet and his or her audience may take pleasure.

Perhaps more distressing than her treatment of the Reading is Ms. Towers misrepresentation of the Literary House community. I am a freshman and a writer; I was attracted to Washington College principally for the Creative Writing Program. A major aspect of that program was the nurturing environment I thought I had found at the Lit House during my visit last Spring over Sophie Kerr Weekend (An

Open Forum: Legalize Marijuana

Allen Marshall

Warning: the following is an opinionated rant and the author procrastinated too much to make a coherent and somewhat intelligent statement. Hey, nobody said I was smart or could write well. What do you want from someone from New Jersey?

There are those in this lovely open-minded world in which we live who think that the legalization of marijuana is wrong. They usually object to the legalization for one of the following reasons: they don't want their kid "getting addicted" to it (Marijuana is not physically addicting), it's im/amoral and leads to a hedonistic lifestyle against the teachings of religion X, it destroys the mind (This has not been proven. While there is some evidence of memory loss, the "evidence" for brain damage was presented by a scientist whos methods have since been shown to be faulty by other researchers in the field), etc., etc., etc.. These people also oppose any reduction in the penalties the Federal Government has imposed on the possession of this plant, despite the fact that marijuana is sacred in many other cultures.

What these people choose to ignore are the benefits of marijuana. I'm not talking of any religious awakenings or of any other ethereal gold offered by marijuana, I'm speaking of the medical benefits. The relief THC and other canniboids can bring to those suffering from cataracts, AIDS related problems, illness due to chemotherapy, seasickness, etc., outweighs the harm to the body. This harm is both imagined and real, though the real damage may be from smoke inhalation since our lungs are as well designed to take in carbon monoxide as they were to take in water. The major carcinogenic elements in marijuana are ash and tar, but these are also present in the tobacco products which have always been legal.

As with most other psychoactives, our government in its infinite wisdom saw fit to refuse people access to this plant and its benefits. When medical uses (such as a treatment for glaucoma) were realized for THC, synthesized cannibis known as Halcyon or Marinol were created. Three major problems exist with synthetic THC d-9. One, THC in Halcyon is in doses considerably smaller than those naturally found. Two, Halcyon is a synthesis of THC delta-9. There are other cannabinoids in marijuana that add to the effect, especially for those suffering from AIDS related disorders (this includes the "wasting" syndrome and AZT recovery) and chemotherapy patients. Three, since most people who would benefit from marijuana can not hold down a glass of water, swallowing a pill is out of the question. Halcyon isn't the

Moral Creativity in Aristotle and Nietzsche

Brian Matheson
Aaron Pierce

Those who attended The William James Forum this past Tuesday on the subject of "Aristotle, Nietzsche, and the Meaning of Ethics" were treated to a stimulating juxtaposition of two of the most influential thinkers in the western philosophical tradition. The most refreshing aspect, for many in attendance, was the accessibility of the speaker. Faculty, students, and members of the community at large all participated in the discussion afterwards, bringing many thought provoking questions to the table. The lecture itself seemed almost to have a life of its own as Dr. Alban Urbanas animated the ancient text in the light of a more modern morality.

Dr. Urbanas, the holder of a B.A, M.A., and a Ph.D., in philosophy from the University of Paris, has published a book entitled The Notion of the Accidental in Aristotle, as well as several articles in the field of Aristotelian logic and metaphysics. Dr. Urbanas has taught at Georgetown, Loyola of Washington University, and Colby; and is currently an Associate Professor in the fields of Philosophy and French at Wesley. This is Dr. Urbanas' second visit to the college. He delivered a lecture on Deconstructionism here in the Spring of 1992.

The lecture offered something for everyone. For those who have studied little of Nietzsche's thought, but have felt the storm of his joyful pessimism on the horizon, Urbanas provided a fresh representation of an aesthetic morality. For those who have puzzled over certain seeming disparities in Aristotle's ethical theory, Dr. Urbanas presented several relatively obscure passages, revealing an element of creativity not usually present in most interpretations. For those who have an eye to the Apollonian unity of Platonic metaphysics, the presentation of a creative morality leveled a direct challenge to the notion of the one perfect form of life.

Beginning with examples of the Aristotelian aristocracy embodied in "the great souled man," Urbanas laid a classical foundation for the Nietzschian ubermensch. The apparently seamless mediation between these two doctrines uncovered the debt of both systems to the mythos of pre-classical Greece. Urbanas made use of mythological figures such as Peracles and Achilles. Therein one sees the soul acting not in accordance with a strict ethical framework, but rather creating its ethics on the fly. This creative element seemingly allows for a more natural evaluation of ethical decision making within a situational context. But this view leaves one questioning what ultimate context in which these decisions may be evaluated.

This seems to be the fulcrum on which the comparison of the two ethical theories rests. As our own Dr. Newell pointed out in the question and answer session afterwards, there seems to be no objectivity present in this kind of morality. All actions within this Aristo-Nietzschean framework are performed in much the same way as works of art are created. The great souled ubermensch acts for the nobility of his action — not from any mere moral imperative. Would this not lead to the breakdown of orderly society into a chaotic morass of only alternative. The US Government had formed the Compassionate Investigational New Drug program (IND). This program allows for nine approved people to receive medical marijuana from the federal government. (This number is actually quite arbitrary. These nine people were already receiving medical marijuana cigarettes when the program was halted. Several people were slated to receive marijuana but have never received a shipment. This will be covered later.) These are people for whom marijuana is a medicine. None of these people smoke it to simply get a buzz. There are no bored college students on this list awaiting a government subsidized high. (Although I do know a few people who would love to be on such a list, myself included.)

In 1992, the IND was sized down for strictly political reasons. Although the question of whether or not the government could maintain a supply sufficient to the demand did come up, the most important reason to shut down the program and limit the distribution of medical marijuana to the nine already receiving shipments was public opinion. Fear arose that the IND was only serving to make marijuana seem like a fairly good idea. If it's used for healthful reasons, then it can't be so bad. This certainly is true, but making people with serious medical problems suffer to maintain a government's means of social control is not justifiable. No one would stand for this sort of thing if the federal government suddenly declared Kosher food to be illegal.

Speaking of freedoms, marijuana has been used in religious ceremonies for thousands of years. In this free country however, only mainstream religion is allowed any perception altering tools in worship, and that is restricted to wine. In recent times there has been a reclaiming of the usage of psychoactive substances in relation to religion. After the discovery of LSD, a church built up around it. The spirituality of Native Americans has often included such plants as peyote, mescal beans, coca, Datura stramonium, and other sacred herbs. It's odd that a country claiming to be so free will not allow celebrants to commune with each other and their deity, is it not?

One could easily say that the arguments for the persecution of marijuana smokers stems (pardon the pun) as much from racism and propaganda as it does from a fear of the unknown. Early in this century, even before the film "Reefer Madness," some of the propaganda against marijuana stated that smoking pot caused one to shed inhibitions. Use of marijuana was cited as part of that elaborate (and pervasive) plot (by white racists) plot to mix the "pure" blood of whites with that of the "inferior" blacks. The propaganda disseminated against marijuana told stories of upright young white girls being corrupted by marijuana and then becoming the sex kittens of these Curtis Sharps and other dim-witted dark-skinned heathens. Young men exposed to the "dope" simply became violent and wantonly destroyed anything they chose to.

It is interesting to note that during the McCarthy era pot was said to be part of a plot to pacify the population and allow Communists to take over. After thirty or so years of saying how violent one becomes as a result of marijuana use, this abrupt change was, as is usual for the American public, blindly accepted. One could parallel feelings of those days about marijuana to feelings about cocaine today. As everyone knows, coke addicts are fiendish individuals who simply want to undermine the government and kill children and will use their drug crazed frenzies as an excuse. Cocaine is almost as persecuted as LSD-25, the difference being the disproportionate numbers of African Americans who are convicted for possession or distribution. Cocaine as a ghetto drug is less acceptable than cocaine as a white collar drug. With all of life's little tests that the rich must face, they deserve cocaine. Blacks have no excuse to use drugs or drink, hell, they have it good with all this affirmative action, they get all the jobs anyway. (Hey, you! Stop that snickering out there!)

I had started out writing this as a rant advocating the legalization of marijuana for medical purposes, but I decided not to follow that because there are too many reasons to legalize marijuana, I'd recommend contacting NORML for more info on legalization. I would have stuck to marijuana, but that is a fairly narrow since Cannabis sativa is not the only persecuted plant with medical or religious value. To make up for the incoherent nature of this Open Forum, I'm going to make a deal with you, the reader. I'm going to write Open Forums advocating the legalization of LSD and Cocaine. I promise I'll make those at least somewhat coherent and won't wait until the last minute to write either of them.

event when prospectives with an interest in the learning program are hosted by WC).

The sentiment conveyed in the article was popularly conceived Lit House camp. Ms. Towers should not be taken as an all-endowed ambassador for the Literary World at Washington College, especially while having editorial snickers at the expense of others. I know many people who do not like to venture onto the Lit House grounds after dark, or even during broad daylight for that matter, but I also have friends who enjoy the afternoon comfort of composing and working there. Indeed, the Literary House is a place for creation and warmth, not a set of neurotic fiends, multiplicitous bollocks, or militant beatniks; only when pretense or arrogance emerges under its auspices do the foundations creak and then only in protest.

Sincerely,
Paul Smail

Editor's Note—

Normally I'm the one who responds to the Elm*'s letters, but since last week's "Tart" has generated so much acrimony and the matter in dispute is one of opinion rather than fact I feel that the only appropriate response is to allow Tarn Towers to reply to her critics.*

Dear Mr. Smail:

You were absolutely right. My words and actions in their entirety were unprofessional: I didn't get paid a cent to right my piece. And, though it was meant entirely as sarcasm,

I never made any derogatory remarks about the quality of the reading, style, content or otherwise. It was a genuine A-plus freshman reading.

I also did not target any individuals for judgment or even ridicule.

And as for your interpretation of my interpretation of the campus' interpretation of the interpretations of the Literati: It was a joke, dude. It was meant to be silly.

Regards,
Dirt.

P.S. Thanks for telling me what a poetry reading is all about. I would have had no idea otherwise.

To the Mystic Krewe of Washington College,

Though I may never know who you are, I do know how you lifted the spirits of Washington College and that this high and hopeful spirit was impressed upon all those who attended the Mardi Gras Masquerade Ball. Thank you for a wildly fun evening and for a job well done.

Charles H. Trout
President

To the Editor,

I am writing in support of Senator Russ Feingold's advocacy of a single payer national health care system.

The issue of national health care may be for many of us the most important issue to come before Congress in our lifetimes. Whether a good plan or a bad plan is passed, we will most likely be stuck with it for the rest of our lives, like it or not. That is why it is critical that you inform your congressman, U.S. senator and President Clinton how you feel about this issue.

The President's plan would put the health insurance industry in charge of national health care. I believe, as many others do, that this is equivalent to putting the fox in charge of the hen house. The health insurance industry is part of the problem, not part of the solution. Why do the Clinton's want to put the health insurance industry in charge of national health care? The health insurance industry was one of the major financial contributors towards the President's election campaign. Is this a pay-off for that support?

As you may know, I'm semi-visually handicapped. Under the Clinton's national health care proposal, I will be no better off than I am now. I cannot obtain the eye care I require now and I will not be able to obtain it under the Clinton's plan. The reason that I have half of the problems I do have with my eyes is because I was unable to get eye care when I should have received it. This is because I did not have the money to pay for the care and since it is a pre-existing condition no insurance company will cover me now. Since the Clinton's plan does not provide for eye care for those over age 18 I will be no better off than I am now.

I did not ask for my eye problems so I see no reason why I should have to pay for the problem any more than any other average American. Eventually, without the proper eye care, I will go blind. The only way I can receive the care I require is under a single-payer health care program similar to the one in Canada.

The fact of my visual handicap is a permanent part of my background record. No employer will hire me for a full-time, year-round position unless we have a single payer system. Presently and without a single-payer plan, both the employer and myself would have to pay a prohibitive expense to provide coverage. Neither employers nor myself can afford that. Is that fair? How would you feel if you were discriminated against in this manner?

Thank you for taking the time to consider my future and yours.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

DIRT It was Weird

I felt like I was tripping, only I had been slipped something in my Mount Gay & Coke, and no one had told me there were any drugs involved, but suddenly I was hallucinating, and it was weird.

It was the Birthday Ball.

At the moment the clowns burst out of the walls, my senses seemed to leave me. Perhaps it wasn't the clowns. Perhaps it was the echoing of the soundsystem. Perhaps it was the feathers atop Louis L. Goldstein's head. Perhaps it was the proliferance of masks that looked like gold suns. Whatever it was, it was weird.

It was the Birthday Ball, and it had a 33-piece orchestra that played the Electric Slide. Twice. It had bartenders dripping sweat and electricians playing with giant pink floodlights (or do I have that backwards?). It had more velvet than Lou Reed and more inches of heel than Servistar has garden hose. It was weird.

It was the Birthday Ball, and though Chuck Trout did not in fact breakdance, and though one could indeed see the basketball hoops tucked away in their little nests of gold lamé, it certainly was unique. After all, there was a golden calf to worship.

But, through all the glitz and glamour, I can't help wondering what George Washington himself would have thought of this birthday celebration.

I mean, Brooke Frank himself would have rubbed elbows with El Presidente, had he been able to make it, and you know, I think his ghost may have made it, had he not been scared off by all the corsets and push-up bras.

I'm sure Ben Franklin would have loved it, and so would have the editor of this here newspaper, had there been any nude women. But George? It may have ruffled his wig, but I bet he wouldn't have looked as good as Louie did on top of Donald Trump's glowing throne.

Don't get me wrong, I had a fantastic time, and it was indeed a grand affair, but there was something missing (besides any guys in drag, which in my opinion are the staple of a good masquerade. Kudos go to Professor Garry Clarke for coming the closest in his regal robes.).

That something was that je ne sais quoi which is Washington College. The booze and the boozers were there in force. Old and young alike were there, decked out and schmoozing. But something was a little off. Sure, Ed Athey's daughter was "randomly" selected to be queen of the Ball. Fine, there was more cleavage per capita than the perfume on a two-bit whore.

But still, it just wasn't WAC-y enough. And I can't exactly say why. Maybe it was the utter lack of baseball caps (besides Joyce Hudson Cafritz's sequined number — backwards, no less). It was good. Maybe it was too good to be true. Maybe it felt like a farewell party of some kind — Commencement foreshadowing?

Maybe it was just the overall oddness. Really, Washington College doesn't seem so — queer — that often.

Of course, the weirdness factor could have had something to do with the fact that someone was asking me to whip them every time I went back to my table for a cigarette. But I would be wrong.

Someone asked me if my dominatrix bit was a statement of some kind. I jokingly said, "Well, someone has to whip this college back into shape."

Will the Birthday Ball end up giving this school that extra oomph that's needed to pull everyone together in these times of academic and financial unrest? There really was a large crowd there, cutting across all age and group divisions. But the divisions seemed to remain, crammed into seats at the numerous tables that cut into the dance floor.

Plus, they didn't play any waltzes. But besides that, it was shiny, it was glossy, it was loud and fun, you could smoke in the gym, but that "smells-like-teen-spirit-this-is-better-than-your-wildest-memories-of-prom" kind of feeling ended up being warped into a trip I'm sure will be filed, at least in my mind, under just plain weird, no looking back, weird. ☊

by Tanya Allen

It is 10:10 pm Wednesday night, and I (Tanya Angell Allen—the great author of this column) am finally getting around to Blubbing. I am also in the middle of doing laundry, and ruminating over the great insight living in a co-ed dorm has given me about the difference between men and women. The difference between men and women is that when women take other people's laundry out of the dryer, they fold. When men take other people's laundry out of the dryer, they leave it in a messy, slowly wrinkling pile on top of the dryer. That's it, folks: the basic difference between men and women. Women fold, men don't. Fascinating.

I really should start writing something about fish, now—but...oh, heck. Nobody reads this blub. Some of my closest friends just about never read it. I am paranoid that other people used to use it as liner for their cat-boxes, before maintenance started going around, kicking all pets off campus. Yeah, yeah. Whatever. Why go on?

Pity pity pity.

I know WHY I should go on: I am aware of what's happening in the story line of my column. President Trout has just been tied back into a human being, and is drowning. Chris Calhoon-Bish has just become a human being, and is drowning. Chris Calhoon-Bish has also become the students/staff/faculty/aquatic sea creatures together in an effort to save our President. If I don't continue Blub and save President Trout from drowning, he could quite possibly refuse to give me my diploma when commencement time comes around.

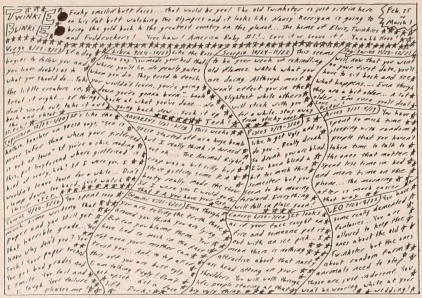
I started this particular story segment—about leadership—because I wanted to say "Whoo!" to the school for being such a great place for building student leaders. But now that I think about it, Chris, do you really want to be a leader here? This is known as being an apathetic campus—even if faculty, staff, and the S.G.A. supports it, it's still going to be hard to make an impact on the general student body—it's going to be damn hard to get anyone to listen to you...and if you're not careful and don't treat yourself right, trying to be a leader is going to be exhausting. I know this both from experience and from being friends with student leaders—after rooming with an Elm editor-in-chief and seeing both another Elm editor plus a Yearbook editor quit halfway through during this school years I've been here. I do think editors in chief should be given course credit for their work—it would help them keep from burning out. And what about course credit for S.G.A. presidents? They're under an enormous amount of stress as well....

"Oh, come on." Ty McCarthy-Bish says. "Isn't it enough that Elm editors and S.G.A. presidents get paid and plus get to live in on-campus apartments?"

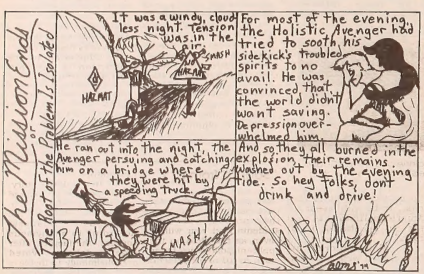
Well...yeah, but. I don't know. I've always also thought some sort of extra-curricular transcript would be good—there are other school activities—like them—some other schools even have extra-curricular activities written right on the regular transcript. This is good because it shows exactly why a student's grades might happen to go down the same semester they happen to be acting in a drama production, working on the paper, heading Terra Firma, pledging a fraternity and being a senator on the S.G.A. Or, if the student can manage to keep his or her grades up while they are doing all that, it can show even more extraordinary that student is turning out to be.

"But you said this was an apathetic campus!" said Robyn Crawshaw-High. "Why should the school do all that for student leaders, if there aren't even that many student leaders here?"

Because the more the school does for student leaders, the more student leaders it will make...why do you think they've started the B.U.I.L.D. program here? And that 15-hour leadership recognition ceremony they have at the end of the year? Why do you think they have that? They have it partly because it makes more students want to do things for the school—it makes them feel that the college values them, and values what they do for its community.



And like I said last week, his school should also publicize this pro-leadership thing much, much more—and it should publicize itself much much more as well! The more WAC publicizes itself as being a place for developing leadership potential, the more student leaders it's going to draw here! President Trout! What do YOU say about all this?



"Blub." President Trout says weakly. "Yeah, yeah—I know we should publicize more, etc. etc. etc. But damn it, I can't do everything here—I'm just a figurehead—I do what I can, and I do a lot. If this really is to become a great school, everyone is going to have to work together and stop their habit of blaming everything—icy sidewalks, problems with health services, cutting of departments, etc. etc.—solely on me! Why is everyone here always criticizing me? Why don't they ever stop griping about me? I do what I can, and I do a lot! I'm human! I'm drowning!"

Oh hell, that's right! I say groggily, my laundry now done and gently folded, my bed unmade but looking inviting. I'm sorry...I forgot....I'll get back to Blubbing for real next week, and I'll have Chris save you, and, yeah. Yeah. Yeah. I promise.

One of the few things most environmentally concerned groups and individuals can actually agree on is the utmost importance of recycling. However, recycling is only effective to the consumer when it is economically manageable. The financial aspects of recycling have become more important to our government as the demand for recycling has increased and continues to grow. At present, local governments are affronting the cost of curb-side and other recycling programs, which are indeed expensive. Senator Max Baucus (D-Mont.) is proposing that we make it the manufacturer's responsibility to recycle product waste. By taking the responsibility off the government and placing it on the private sector the financial burden is also transposed to those who create the material in the first place. The model for this proposal is the "Green Dot" program in Germany. The principle of the program is basically the same: the manufacturer deals with the waste. A system was developed by the manufacturers and distributors creating a non-profit company dealing with the materials. It derives its name from a green dot identifying the products that participate of the program. The "Green Dot" system does have some disadvantages to it. It is an expensive program and it recycles all packaging regardless of cost and quality. At the moment it seems to be the most reasonable plan we could adopt with certain modifications. It is the plan that would affect the consumer less drastically as far as prices go.

In the US several measures have been adapted or are in the process of being modified. In Maine a ban has been passed on all materials that are non-recyclable. Several states are considering the measure: Maryland, New dersey, Iowa and Nebraska among them. Another proposed option is the "recycled content" mandate that specifies the percentage of recycled materials that must be used in a certain product. Of course these measures have negative aspects to them as well, since they strongly discourage the use of multi-material packaging. If a content legislation is passed the cost of packaging would increase drastically, leading to higher prices for the consumer.

"Another issue to consider is that once a material is recycled, a buyer is required for the post consumer material. The prices offered for the post consumer material has been steadily dropping as the recycling programs become more widespread. The capacity of the government to recycle is under the demand and less people are buying post consumer material. All these are concerns that the government, the manufacturers well as environmental groups have to think about. We need to come up with reasonable alternatives. In the meantime, keep recycling!! Ω

Ambrose, McCullough Honored at Birthday Convocation

Scott Koon

On Saturday, February 19 the College commemorated George Washington's birthday at Spring Convocation in Tawes Theatre. The College marked the occasion of General Washington's two hundred and sixty-first birthday by conferring honorary Doctorates of Letters on presidential historians Stephen E. Ambrose and David McCullough.

Dr. Ambrose is a prize-winning author and Boyd Professor of History at the University of New Orleans. Ambrose spoke of the financial crises at liberal arts institutions nationwide, and encouraged benefactors to come forth and aid such institutions. He said that we should all follow the example set by General Washington, who, in response to a 1792 fund raising appeal sent by Thomas Jefferson, pledged "a sum equal to the most worthy sum given."

Ambrose went on to emphasize the important role of the liberal arts in teaching people how to think and be good citizens. He said history is particularly important in this regard because "The more you know about those who have gone before us the more you're going to get out of life." He also said that the addition of business programs has been a mistake on the part of liberal arts colleges. "I think it's criminal to take eighteen to twenty-two year olds and put them in business courses," Ambrose said.

David McCullough, Mike Malone and Steven Cades make way out of Tawes Theatre after Convocation

David McCullough is a Pulitzer Prize-winning author who frequently appears on public television. McCullough's address focused on the importance of giving the nation's youth an understanding of history. "We live in a country where the teaching of history is not required in the schools of five states. We are raising a generation of historical illiterates...they don't know who General Marshall was or what Antietam means."

(George Catlett Marshall (1880-1959) was an American general during World War Two who later served as Secretary of State. He was the man who devised the plan of American assistance which rebuilt war-ravaged Europe. Antietam Creek is the Maryland locale where, on September 17, 1862, Confederate General Robert E. Lee was beaten back to Virginia in a single day of extremely bloody fighting.)

McCullough said the study of American History is essential to our society; "We must not tolerate the erosion and disappearance of our story. To be indifferent to the past is to be indifferent to American History is not just to be stupid, it is rude."

Also honored at Convocation were nineteen Omicron Delta Kappa inductees. The new members of the national leadership honor society are James Baker, Ramsey Bigham, Mary Bird, Kelly Burns, Beverly Dias, Andrew Evans, Chris Freisheim, David George, William Gibson, Pamela Hendrickson, Caroline Jensen, Matt Murray, Jason Myers, Andrea Nolan, Renee Rhodes, Stacy Sherman, Christine Smith, H. Denise Walter and Megan Ward. Ω

The Memorandum

Kate Meagher

This weekend the Washington College Drama Department will present "The Memorandum," a play by Vaclav Havel. The production will take place in Phoebe's, in the basement of the Gibson Fine Arts Center tonight and tomorrow at 8:00 p.m. Described as political satire, the play centers on Josef Gross, the managing director of an organization created to do away with natural language. Gross is portrayed by Richard McKee, and Joshua Buchman plays Mr. Ballas, his deputy.

Gross decides that natural language is too easily misinterpreted, and creates a new language that is "basically gibberish," according to Marshall Norton. Norton plays the head of the Translation Department, "who see that things are translated correctly."

According to Steve Brown, the director of "The Memorandum," the artificial language in the play is the result of an effort to create "an entirely scientific language. This language, called Ptydepe, attempts to eliminate the ambiguity and emotional overtones of natural language."

The endeavor is not entirely successful. "Eventually Ptydepe begins to assume many of the natural aspects of language, thus defeating its purpose," said Brown, a senior majoring in drama.

For Alexandra Nader, a senior playing the part of Hana, secretary to Gross, the play has been an enjoyable experience. "It's been one of the better organized plays I've worked on." Under the direction of Brown and his stage manager Dahlia Kaminsky, the cast has worked well together. "I really felt as if the cast were a team, working towards a goal and supporting each other, for the most part," said Nader. In her opinion, the play is very complex: "It's got many layers of meaning and many possible interpretations. And we seem to have found the one which works best for us."

Admission to the production is free, but seating is limited, so it would be wise to arrive early. Ω that this does not necessarily indicate that the number of new students next year will be lower, as the yield on the applicant pool varies by as much as 10 or 12 percent: last year's yield was 23 percent, whereas the yield in 1992 was 32 percent. It was noted that it may be the case that new marketing materials will maximize the yield on the applicant pool. Additionally, it is hoped that more competitive financial aid offers to incoming students falling in the second quartile academically will entice more of these students to accept admission to Washington College, thereby increasing net tuition revenue without raising total financial aid expenditure.

In a related story, the faculty met in a closed session on Monday to consider the state of the College's finances. According to anonymous sources, the faculty, after much debate, voted overwhelmingly to increase the Faculty Finance Committee by two members. The rationale behind the move is that the Committee needs more members to adequately represent the faculty in making budgetary proposals. Dr. Premo and Dr. Tatum were selected by their peers to fill the two new committee slots. The Faculty Finance Committee is charged with working with the President to submit a budget to the Board of Visitors and Governors. Ω

The serenity of the pre-Birthday Ball atmosphere in Cain Gymnasium was deceptive, and in was in no way indicative of the utterly chaotic merriment which ensued only a short time after this photo was taken.

Chairman of the Board of Visitors and Governors Louis L. Goldstein '35 graciously served as the King of the Birthday Ball. King Louis' outfit as well as his name recalled the days of the Bourbon dynasty in France. He was resplendantly attired in a snow white robe worthy of the Sun King. The irony of appointing a monarch to mark the birthday of George Washington would not have been lost on the Father of our country.

German Instructor Jeff Vahlbusch provides last minute instructions to his cast.

The Zim Zemarel Orchestra provided the evening's music, playing from a somewhat jarringly eclectic repetoire.

The Mystic Krew of Washington College, described by Vahlbusch as a "highly mysterious group," raised eyebrows with their shenanegans. Who are these clowns, anyway? In the words of Nigel Teufnel "No one knows who they were, or... what they were doing." They were amusing, if slightly sinister.

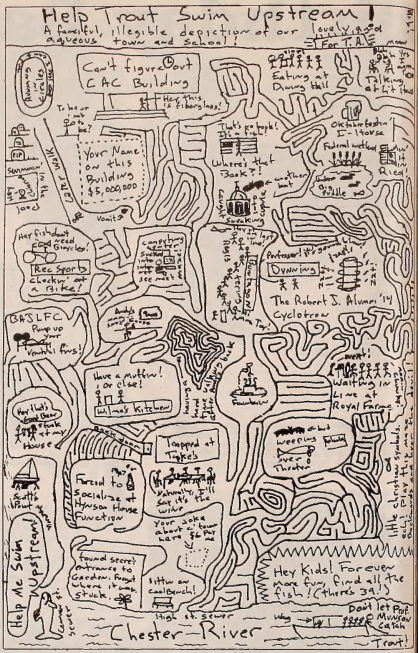
An Intimate Soiree: Just You and a Couple Hundred of your Closest Friends

Dr. Steven Cades and his masked companion really got into the spirit of the evening with their most excellent costumes. A surprising number of the faculty in attendance wore pirate outfits. What does this say about our faculty? Perhaps the spirit of academia is strangelyakin to that of the bucaneers of yore.

A king needs a queen, and a highlight of the evening's festivities was the selection of Lisa Athey as the Queen of the Birthday Ball. In this photo King Louis escorts theebullent Queen Lisa I to the throne. Long may she reign!



Sheik sheik sheik, sheik sheik sheik, sheik yer booty. An awful pun, I must admit. The Zim Zemerel Orchestra played that funky music all night long, and folks were really cutting the rug, even if there was no rug to cut. By the way, what was the deal with the Golden Calf? Birthday Ball-Birthday Baal? I'm glad no Baptist ministers made the connection, or I'm sure we all would have been in for a real dressing down.

The Mystic Krew swear eternal fealty to King Louis and makeobelsance to him as Jeff Vahlbusch says something which seemed really witty at the time.

Former Mayor of Philadelphia Speaks at Washington College

Scott Koon

In observance of Black History Month the Dale Adams Heritage Exchange presented a program called "A Night of Elevation" this past Wednesday. Following a stirring rendition of "God Cares" by the Mount Pleasant Singers and three other moving hymns by the still Fond Coleman's Charge Mass Choir was a motivational speech by Wilson Goode, former Mayor of Philadelphia.

Mr. Goode, and alumnus of Morgan State University who is currently employed by the United States Department of Education, said "I never thought the argument that my black skin and speech impediment would be an impediment to my success in America." He then went on to say that while "race is still a major factor in America," he is hopeful that "we can build the America Dr. King dreamed of."

Mr. Goode stressed the importance of educating young Americans in the history of Black Americans. "Black kids need heroes too," Goode said, "When they teach about George Washington they must also teach about Crispus Attucks. When they teach about Abraham Lincoln they must also teach about Frederick Douglass. When they teach about Gandhi they must also teach about King. Black History Month is not just for Black folks, it's for White folks, Asian folks, Hispanic folks, young and old alike."

During the question and answer period, Mr. Goode was asked to explain how the Clinton education package would improve education in America. Goode said "There are eight points the plan makes. One is that every child should start school ready to learn.... Two is that we have to reduce the dropout rate to ten percent.... Three is that we need to improve student performance in core subjects. Four is that we need to improve in math and science— we currently rank 21 out of 22 in terms of our performance in this area. Five is that adults must be literate.... Six is that we must have schools free of drugs and violence.... Seven is that we have to have school to work transition. Not everybody will go to college, so we have to have some type of training for the jobs available in the marketplace. If we match the jobs and the school we can put people to work. Eight is that we need to involve parents in the school. That means put the doctor's office in the school, put the unemployment office in the school, put the welfare office in the school, put the dentist's office in the school..."

While Goode argued persuasively for the President's education policy, he expressed some dissatisfaction with the President's crime bill. Goode said that he learned as a big city mayor that it costs just as much to educate children for a year as it does to imprison one inmate for a year. This fact causes him to "have real concern about the crime bill and the way it's focused. I don't believe that you're going to solve the problems facing America by paying for more police and more prisons."

individual self interests? One is left wondering whether or not standards even exist for the making of correct moral and ethical decisions.

The creative element of Dr. Urbanas' theory was mirrored by the creativity of the questions posed by the audience afterwards. One alumnus of Washington College expressed some doubts as to the ramifications of Urbanas' remarks regarding Nietzsche's Thus Spake Zarathustra. If one sees Zarathustra as the ravings of a man on the edge of sanity, and heed Urbanas' advice in "taking it with a grain of salt," then Nietzsche's sanity when he wrote many of the passages cited in the lecture is called into question. Keeping in mind his association with Deconstructionists in Paris, this is an interesting undermining of the text of his lecture.

The same question may also be (and assuredly has been) asked regarding the work of art. It would seem that if there is no strict definition of art, one may end up claiming things as art that perhaps deserve a label of lower esteem. When the artist is allowed to be his own judge of art rather than teaching a particular methodology associated with the production of "good" art, does one not encourage subjectivity in the creation of beautiful things? Laziness in the pursuit of a universal truth?

This subjectivity in relation to the arts (and indeed to ethics) has led to the interesting trend in the former away we get from the idea of a unified theory of art, the more important and divers critical theory becomes. Is not the same thing happening in morality in the form of a proliferation of critical analysis by the news media? One must ask one's self where this direction this new found "freedom" is heading; whether it is toward further possibilities for creativity, or toward a general degeneration in quality and meaning? The similarities between the "art question" and the Aristo-Nietchian "ethics question" should, by now, be obvious. If the same ambiguity that leads to problems within the arena of art can be applied to ethics, what hope is there in making the proper moral decisions? Ω

Bands Come to Chestertown Tonight Should be Fun if You're Over Twenty-one

And You Somehow Manage to be in Three Places at Once

Brian Matheson

For many students used to the musical diversity of "the big city," Chestertown may seem just plain boring. But as anyone who's been outside this semester knows, when it rains it pours. With Society's Child, Panic Beach, and The Empties playing on Friday, followed up by the musical brilliance of Naked Blue on Saturday, the frustration of coming up with something to do on a weekend has been replaced by the frustration of deciding among different things to do.

With the opening of The Cove (or rather the opening of the Maureen McIntire Student Center) we would expect some new musical horizons. The promise of the hard, driving rock of Society's Child certainly ought to fulfill this expectation. Pulling their eclectic tastes into the arena of hard core, this is definitely a band that should put to test the rule prohibiting multi-purpose room crashing. Ω

While this alone would be enough entertainment to devastate the soul of the average Washington College student, the bar scene has yet more to offer us. Panic Beach returns to the Village Tavern after their strong debut there earlier in the year. If you missed them before, don't make the same mistake again. Their musicianship is both skillful and passionate, and their set list reflects years of experience in playing out. No two ways about it, these guys know how to party.

But put that checkbook away, there's more! No matter how much it pains me to think that I might be undermining the following of our local talent, I would be doing you a disservice if I neglected to mention that one of the coolest bands on the Georgetown scene is playing at Andy's on Friday. The Empties rock. You ought to check these guys out if you're craving good original material. The sharp, technical brilliance of their lead guitar carves out a groove that you just won't see too often. Then again, maybe a good showing will draw them out of the "Faketown" and into Chestertown more often.

While the frustration of three great bands playing on one night has been ending away in the all week, this can't obscure the injustice of bands like Naked Blue not getting snatched up by major labels. Last I checked, these guys didn't even have an album out (and yes, I was about to pay Andy in blood for one the last time they played here). The sexy vocals and killer guitar licks this band lays down on its audience are truly a religious experience (in fact, they played Amazing Grace as an encore last December, and I swear I saw tongues of flame pulsating to the rhythm of the guitar's swells). I think Andy said it best when she said "be here."

There's a musical atmosphere in the air lately, and its that time of the year to get out and release your frustration with the winter weather and the stress of academics. The storm's been building ever since Frog Legs made the Lit House jump last weekend, and it looks like we're getting the brunt of it this weekend. You can't drink liquor in the dorms anymore, so you might as well come out and party. But if you miss out, don't say I didn't warn you. Ω

Men's Swimming Makes Big Splash At Bryn Mawr

Sho'men Finish Second In Championship Meet

Erika K. Ford

The final event at last weekend's Centennial Conference Swimming Championships determined the Washington men's team's outstanding second place finish. The Shoremen fought the hard fight and came out with a strong showing.

Edging out Franklin &Marshall by 4.5 points, Washington captured the last relay to place above many competitive opponents.

The women faced difficult competition, yet each swimmer was able to contribute to the team's total. Finishing eighth, each Shorewoman scored points for the first time ever.

On the men's side, the 400 free relay team of Dave Cola, Peter Ward, Chris Freisheim, and Jason Campbell placed second with a time of 3:16.81, beating F&M 's 3:19.47 third place. The relay team's stellar efforts smashed Washington's school record, and assured a highly desired second placing.

"I couldn't be more proud of these guys," head coach Kim Lessard said. "They swam tough all weekend and everyone did what they had to do. A coach couldn't ask for more than 100% effort. They had their fastest times of the season.

"It really felt like the fans were all behind us too," Lessard continued. "So many coaches and fans kept congratulating us all weekend—they were amazed at our showing. It was an exciting ending to an exciting season."

After finishing the regular season with an 8-2 record and defeating teams who had beaten them at last year's championships, the Shoremen were ready to be taken seriously. They amassed 515.5 points to F&M's 511 at the championships, while Gettysburg won the title with 842. Swarthmore placed a distant fourth with 443.5 points.

Eighteen new school records were set in the process.

Junior co-captain Dave Cola led the group with third in the 500 free; his 4:49 time set a Washington record. Cola placed second in the 200 free (with 1:46.63, another record), and second in the 1650 free, with another record time of 17:01.64. En route, he set a record for the 1000 free, with a 10:17 time.

Cola joined Campbell, Ward, and Tim Parent for second place in the 200 medley relay, losing to Gettysburg by a tenth of a second. He joined Campbell, Ward, and Scott Steinmuller for fourth in the 400 medley relay to set a record.

The 800 free relay team of Cola, Freshein, Dan Woodall, and Dave Kraft smashed a Washington record by 11 seconds.

"The greatest thing about finishing second," junior co-captain Chris Freisheim said, "was that it was a team goal that we'd set at the start of the season, and it took every single one of us to achieve it.

"The team works hard together and we support each other. Everyone's points were important."

Ward added three records with second in the 100 back (55.39), third in the 200 back (2:02.67), and ninth in the 200 IM (2:02.99).

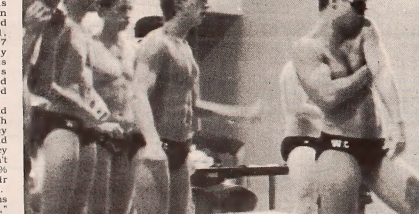
"Peter (Ward) had incredible relay splits—especially in the last event. He had a great meet," Lessard said.

Freshman Parent placed second and set a school record in the 100 fly, with 54.3 seconds, and placed eighth in both the 50 free and 200 fly.

"As the great pharaoh Benjamin T. Hinkle said, 'Washington College's swim team shall one day break the mold,'" Parent said.

Steinmuller set a new Washington record in the 200 fly in 2:03.61 minutes for fifth. He also came in eighth in the 200 IM (2:03.1) and sixth in the 100 fly (54.8).

"Our weekend was really great," junior Campbell said. "It was a total team effort. Last year's ending was very upsetting for us—having to wait 'til the last relay and then losing.



"I don't think it's really set in how great this is yet."

Campbell swam fifth in the 100 breast to set a school record of 1:01.88. He also placed seventh in the 50 free (22.7) and 12th in the 100 free.

Sophomore Julien Gaudion had incredible drops from last year's championships, where he didn't place in the top 20. Last weekend he set a record in the 200 breast with 2:17.26 for fifth, and placed seventh in the 100 breast (1:03.0).

Dan Woodall set another school record in the 400 IM with 4:32.20 for ninth. He also came in 11th in the 500 free (5:04.8) and seventh in his first ever swim of the 1650 free in 17:36.68 minutes.

Freisheim added tenth in the 100 free (50.58) and 11th in the 400 IM along with outstanding relay splits.

The Washington swimming teams trained in the warm Florida sun in December, but the men's team's true moment in the sun happened last weekend in chilly Bryn Mawr.

Junior Ty McCarthy picked up key points with fifth place in the 100 back (58.08), eighth in the 200 back, and 14th in the 50 free.

"Considering that the first year Washington sent guys to MAC championships was my freshman year, we've come a long way in just three years," McCarthy said. "These have been three really hard years. Our goal back then was to place among the top three at championships in our junior year, and we did it."

Marcello Brutti placed 12th in the 400 IM and 16th in the 200 IM with two season best times. Ryu Kawai placed 15th in the 400 IM and 14th in the 200 fly.

Dave Kraft swam a season best in the 100 back for ninth, as well as placing 14th in the 200 free, and 12th in the 200 back.

Junior Tim Whittier also placed seventh in the 100 back, and tenth in the 200 back.

Dave Czekaj placed in all three of his events. He came in 14th in the 100 back, 12th in the 200 back, and 12th in the 1650 free.

"Overall, the team did extremely well," Czekaj said.

The Shorewomen finished in eighth place, though for the first time ever all eight swimmers scored points.

Senior co-captain Jen Green led the group, setting a Washington record in the 100 back (1:04.85) for tenth place. She also placed 14th in the 200 back.

"The women's competitive field was really rough," Green said. "But a lot of us had good times."

Colleen Roberts swam her season best in the 200 IM (2:23.04) for 11th. Roberts also came in tenth in the 400 IM (5:10.20) and 15th in the 100 breast.

Jennifer Dow placed 14th in the 100 fly and 12th in the 200 fly for season best times.

"Everyone should be proud of their swimming this season," Dow said. "Everyone at championships placed in the top 16, which for a small school is good. We're a small and young team, but we're growing, and we'll be even more improved next year."

Junior co-captain Amy Draper and Renee Bylka scored behind Dow in the 200 fly for 15th and 16th places with season best times.

"I think the girls finished a very long season on a positive note," Draper said. "Every girl scored points for the team. Although our record (2-8) didn't really show it, we've all swam extremely well."

Freshman Jen Voss swam a season best in the 50 free (26.54 seconds) for 12th, and Erin Miller has a season best in the 400 IM for 14th. Miller cut 12 seconds off her time to bring it to 5:19.66.

Eileen Kuriger added 14th place in the 1650 free.

The 400 medley relay team of Green, Roberts,Dow, and Voss set a Washington record faster by two seconds.

"The women did a great job," Lessard said. "They really had tough competition—seven women from the Centennial League are qualified for nationals— but they held on and everyone scored a personal best time for team points."

The 1993-94 swimming season drew to an uplifting close for both of Washington College's teams at the Centennial Championships. The women have steadily improved their skills and grown in size and talent over recent months. The men have achieved an admirable and compelling goal from the past and can work for a still brighter future.

Women's Basketball Surpasses Expectations With 11-13 Mark

First-year Program Wins 11 Despite Starting Four Freshmen

Matt Murray

At the beginning of his first season of intercollegiate competition, the Washington College women's basketball team's main concern was winning a game. The Shorewomen hoped they would beat a Centennial Conference foe before season's end.

Hardly anyone believed Washington could be competitive, much less close in on a .500 record and compete for a spot in the conference playoffs. However, as Washington's first season comes to an end, Lanee Cole's young squad has played high above all of the early-season expectations.

Built on freshmen talent, Cole's team finishes the season with an 11-13 record, which includes victories over Centennial Conference opponents Gettysburg, Swarthmore, Bryn Mawr, Haverford, and Western Maryland.

"I'm proud of my gals--they had an outstanding season, and they have a reason to keep their heads high," head coach Lanee Cole said. "Finishing with 11 wins is a lot more than anybody expected."

The Shorewomen have started four freshmen starters throughout the season. Washington features seven freshmen on its roster with only two players, senior guard Pam Hendrickson (Kutztown, PA/Kutztown) and sophomore forward Erica Estep (Lothian, MD/Southern), returning from last year's club women's basketball team.

Co-captain Hendrickson averages 3.5 points and 3.2 assists per game for the Shorewomen, while Estep is usually the first forward off the bench for Washington and averages 2.7 points per game.

All four freshmen starters have put up impressive numbers. Co-captain Allison Wentworth (Millersville, MD/Old Mill) leads Washington in scoring with 16.9 points per game. The starting power forward, Wentworth also averages 11.4 rebounds per game.

Wentworth's season high for points came in her second game of the season when she scored 30 points against Gallaudet University. Combined with her 16 rebound game against Hunter College in the John Jay Bloodhound Tip-Off Classic at Hunter, the Gallaudet performance gave her place on the All-Tournament Team.

Wentworth's high school teammate, Lee Ann Lezzer (Millersville,MD/Old Mill), has also made solid contributions, leading the team in 3-point shooting and averaging 11.8 points per game. In back-to-back games in mid-February, Lezzer exploded for 24 points against Western Maryland and 26 versus Swarthmore. Her two free throws with 3.0 seconds left in the Western Maryland contest sealed the two-point win for Washington.

Liz Mangano averaged 2.1 points and 2.1 rebounds per game in a reserve role for Washington this season.

Additionally, Lezzer recorded the first triple-double in Washington history when she had 16 points, 10 rebounds, and 11 assists versus Bryn Mawr on February 3. Lezzer and Wentworth helped Old Mill High School win three consecutive 4A State Championships from 1991-93.

At the center position, Ebont Taylor (Germantown, MD/ The Bullis School) has consistently performed well all season. Averaging 15.2 points and 12.3 rebounds per game, Taylor had some fantastic games this year.

At Western Maryland on February 14, Taylor scored 29 to lead Washington to the 79-77 victory. In the Hunter College Tournament, Taylor was honored along with Wentworth on the All-Tournament Team after a 24 rebound performance against Gallaudet.

Taylor's strong post-up moves allowed Cole to feature the six-foot center in her power offense this season. The Germantown native also led Washington in field goal percentage and defensive rebounds this year.

Freshman guard Kelly Rodgers (Glen Burnie, MD/Glen Burnie) has also proved to be a valuable asset. Second on the team in 3-point shooting, assists and minutes played, Rodgers has also averaged 8.1 points per game.

Against Swarthmore College on February 16, Rodgers scored 20 points in the 70-59 victory. She scored 18 in a loss to Lebanon Valley on January 7.

Along with Hendrickson, Rodgers handles the ball on the floor and runs the offense for the young Shorewomen.

Freshmen Cherie Gallini (Piscataway, NJ/Rutgers Prep), Liz Mangano (Pitman, NJ/Pitman), and Melissa Kordula (Baltimore, MD/Baltimore Luthern) have all added contributions off the bench.

Gallini, a 5-foot-4 guard, averages 21.0 minutes per game for Cole. She averages 3.2 points per game, which includes a 13 points season high against Eastern College.

Mangano, a 5-7 guard, averaged 15.3 minutes per game in 16 games this year. She averages 2.1 points and 2.1 rebounds per game, which includes a 15 point performance against Trinity College this season.

Kordula, a 5-5 guard, scored nine points and pulled down six rebounds in the win over Trinity earlier this year.

All nine players made solid contributions to the first year of intercollegiate women's basketball at Washington College in 1993-94—an extremely successful season considering the inexperience of the team.

On Monday, the women's basketball team concluded its season with a 69-57 win over visiting Bryn Mawr College.

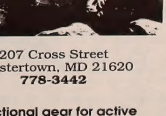
Ebont Taylor led all scorers with 29 points, while Allison Wentworth added 22.

The victory gave Washington its 11th win of its inaugural season.

The Shorewomen won five of their six contests.

Ursinus broke a four-game winning streak with a 70-59 win on Sunday, but Washington finished on a winning note against Bryn Mawr.

The final scoring statistics for the 1993-94 Shorewomen are:



Allison Wentworth	16.9
Ebont Taylor	16.7
Lee Ann Lezzer	11.0
Kelly Rodgers	7.9
Cherie Gallini	3.3
Pam Hendrickson	3.3
Erica Estep	2.3
Liz Mangano	2.1
Melissa Kordula	0.8

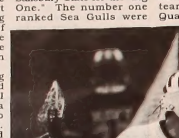
Washington Men's Lacrosse Team Hopes To Continue 'Giant Killer' Tradition In 1994

Samantha Emmet



Through the years Washington College has been a giant killer in the game of lacrosse. Virginia knew the feeling in the 1950s and 1960s, Johns Hopkins in the 1970s and Navy and Hobart in the 1980s. Many of stunning upsets and winning the games that they weren't supposed to win has long been the trademark of Washington College. The 1993 Washington College lacrosse team kept with tradition.

The Shoremen's opening performance at Homewood Field against Division I Johns Hopkins gave fans a preview of what was to come later in the season. Washington College jumped on the Blue Jays 4-1 and led 5-3 at the quarter. Hopkins fought back in the second quarter and the Shoremen trailed by just one, 9-8, at the half. However, the second half the Blue Jays showed why the are an annual Division I Final Four team. Hopkins raced to a 24-14 victory.

A 29-8 win over Greensboro College and a 17-9 win over Bowdoin College prepared the Shoremen for a contest with a highly regarded Cortland State team from upstate New York. A large home crowd was on hand to witness Washington College score eight straight goals in the second quarter to beat Cortland 18-9.

The following weekend Washington College pulled off a rarity in college lacrosse: playing two games in one day. The Shoremen dismissed Drew, 17-12, and FDU Madison, 29-0, to move their record to 5-1. A 25-4 win over Swarthmore, a tough win over Franklin & Marshall, 11-9, and a 28-6 blowout over Widener led to a showdown with a highly ranked Washington & Lee team in Chestertown. Before a sellout home crowd the Shoremen came from behind to post a big 12-10 win to improve their overall record to 9-1.

The following week the Shoremen travelled to Salisbury State for the "Big One." The number one ranked Sea Gulls were undefeated and had thoroughly demolished a number of top ranked Division III teams. A huge Shoremen following packed the Salisbury Stadium for the game between the two Eastern Shore rivals. The afternoon proved to be a long one for Washington College. The talented Sea Gulls erupted for a 13-2 halftime lead and coasted to a 17-5 win.

The Shoremen were not able to shake the devastating defeat at Salisbury. The final three games of the season were lackluster performances at best. A 19-4 win over Haverford, a 15-13 win over St. Mary's, and a 9-7 loss to Gettysburg left many wondering if Washington College would get its usual bid to the NCAA tournament.

But get their bid they did--as well as their wish for a rematch with the Number One ranked and undefeated Salisbury State lacrosse team. The 1993 NCAA Quaterfinal game will be one that is long remembered in Washington College lacross lore.

Another Salisbury romp was predicted and expected by just about everyone. However, those familiar with Washington College's rich lacrosse tradition and pride knew otherwise. For the Shoremen team, this was the game that would define the 1993 season. Playing with a ferocious intensity and great heart, the Shoremen refused to be beaten. Washington College raced to a 3-1 lead before a stunned Salisbury crowd. The Sea Gulls came back to forge ahead 6-5, but a last second goal by senior Greg Mouracade left the teams deadlocked at half 6-6. A hard fought third quarter ended with the Shoremen ahead 8-7, the first time Salisbury State had trailed in the second half all year. Playing with power and heart Washington Colleg carried the fourth quarter and knocked the top ranked Sea Gulls out of the NCAA playoffs with a 12-11 upset. For Salisbury, it was perhaps the school's most shocking defeat in the history of the lacrosse program. For Washington College, it was the type of victory that has long been associated with the lacrosse program at the small Eastern Shore school.

The 1993 season ended a week later in the NCAA semi-finals at Ohio Wesleyan (9-14). However, more honors were to come. Senior attackman Harris Murphy, selected to play in the North-South game went on to score two goals in the South's victory. Midfielder Greg Lauder won First Team All-American honors and junior attackman Jason Paige was named to the third team. Senior defenseman Scott Overend and junior midfielder Chris Cole were also picked as Honorable Mention All-Americans.

The 1994 Washington College lacrosse season promises to be an exciting one. A veteran NCAA playoff squad returns with two All-Americans. Senior All-American Paige (48 g, 20 a) returns joining the Shoremen with a strong inside game. He will be joined by midfielder Bart Jaeger (21,5) and freshman Greg Tomasso, a high school All-American out of Georgetown Prep in Washington D.C. Jaeger and Tomasso will make th Shoremen attack th quickest it has been i some time. Sophomore Bo Albright and freshman Dan MacPeak (Bullis, Md and John Bonvent (Salelsianum, DE) wi round out the offensiv unit.

In the midfield senior Al American Chris Cole (24,15) will be one of the senior midfielders on thi year's squad. He will b joined by Chris Sanchez (33,8), Jamie Carver (10,1 Brian Flynn (3,1), an faceoff specialist Brian Muneses (2,0). Junior Matt Zarinko (7,4) an Christian Boone (1,0) add great deal of speed to th group. While sophomore Tom Hebeler (4,2), Mik McDermott (2,1), Andy Neville (2,0), and Georg Atterbury (1,0) will provide us with a depth that we have never had in the midfields. Freshmen Chri Smith (John Carroll, MD) Marc Taylorson (Dulaney MD), Trevor McNemar (DeMatha, MD), and Andy Van Ogtrop (Salelsianum, DE) will also compete for time.

On defense senior Pat Crann along with juniors Greg Miller, Jesse Cook and Jerry Davis return with a great deal of experience. Sophomores Steve Bright, Todd Well Matt Distler, Kevin Harris and Greg Byrnes are also ready to make a bid for playing time.

In the goal, sophomore John Lundberg returns after a sensational freshman season. He will be supported by sophomore Alex MacGregor, and freshman Kevin Wakle (Norwalk, CT).

Norman To Leave After Giving Swimming Program A Big Boost

Matt Murray

After two years as an assistant coach for the men's and women's swimming teams, coaching at last weekend's Conference Championships was probably Eric Norman's final contribution to the Washington program.

A graduate student in psychology, Norman was formerly a top swimmer at the University of Delaware as an undergraduate.

Norman has especially helped the swimmers with stroke mechanics.

"Eric has been a great asset to the program," head coach Kim Lessard said. "We will greatly miss his enthusiasm."

Eric Norman, a graduate student in Psychology an alumni of Delaware, has been an enormous asset to the Washington swimming programs.

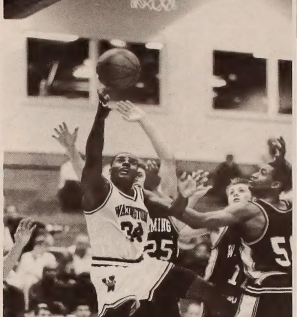
Franklin & Marshall Foils Washington In 82-65 Loss

Shoremen Set Playoff Rematch With Nationally Ranked Diplomats After Closing Season At 13-11

After three consecutive Centennial Conference wins over Haverford (70-56), Swarthmore (96-74), and Ursinus (83-55), the Washington College men's basketball team fell to the Franklin & Marshall Diplomats last Saturday.

Washington (13-11) led Franklin & Marshall (23-1) 33-31 at halftime, but the host Diplomats stormed back to take a 17-point victory.



Five players reached double figures for Franklin & Marshall while Ben Harris led Washington with 17 points.

The loss dropped the Shoremen to 7-6 in the conference and set a date for the Centennial playoffs which began on Wednesday (results were not available at press time).

On Wednesday, Washington travelled to Franklin & Marshall again for a rematch in the first year of the Centennial Conference playoffs.

Against Ursinus last Thursday, every player on the roster saw at least five minutes of action, as Washington romped over the Bears.

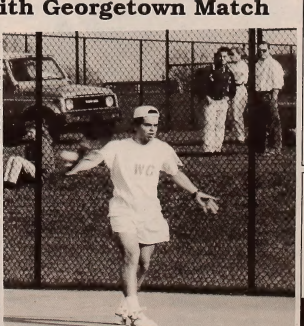
The Shoremen held Ursinus leading scorer Bernie Rogers to four points and five assists, while Geoff Ruperts 22 points and Derek Cuff's 21 sparked the Shoremen.

Charles Cummings scored 11 points against F & M after putting 13 on the board versus Ursinus.

The home team shot 59 percent from the field, as eight players reached the scoring column. Charles Cummings added 13 points while Adam Poe and Harris chipped in nine and eight respectively.

Men's Tennis Season Opens On Tuesday With Georgetown Match

Matt Murray



The men's tennis team will open its season this Tuesday with a home match against Georgetown University.

Followed by matches with George Mason (March 5), Clemson University (March 13), Furman (March 14), Newberry (March 14), and Emory (March 16), the front half of Washington's schedule will be tough and highly competitive.

However, this year's Shoremen squad should be very strong. According to the ITCA Division III poll in November, the Shoremen are ranked eighth nationally.

Additionally, the ITCA poll ranks Washington's Stephan Berger as the 17th best singles player in the nation, and Miroslav Beran and Carlos Nuno as the 12th ranked doubles team in the NCAA.

Washington's schedule also includes out-of-conference matches with Penn State, SUNY-Binghamton, and Washington & Lee.

Emilio Bogado returns this season to try and help win the NCAA Tournament.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

Well, we are happy this week to announce that swimmer Chris Freisheim has finally won the Newt's P.O.W. honor. After three years on the varsity and two as a captain, you would figure the editors have some respect, but I guess not. Oh well, better late than never. So here you go Chris, this Pepsi's for you!

Anyway, I suppose you're wondering why such a geeky, preppy, business majoring nobody twait a minute, have I used that line before?) could win such a coveted honor. Well it comes down to this--gotta be the hair cut.

Actually, it comes down to his awe inspiring performance at Centennial Conference Championships at Bryn Mawr College.

Freisheim helped clinch second place after he swam on the second place 400 freestyle relay in the last event of the meet. He also participated on the record-shattering 800 freestyle relay team, and he placed 10th in the 100 freestlye and 11th in the 400 individual medley.

When asked about this great honor, the quiet mannered Freisheim didn't say much--actually, he didn't say anything...oh yeah, I forgot to ask him about it. Oh well, I bet if I had asked him he wouldn't have said much (unless he started rambling about the Phillies--watch out Orioles fans...this guy is a Phillies lover).

Anyway to those of you who know Chris, I'm sure there's a play by William Shakespeare tha comes to mind when thinking about the fact that Chris is Newt's P.O.W. this week. That's right...this week's honor must be "much ado about nothing" if Chris is the recipient. But don't harsh on him too bad. It wasn't his fault he was born and raised in Philadelphia.

At any rate, that's it for this week, and we're looking forward to giving out lots of Newt's honors for the upcoming spring sports season.

As the women's basketball team successfully concludes its inaugural campaign with an 11-13 record, a big reason for Washington's strong play has been 6-foot center Eboni Taylor. A freshman from Germantown, she averaged 16.7 points and 12.6 rebounds per game this year.

Zartman Resigns from Student Government:

Political Differences Cited as Problem Between Senator and President

Rachael Fink

On Tuesday March 1, Eve Zartman resigned her position as Dorm Senator for Reid Hall. Zartman, who has been active in the SGA since her sophomore year, has spent two years being very active in campus politics. She was the Vice-President of the Sophomore class, and is currently Treasurer of the Senior Class, in addition to serving on several committees. In an interview with The Elm, Zartman stated that her resignation was due to "a number of issues, foremost being the final result of the student reaction to the LRP." James Baker, President of the SGA, made an executive decision concerning the document that Zartman and several other SGA members were working on for submission to the Board of Visitors and Governors. Baker felt that the "political tone" of the document was unnecessary and he did not feel "confident in taking it in front of the Board." Zartman was not informed of Baker's decision until after the submission of his report to the Board, which she feels is inexcusable due to the amount of time and energy that was put into the original draft.

While Baker and Zartman have patched things up personally, they did not come to an understanding concerning her position on the SGA. She has recommended Susan Czechowski, a Dorm Senator for Reid last year, to fill her position. Baker says that a new Senator for Reid will be appointed "hopefully by next Tuesday's meeting."

Zartman contends that the SGA should be a "political catalyst," and that this year's SGA has not been effective in "representing the students." She stated that many of the Senators that she had spoken to "feel that there is no purpose to the SGA," and she hinted that other Senators were considering resigning. "The SGA has been completely ineffective this year," says Zartman, "We're dealing with nothing but social issues." Baker feels that the SGA should address specific issues "without the biases of political views." Ω

Free Income Tax Assistance

Scott Koon

It's March, and the deadline for submission of federal income tax returns is rapidly approaching. If you dread doing your own taxes and you're unlucky enough not to have parents who are willing to do your tax returns for you, you may want to consider Free Income Tax Return Assistance.

Free Income Tax Return Assistance is a community project run by local volunteers in cooperation with the Kent County Commissioners. Volunteers receive rigorous training in order to make certain that all client's returns are filled out accurately. The program provides free help with income tax returns for any single individual earning less than $16,000 a year or any family earning less than $26,000 a year. The program is conducted at the Board of Education building on Washington Avenue three days a week. Hours of operation are Tuesday from noon to four p.m., Wednesday from five p.m. to nine p.m., and Saturday from nine a.m. to one p.m.. Remember to bring your latest W-2 form, any forms showing interest or dividend income and your tax form from last year, if available and applicable.

Employees of the College have already received information about the program along with their W-2 forms. A total of twenty-eight companies around the County have also notified their employees of this opportunity.

Administrators of the College are among the volunteers, so if you come your return may be handled by such capable worthies as Lauren Bedell, Joe Holt and Jean Narcum. Many other community institutions are lending support in the form of volunteers, including the Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Church, the Kent County League of Women Voters, the staff and residents of Heron Point, Chestertown Bank, Loyola Federal, People's Bank, and various Kent County administrators. The program is conducted on a walk-in basis. Ω

Employee Morale "At All-time Low"

Scott Koon

During recent weeks it has become evident that the employees of Washington College are unhappy with the current state of affairs at the College. They have gone for two years without a pay increase, and the last increase was a raise of three percent, which was one percent lower than the inflation rate. Early on in his tour of duty at Washington, College President Trout went on record in favor of pay raises for faculty members, now the deficits the College has been running for the past few years has forced his administration to freeze salaries for next year, and pay cuts for faculty may be in the offing.

All of this caused one staff member to volunteer that "Employee morale is at an all time low." In this environment, it is not surprising that recent efforts by the Development Office to solicit faculty and staff for donations to the College have not been entirely well received. The program has so far been limited to an appeal written by Adjunct Professor of Chemistry John Conkling '65. In the appeal Conkling writes "As a former full-time faculty member, I am well aware that each of you 'give' every day in a number of ways to Washington College, but I hope you can appreciate that a generous gift this year is special for several reasons. The obvious reason is to help us reduce this year's deficit in the least painful way, with those in a position to make a gift doing so."

The issue on the minds of many at this time is whether many employees are "in a position to make a gift," given the salary freezes and the possibility of a pay cut. Several employees were interviewed for this article, and the letter was sharply criticized for being "insensitive" to the financial sacrifices employees have already made for the College. While the employees interviewed all expressed a desire to air their grievances, none were willing have their names appear in this article for fear of repercussions; in the words of one staff member "we have no voice."

In the letter Conkling points out the success of the Board, alumni and 1782 Society giving programs. One faculty member said "If they really wanted to show us what the spirit (of giving) is, let the upper echelon of the College administration give ten percent of their salary — maybe then that same spirit will hit us." He went on to say in regard to the salary freezes "Why should faculty and staff take the hit when we aren't the ones responsible for the current financial status of the College?"

One staff member said she threw away the solicitation after she read it, saying "Do they know what it's like for us, not only going to work every day, but doing so and not knowing if there's going to be a job there tomorrow? We have mouths to feed, mortgages to pay and children to clothe."

Vice President for Development Marty Williams defended the effort of his department, saying "A solicitation is an opportunity to give. It's not a threat. If someone doesn't want to give to Washington College, they don't have to." Williams said that many employees at the College are financially able to contribute, adding "We routinely solicit young alumni whose incomes are lower that the average Washington College employee. ... Most alumni do choose to give. It is a privilege to be asked to give to this worthy charity." Ω

Clipper Should Be Clipped

Those of you who use the internet on a regular basis are doubtlessly familiar with the current data encryption controversy. The issue is whether the government will allow the free market free reign in developing data encryption technology for use in transmitting data through modems. The issue is a complex one, and this has unfortunately resulted in a lack of understanding of the issue on the part of the non-plugged-in majority of the population. Do citizens have the right of access to undecipherable encryption technology? The Clinton administration doesn't think so.

At stake in this issue is the most controversial of the "unenumerated rights," namely the right to privacy. Currently the U.S. maintains export restrictions on data encryption technology. This ban effectively prohibits U.S. companies from developing such products. Since the U.S. government is also likely to endorse one product, known variously as Clipper or Skipjack, as the national "voluntary" standard, this also makes it less likely that companies will invest the time and money to develop products which may be wiped out by what amounts to government competition in the private sector of the economy.

Article nine of the Bill of Rights states that "The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people." Article ten reads "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people." These phrases were chosen by our founding fathers, and essentially state that when there is doubt on a Constitutional issue where there is an apparent conflict between the "rights" of the government and the rights of the people, the question must be decided in the favor of the rights of the people, for to do otherwise is to invite tyranny.

Our founding fathers knew that technological changes would have drastic impact on the condition of Americans, which is why they clearly set the guidelines for deciding issues of personal liberty in those circumstances which they could not foresee. The powers of the central government are limited to those enumerated in the Constitution: the rights of the people are not.

I read over the Constitution in preparing this editorial. Nowhere did I find the phrase "The Government of the United States shall retain the right to develop a strong encryption algorithm and retain the right to certify it as the data encryption standard for the nation, provided that keys to the standard encryption are held in escrow for use by intelligence and law-enforcement agencies." Yet this is currently the policy of the Clinton administration.

Adopting Clipper would set a dangerous precedent for privacy rights in general and data privacy rights in particular. The internet is the last domain of unrestricted freedom left in the world. The freedom of individuals to control their own production and consumption of information is a very new freedom: adopting Clipper would jeopardize this freedom for all future generations. Unless we act now, the already monolithic central government will restrict our liberties even further. Law enforcement already has the right to get a warrant for anyone's home and barge in to search for drugs. They come in and tear the place up. Innocence or guilt does not matter. If the person is innocent they can expect no compensation for any property vandalized by the government in the name of the war on drugs.

American political culture extolls the rights and obligations of the individual. The political gulf between American liberals and American conservatives is only an apparent one, more closely analogous to a drainage ditch than a canyon. Basic issues of individual rights are more often agreed upon than disagreed upon. They are untouchable.

But when issues of "national security" are invoked. At that point, all bets are off. We have seen time and time again how easy it is for the government to trample on individual rights in the name of law and order or national security. The FBI's abuses in the CISPES incidents are well documented. Some may feel that Clinton is unlikely to abuse the powers of the government, yet what happens if some future President decides to draw up an "enemies list," as Tricky Dick Nixon did? What if some future ambitious G-Man decides to compile dossiers on average Americans, as Gay Edgar Hoover did?

The proponents of Clipper resort to the same tired paternalistic arguments to speak on its behalf. Dorothy Denning, one of the many computer whizes working on Clipper on behalf of government interests, wrote in a recent posting that "The Clipper initiative is the result of considerable deliberation by many intelligent people who appreciate and understand the concerns that have been expressed and who worked hard to accommodate the conflicting interests. The decisions that have been made were not made lightly." Big Brother knows best. What are the conflicting interests Denning refers to? I submit to you that they are the conflicting interests of a government seeking to impose its will, and those of the American people who have given up far too many of their freedoms already.

To Yield or Not to Yield

Lazarus Long once said that one should "yield before temptation, for it may not pass your way again." Of course, I have absolutely no idea who this Long guy is. (Lazarus Long is a fictional modern-day Methusalah featured in many of Robert Heinlein's science fiction books -Ed.) My only contact with his venerable musings has been through the wonder of my computer's screen saver. That, however, isn't my point.

Chris Watkins

My point is, instead, that I find it surprising that anyone would find enough merit in such a statement to immortalize it on my Macintosh. Okay, maybe "immortalize" is too strong a word. Suffice it to say, we the people of the United Mates of Hysteria have really got our priorities messed up.

Who in the recent past has yielded to temptation? Let's see... Tonya Harding's bodyguard yielded to temptation, and in turn, Nancy Kerrigan's knee also yielded. Every day average citizens yield to the temptation to rest their huddled and weary masses in front of the television for countless hours of viewing entertainment (or is that enervation?). You can bet that just last night at least 50% of the population at Washington College yielded to temptation and sat down for a while with their old drinking buddies Jack Daniels and Natty Bo.

Now this all sounds very bitter, I'll admit, and fairly preachy to boot. But if anyone out there can tell me the positive value of Kerrigan's reconfigured knee cap, I'll be the first one to ridicule the non-profundity of my statements. I realize also that there are a few of you reading this right now who actually think you can describe the value of a bashed limb to me, and frankly, I hope I never tick you off.

The important point here is that yielding to temptation is all fine and dandy, up until the point that your temptation loses it's validity. If you're tempted to read the collected works of Chaucer or to hang out with your friends at the Cove and play pool, then more power to you. If, however, you find temptation bending you towards, say, stabbing a tennis player on the court, or drifting merrily along into the realms of decadence with the rest of our "civilized society," then you probably ought to rethink your choice of hobbies.

When preparing to yield, first make sure the car in question has the right of way. Ω

Downing of Serbian Jets Means New Role for NATO

Paul Briggs

For the first time in its history, NATO has entered combat. As you may have heard, six warplanes from Serb-held Bosnia executed several bombing runs on Croat and Muslim-held targets, causing an as-yet-unknown amount of damage. NATO fighters, after giving them several warnings, attacked. Within about five minutes NATO had destroyed four of the planes, and the other two were fleeing Bosnian airspace.

So far there hasn't been any response from the Bosnian Serbs. In fact, on the diplomatic front there is good news- Russian diplomats have persuaded Radovan Karadzic, the Bosnian Serb leader, to agree to withdraw from the Muslim-held city of Tuzla and to allow relief flights into the city. Moreover, the withdrawal of heavy artillery from Sarajevo seems to be holding. It is possible that the United States and its allies have regained some of the credibility which had been frittered away by months of empty threats. In any case, the Serbs now know that they cannot get away with violating the "no-fly zone" by using bombers to attack Muslim and Croat positions. Unfortunately, they also know they can get away with pretty much anything else.

All sides are guilty of atrocities in this conflict. However, the Serb forces have access to most of the equipment of the old Yugoslav army, as well as an unknown amount of assistance from what remains of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro). As a result, they have captured 70% of the territory and committed the lion's share of the war crimes.

The possibility of selectively lifting the arms embargo against the Muslims, or even air strikes against Serb-held positions around Sarajevo, has repeatedly been raised. After the infamous

The Cove: Snazzy but Not Yet Stocked

Now that the Cove has opened for the fourth or fifth time, we can all dig in. Of course, the fryer has broken at least once already, so it certainly feels like home in Ms. Dee's/the Snack Bar/the WC Deli/The Cove.

It won't be exactly the same. The booths will make it a little harder to see Gene Hamilton setting up office hours, and there's no television or smoking. Those have been relegated to the next room.

But the booths are snazzy. It makes it feel a little like Denny's, except that it's not 40 minutes away. I've heard a lot of students objecting to the high walls at the ends and between the booths. True, it'll make scoping a little harder. But the gigantic crowd-sized booths are keen.

Plus, there's 2-person tables, and the bar with stools that looks out over the multi-purpose room as if it were a giant deli case of its own.

This raises an interesting point. Isn't every room on campus a multi-purpose room? I know my dorm room is. And a lot of the classrooms have been used for more than one thing. I once learned a gypsy line dance in one of the classrooms on the second floor of Bill Smith.

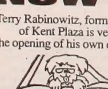
J. Tarin Towers

But I digress. I wanted to comment on Le Grille de Cove. The deli part. It reminds me of a museum cafeteria, without a doubt. It even has a glass case filled with croissants, and the employees wear little white hats that say "Cove." It's that cross between institutional and chic that simply says "institutional."

Not that I don't like it. I can't wait until everything comes in. Specifically, nachos. I loved getting nachos at the Coffeehouse my freshman year. (The C-House served nachos, pizza, and pretzels, as well as sodas and beer.) I kept getting nachos at the various incarnations of the snack bar, until last semester.

Now the $1.50 cheese-and-chips doesn't seem to be offered. Which kind of bugs me. There is a giant nacho platter on the menu, though. But it isn't available yet. A lot of things aren't.

I'm still kind of giggling that the snack bar is going to have a wine list and "real" dinners that you can enjoy tucked into one of those wooden booths. It'll almost be worth taking a date there, sort of.



Well, maybe not. I mean, how often do WC students really "date," anyway? I don't know if it's an unspoken moral objection or just a lack of places to go. But now, we have one on campus. Any restaurant that has more than one price range is an eligible spot, in my book.

Speaking of eligible spots, I hope Spring Break is free of the kind of blizzard we had last year. I was in New York City last year for the worst winter storm they'd had Summary: SO. The power of communal love has turned PRESIDENT TROUT back into a human being. Because he is a human being, he is drowning. A great debate is raging in the head of CHRIS CALHOONfish over whether or not he should become a leader and rally up the rest of the students/faculty/staff/aquatic sea creatures to save him.

"Well, like, I don't really know if I want to be a leader," said CHRIS CALHOONfish—"I mean, I'm scared. What if I become a leader and people...talk about me? What if I mess up? What if they criticize me? What if they say I'm weird? I don't know if I could handle people saying that I was weird...I don't know if I could handle people talking about me...."

"Listen," said DAVID CZEKAJfish. "You're going to Washington College—you can't AVOID people talking about you, whether or not you're a leader."

"Yeah," said MERRITT PRIGGONfish. "People are going to talk about you here, no matter what. If you voice an opinion, someone's going to disagree with it. If you write an opinion-piece, satire, or letter to the Elm, someone is going to misunderstand what you say. If you get a poem published in Sandsides,' somebody is going to tell one of their friends that actually, your writing sucks. If you head a project, someone's going to say you're doing it wrong. If you don't head a project, someone's going to say you're apathetic and mousy. If you take over a project from someone else, someone is going to say that you'll never do as good a job as the person who did it before. If you show that you're proud of yourself for any reason whatsoever, someone else is going to say that you're egotistical and pretentious."

"If you start going out with someone," said KAREN WRIGHTfish, "his or her ex-romantic partners and crushes are probably going to get together with his or her friends and trash everything about you. If you happen to kiss your significant-other in public, your friends are going to talk behind your back about how gross the two of you are. If you have a noisy sex-life, the entire campus is going to know about it. If you have an interesting-enough breakup, people-you-don't-know in dorms-you've-never-heard-of will gossip about it."

"If you wear the same shoes in a row for a week, people in the cafeteria are going to talk about you," said SARAH DUFFYfish. "If you're especially pretty, people of your opposite sex will join with their friends in mutually lusting after you, and people of your same sex will tell each other 'I don't know what everyone sees in her! I mean, we're all much prettier than she is!' Oh—and, here's something to be truly paranoid about—if you happen to have an especially big head, (I'm being literal here—I'm not talking about people who are full of themselves, I'm talking about people who REALLY DO HAVE BIG HEADS,) there are certain students here at Washington College who will make up songs to sing about about you."

"Songs?" said CHRIS CALHOONfish. "People here actually make up songs about students with big heads?"

"Yeah," said SARAH DUFFYfish. "If you have a big head here, you might want to think about getting it shrunk. This campus is a truly scary place sometimes...."

"Basically," said MARIA JERARDIfish, "if you're a member of the Washington College community, the other people of the Washington College community are going to talk about you, whether or not you're a leader. What you have to do is say: 'People are going to talk about me no matter what I do or don't do, so to heck with it. I'm going to do something that will REALLY give everyone something to talk about!' And then you do something important, and you become a leader!"

"Blub," said the now-just-about-unconscious PRESIDENT TROUT.

marketplace shelling in February, the U.S. finally issued an ultimatum which resulted in the withdrawal of heavy artillery from within a 12-mile radius of Sarajevo. Given the strong nationwide opposition to any unilateral U.S. action, however, any action involving U.S. forces will require a great deal of European participation, much more than there was in the Gulf War. "After all," goes the reasoning, "it's happening on their continent, isn't it?"

Europeans are no more eager to intervene in Bosnia than the United States was to send troops into Central American conflicts in the eighties- or, to pick a more recent example, in the abortive Chiapas rebellion. Moreover, many of these nations have humanitarian aid workers on the ground, as well as troops in the U.N. forces, and are unwilling to risk their safety.

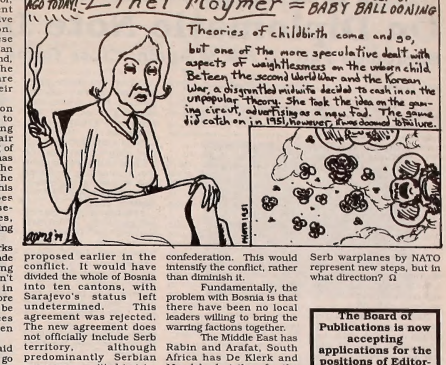
Clinton has, on several occasions, tried to garner support among Europe's leaders for air strikes or a partial lifting of the embargo. So far he has had little success. The problem may be that he has been going about this the same way he goes about everything else- arranging compromises, building consensus, looking for common ground.

Although this works fine when negotiating trade agreements and hosting peace talks, it really isn't the right approach in military matters. A more effective approach would be to commit U.S. forces immediately, and then request assistance.

However, as I said before, this action would go far beyond what most Americans would be willing to support.

While there is no end in sight to the actual fighting, the nature of the conflict may change radically in the next few months. The Croat and Muslim governments of Bosnia have agreed to form a single state composed of ethnically based cantons.

This state, according to the agreement, will form a confederation with Croatia.



Something similar to the new plan was proposed earlier in the conflict. It would have divided the whole of Bosnia into ten cantons, with Sarajevo's status left undetermined. This agreement was rejected. The new agreement does not officially include Serb territory, although predominantly Serbian areas are permitted to join. Since the new government will be forming a confederation with Croatia, however, it is unlikely that any will.

The confederation with Croatia also means that if this agreement is implemented, Croatia (which has repeatedly fought off attacks from Yugoslavia since becoming independent) will be obliged to aid and defend its new confederates. Serb-held areas of Bosnia will most likely turn to Yugoslavia for support, possibly even rejoining the Yugoslav confederation. This would intensify the conflict, rather than diminish it.

Fundamentally, the problem with Bosnia is that there have been no local leaders willing to bring the warring factions together.

The Middle East has Rabin and Arafat, South Africa has De Klerk and Mandela, but thus far the only people who have tried to foster reconciliation in Bosnia have been Western and Russian statesmen, whose calm and rational approach is light-years away from the hatred and nationalism that the Balkans are famous for. The agreement between Bosnian Muslims and Croats and the routing of Serb warplanes by NATO represent new steps, but in what direction? Ω

Men's Basketball Finishes Season On Diplomatic Note In Lancaster

Shoremen Fall To F & M Again; Close Game Is An Encouraging End

Matt Murray

At the start of the 1993-94 season, no one was sure how the men's basketball team would respond to Interim head coach Mike Hart, especially after losing four seniors from last year's 13-12 campaign.

An uncertain attitude prevailed through the first semester, as Washington could only manage a 4-5 record at the Winter Holiday. Additionally, the Shoremen took a step backwards when leading scorer Jay Devlin and starting point guard Mark Kenah were lost at the semester break due to academic difficulties.

However, Washington bounced back from its sluggish start, winning nine of its last 16 and seven of its last 10. The Shoremen eventually posted an identical 13-12 record, which included a brief appearance in the first-ever Centennial Conference playoffs.

"I had fun coaching this year," Hart said. "The guys played well and pulled together, even after losing two players in the middle of the year."

Washington's season ended at Franklin & Marshall on February 23 in a 72-71 heart breaking loss. On their road to the Centennial Conference championship, the Diplomats (24-1) barely held back the Shoremen, as the contest was undecided until the final seconds.

"It's tough to go up to their place," said Hart regarding the playoff game at Franklin & Marshall. "Not too many teams go up there and stay that close with F & M."

Leading the way to the Centennial Conference playoffs was senior captain Charles Cummings (Baltimore, MD/St. Paul's). The six-foot-one shooting guard led Washington in scoring with 17.3 points per game. He also finished second on the team in 3-point shooting, making 31-for-78 from behind the arc.

Against Swarthmore on January 29, Cummings had a career game, as he exploded for 22 points in the first half and finished with 30. Cummings also shot 76% from the free throw line for the year.

Washington's other senior, Geoff Rupert (Sykesville, MD/South Carroll), also had quite a season. Highlighted by scoring the 1,000th point of his career against Wesley on February 3, Rupert finished his fourth season averaging 13.6 points per game.

Freshman Derek Cuff of McMurray, Pennsylvania, averaged 7.8 points per game off the bench this year for Washington. Cuff's driving, slashing style often scored points on acrobatic lay-ups.

Rupert led the team in minutes played (728) and assists (87) while also ranking second in rebounds (163) for the Shoremen.

As pivotal as Cummings and Rupert were to the success of this year's team, two outstanding freshmen look to take the reigns next season and replace the two departed stars.

Freshmen Ben Harris (Alexandria, VA/Mt. Vernon) and Derek Cuff (McMurray, PA/Peters Township) both made impressive contributions for the Shoremen in their rookie seasons.

Harris, a six-foot shooting guard, first made an impact for Washington on December 4 when he scored 30 points in a 94-89 upset win over Western Maryland.

After Kenah's departure, Harris was given the starting point guard job on a full-time basis, and he responded by averaging 4.8 points per game.

Though he played in a reserve role through the first semester, Harris came back to play 661 minutes, start 16 games, make 48% of his 3-point attempts (41-for-86), shoot 85% from the free throw line (75-for-88), rate second on the team in assists with 2.5 per game, and rank third in scoring for the Shoremen.

While Cuff did not start any games for the Shoremen this year, his abilities to drive to the basket and spot up for short jumpers enabled the 6-2 forward to averaged 7.8 ppg in only 17.5 minutes per game. The freshman led the team in field goal percentage at .504.

On a number of driving, slashing moves to the basket, Cuff scored 21 points in only 26 minutes on February 17 against Ursinus, hitting on nine of 11 field goal attempts.

Juniors Jerry Davis (Houston, TX/Mirabeau Lamar) and Adam Poe (Livingston, NJ/Livingston) along with sophomore Edmund Hicks (Riva, MD/South River) all filled in to contribute for Washington.

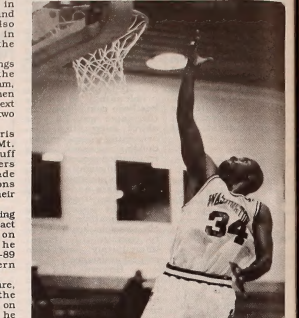
Davis started 23 games at center for the Shoremen, averaging 6.4 points, 7.9 rebounds, and 1.1 blocks per game.

The 6-4, 200 pound junior also averaged 24.9 minutes per game, as he made a solid contribution for Washington.

Hicks started 16 games for Washington and finished the season averaging 4.7 points per game. A 6-4 forward known for his defense and hustle, he also averaged 2.4 rebounds per game.

New Jersey native Poe played in 22 games in a reserve role for the Shoremen this year. The junior, who played for Washington as a freshman, but attended school elsewhere last year, had a strong second half of the season for the Shoremen.

Averaging 4.9 points in 9.1 minutes per game, Poe's biggest output of the season came against Ursinus on January 18 when he scored 15 in an 82-75 loss.



Also making small contributions for the Shoremen this year were freshmen Mark Awantang (Wheaton, MD/Cairo American) and Paul Kenny (Dublin, Ireland/Park School, MD). Each saw playing time in eight games this season.

Awantang scored 30 points and grabbed 20 rebounds in his appearances, while the 6-1 Kenny averaged 1.0 point per game.

While their roster was not that deep this year, the Shoremen completed a successful campaign in 1993-94. Only four years removed from Washington's NCAA Final Four appearance, a strong basketball tradition still prevails in Chestertown.

Next season, Washington will have only lost two seniors, and the winningest coach in school history will be returning to lead the club.

With wins over Western Maryland, Salisbury, Skidmore, Gallaudet, Ursinus, Swarthmore, Haverford, Gettysburg, and Wesley, and tough losses in conference powers Dickinson, Johns Hopkins, and Franklin & Marshall, Washington should be able to return next season and be even more competitive.

Senior captain Charles Cummings led the Shoremen in scoring this year with over 17 points per game. The Baltimore native will be greatly missed next season.

Women's Lacrosse Team Seeks Reversal Of Fortune

By Jeffrey Lee

With the spring season about to begin, the Washington Shorewomen, under the guidance of first-year head coach Sarah Feyerherm, hope to reverse the fortune of last year's team.

Having gone under a major change, the 1994 women's lacrosse season promises to be a turning point and hopefully return the winning ways that typified the program in years past.

With the addition of six freshmen, this year's squad features seniors Peggy Bowman, Renee Guckert, and Kirsten Lucas, along with junior Nancy Millhouser and sophomore Jill Schultz.

Bowman, who earned All-conference honors last year after learning the game as a freshmen, will hold down the defensive end of the field while Guckert and Lucas should spark the offense.

"I think we'll have more strength up and down the field than they did last year," head coach Feyerherm said. "This year, we have four or five people who can all put the ball in the goal, and I feel very confident in my defense."

Several freshmen should also be making an impact into the starting line up this year, including Amy Scarlett on defense and Elizabeth Moga on the offense. Seniors, Cristin Albert, Jen Bornfriend, and Beth Hocker will also see significant time for the Shorewomen.

"It's hard for me to predict exactly how we'll fare this year," Feyerherm said. "But I do know that we have already taken some big steps toward building a competitive team. We're not real deep but we have few players who are talented enough to make a real difference."

Facing one of its toughest schedules in recent years, this season should prove challenging to the Shorewomen. Perennial powers Franklin & Marshall, Ursinus, and Johns Hopkins are all members of the newly-formed Centennial Conference and will provide top-notch competition.

"The conference is a killer, but I don't know how we're going to match up with everybody else," Feyerherm said. "I'm really cautious right now. I really don't have a good sense of what the competition is right now because it's my first year."

Washington will match up against conference rivals and Division III powers Franklin & Marshall, Ursinus, and Johns Hopkins. The schedule also includes non-conference games against Widener, Goucher, Salisbury, and Mary Washington which will play host to the Shorewomen in Washington's season opener on March 23rd.

Washington Lacrosse Falls

In The Snow, Navy Whips Washington

Reprinted with permission from the Baltimore Sun.

Playing under the lights and in snow that obscured the lines on Turf Field, Navy's lacrosse team, as expected, had an easy time against visiting Washington College Tuesday.

The Midshipmen (2-0) scored six straight goals in the second period to move out to a 12-4 halftime lead, then coasted to a 20-10 victory. It was Washington College's opener.

Charles Bertrand led Navy's scoring with four goals. Rob Bailey and Jamie Slough had three apiece.

The game's high scorer was Washington senior attackman Jason Paige, who had five goals.

In a series that began in 1950, Navy leads the Shoremen, 38-2.

The game was originally scheduled for today but was changed to avoid a predicted snow storm.

"We got it in," said snow-covered Navy coach Bryan Matthews after the game. "It was a sloppy game in sloppy conditions, but we needed the game and we got a win.

"Washington College played hard. Jason Paige played a great game, and their sophomore goalie Doug Hunter."

Despite the miserable weather, a crowd of about 100 was on hand when Navy's Bertrand scored the first goal 1:58 into the game.

The Mids went ahead 3-C before Paige, with 4:36 left in the period, got the first score for the visitors.

The Shoremen battled back to within 4-3 as the first period ended on goals by Bart Jaeger and Paige.

Early in the second period, Paige's third goal brought the Shoremen close for the last time at 6-4. The Mids then scored six straight for an eight-goal halftime lead.

"We're Division III," said Washington coach Terry Corcoran, "and we only have a few kids who can play at this level. This looks to me like the usual Navy team. They have a lot of good athletes who play hard."

W.C. Hockey Beats C.U. Cardinals

By Dave Kraft

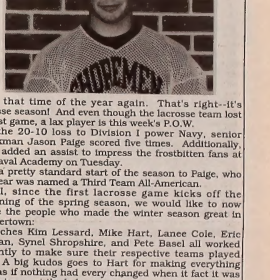
The Washington College Ice Hockey Club got its first win of the season Tuesday night when they came from behind to defeat the Catholic University Cardinals 7-6, in Easton. Leading the team was Captain Gary Yovanovich, who chose two goals and two assists added to his club leading totals of seven goals and fourteen points. The club never led in the game until the final seven minutes.

The Cardinals scored first and played a defensive style which included dropping the puck on the boards for extraordinary amounts of time to kill the clock.

Tim Reardon opened the scoring for Washington and Yovanovich tied the game at 1-1 to end the first period.

The second period featured goals by Graham Mounda (who also had two assists) and Tim Reath .

Washington went into the third period trailing 6-4, but Yovanovich and Topher Head, the club's leading defenseman, scored power play goals to tie the game at six. Then, with 7:55 remaining, Reardon scored his second goal of the night (fifth of the season) on a rebound with Dave Kraft and Munda getting the assists.



Washington was able to hold off for the remaining time, securing their well-deserved and long overdue win. John Moreland, Jon Kane, and Mike Harper also had assists for the Shoremen.

Playing for the first year in the Mason-Dixon Hockey League, the Shoremen showed heart and played very respectably in their games against much larger, more established teams. The club's season ended on a positive note, and they will again participate in the Mason-Dixon League next year.

Thanks to the fans who made the journey to support the club.

NEWT'S Player of the Week

Your Place to Unwind

It's that time of the year again. That's right--it's lacrosse season! And even though the lacrosse team lost its first game, a lax player is this week's P.O.W.

In the 20-10 loss to Division I power Navy, senior attackman Jason Paige scored five times. Additionally, Paige added an assist to impress the frostbitten fans at the Naval Academy on Tuesday.

It's a pretty standard start of the season to Paige, who last year was named a Third Team All-American.

Well, since the first lacrosse game kicks off the beginning of the spring season, we would like to now salute the people who made the winter season great in Chestertown:

Coaches Kim Lessard, Mike Hart, Lanee Cole, Eric Norman, Synel Shropshire, and Pete Basel all worked diligently to make sure their respective teams played well. A big kudos goes to Hart for making everything click as if nothing had every changed when it fact it was his first year at the helm.

On the basketball floor, we'd like to first congratulate Geoff Rupert. Charles Cummings, and Ben Harris on superlative seasons. Rupert scored his 1,000th point, while Cummings and Harris put in solid seasons. While Rupert and Cummings must pass on, it's exciting to think we could have three more years of watching Harris play ball in Chestertown.

On the women's side, freshmen Allison Wentworth, Eboni Taylor, Kelly Rodgers, and Lee Ann Lezzer proved this year that the Shorewomen have a promising future. However, we especially salute Pam Hendrickson for her hard work and much needed leadership as a senior.

In the pool, congratulations go to the men's swimming team for placing second in the Centennial Conference Championships. Led by captains Dave Cole and Chris Freisheim, and sparked by a strong freshman recruiting class, the Shoremen were tough to beat this year.

On the women's side, we bid adieu to Jen Green, and we know that the women have a real chance to be strong next year. Thanks. See y'all next winter.

New Insurance Plan

College Saves $250,000 By Changing Companies, Cutting Benefits

Rachael Fink

At a time when the nation is up in arms over the increasing cost of health care and insurance and Bill Clinton is trying to implement a national health care policy, Washington College is in the midst of changing insurance companies. When it became clear that there would be a 43% increase in the cost of the current insurance package under Blue Cross Blue Shield, the administration went looking for alternative companies to meet the insurance needs of the faculty and staff. Of the many companies contacted, Educator's Mutual was the one company able to provide coverage at a cost within the current budgetary limitations.

Under the new policy employee contributions will not increase from their current level. However, there will be a $250 deductible which must be met before any benefits from the policy can be received. Once this deductible is met Educator's Mutual will provide 90% coverage within a limited provider network. This network includes Maryland, Washington D.C., Virginia and West Virginia. If an employee wishes to go outside of this provider's network or receive care from a specialist not participating in the network Educator's Mutual will cover 70% of the ensuing cost.

The transition from Blue Cross Blue Shield to Educator's Mutual is being accomplished through re-enrollment. Faculty and Staff members are being briefed on the changes in coverage and must complete forms detailing any pre-existing conditions and the beneficiaries of the policy. In an interview with The Elm, Gene Heasey, Senior Vice-President for Management and Finance, said that the re-enrollment process should be completed by the end of this week.

With the current financial problems facing the College the question of increased cost to the College due to the change was asked. While unwilling to disclose exactly how much money the College would be saving, Hessey did say that there was a "significant" decrease in the cost of coverage for the College, and he expressed the feeling that this would help the College's financial situation. Honor Code Student Draft Presented

Scott Koon

At the Student Government Association meeting on March 22 SGA Vice President Max Walton unveiled the student draft for a new Honor System at Washington College. The draft is a culmination of over two years of work on the part of Washington College students and faculty, with Walton leading the effort for the past year. The five page document is a complete reworking of the Honor Code of Washington College, and reflects Walton's determination to implement a code which covers both academic and social violations.

Max Walton has worked for over a year on the draft.

Currently social conduct is overseen by the Student Conduct Council and academic improprieties are handled by the All-Campus Judiciary, which also acts as an appeals body for the SCC. Under the new plan, both sorts of violations would be handled by a nine member Honor Board which would consist of four SGA executive board appointed students, three faculty members, the Dean of the College and the Dean of Student Affairs.

Under the current Honor Code, students are asked to sign a statement as freshmen indicating that they have read, understood and will follow the Honor Code at Washington College. Under the new plan, students would have to

Visiting Team Head Kessinger Addresses WC Community

Middle States Wraps Up Reaccreditation Process, Kessinger Outlines College's Strengths and Thanks WC for Hospitality

Scott Koon

Dr. Tom Kessinger, president of Haverford College and head of the Middle States Visiting Team, delivered his report back to the Washington College community on Wednesday March 9. The Middle States visitors were charged with evaluating Washington College and presenting a Report to the Middle States Association, who are fully expected to re-accredit Washington College. The accreditation program occurs every ten years.

Kessinger noted in his presentation that while the problems facing Washington College are not uncommon in American higher education today, Washington faces more difficulties because it is underenrolled and the budget is out of balance. Kessinger thanked everyone involved in the process and commended the College community for their hard work in the accreditation process, and that this hard work showed in the high quality document produced by the self study. He also took note of the excellent facilities on campus, particularly the Computing Center and the O'Neill Literary House. He noted the close relationship between the Student Affairs Office and the Office of the Dean. He said that the College's commitment to diversity was evidenced by the strong increase in the number of international and minority students over the past few years. Given all this, he said, the problems facing the College are outweighed by its strengths. He the enumerated several ways the Visiting Team felt the College could work to ensure success.

In the area of finance, Kessinger said that the College should seek budgetary equilibrium and grow to its current capacity. This is of particular importance given the hope expressed in the Long Range Plan that the College grow to accommodate 1150 students. Kessinger did not remark that this was in and of itself a bad idea, but he did say that the College needs to emphasize growth to capacity before it can expand to a new, larger capacity. To do this, the College should delay new building projects and use resources to improve existing dormitories as soon as possible.

Kessinger also spoke

Faculty Approve Gender Studies Minor

Scott Koon

At the last faculty meeting on the seventh of March the faculty voted unanimously to approve a new interdisciplinary minor in Gender Studies. The proposal had come from Academic Council, which is the committee responsible for curricular changes.

The proposal featured an academic rationale for the new minor which noted that "Students have been asking for a women's or gender studies program for several years." The document also notes that there is little need for new courses to support the new minor, as the College has been offering women's and gender studies courses at an average rate of 5.833 a year since 1988.

The motion was introduced by Jeanette Sherbondy, Lida Baldwin, Emilie Amt, Audrey Fessler, Beverly Wolff, Ruth Shope and Lucille Sansing. The only new course offered so far for the minor is Gender in Western Civilization to 1600 (History 348), which will be taught by Dr. Amt. The course will be a required course for the new minor, as will the Anthropology course Sex, Gender and Kinship, which is already part of the curriculum at Washington College. The other requirement for the minor will be the completion of four other courses which will be cross-listed in the catalog as GEN.

All students the Elm approached on the issue of the new minor responded favorably to its addition to the curriculum, yet several expressed dismay that they will not be able to have a minor in Gender Studies. But there is hope for these students, as the proposal takes note of the fact that so many Gender Studies courses have been offered in the past several years, and operates under the assumption that there are probably some students who have already made significant progress towards the minor. The proposal

Children's Television: Breeding Ground for Homicidal Maniacs

I don't watch much television, so needless to say I don't watch much children's television. Yet the truth is, I find myself watching more children's television lately, simply by virtue of the fact that I have become a big fan of the afternoon cartoon Anamaniacs.

I was watching the show on a recent afternoon when I became vaguely uneasy. I eventually realized that it wasn't the show which I found disturbing, but the commercials.

Anamaniacs is a violent cartoon show, but its violence is in the great tradition of the Warner Brothers cartoons it makes reference to. The show itself assumes an intelligent audience, and its humor is unexpectedly sophisticated for a cartoon.

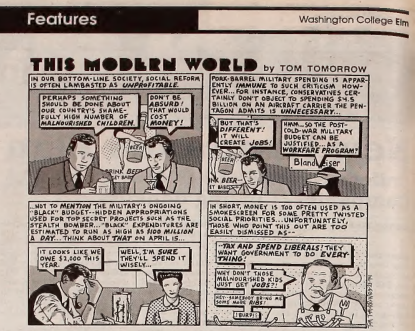
The commercials, on the other hand, possess no redeeming virtues. They are simply violent commercials advertising violent products. There is a kind of cold war going on on children's television and in the toy industry. For some reason or another toy companies have gotten it into their heads that the more violent products sell better.

Perhaps this is true, but these violent toys are not to be assumed to be benign simply because kids desire them. When I was a boy, I often wanted to swim out a mile or so from the beach, but I now concede that the lifeguards and my parents knew my own interest better than I did at the time. The same may be true of products like the "Viscous Aliens Facehugger Queen" now being offered up for sale to our youth. The mere fact that products are being marketed to children featuring the word "viscous" is a sign that something is wrong with our society.

All the toy companies, with the possible exception of Fisher-Price, are guilty of this senseless desensitization to violence. Nerf, for example, features a commercial with a city street inundated with foam rubber projectiles while a prepubescent boy shouts "You're either at one end of a Nerf or another." In other words, Nerf wants others before they Nerf unto you. The products being advertised were "Missile Storm," "Arrow Storm," and "Sharpshooter," all of which fire foam rubber projectiles. Back in my day (not to terribly long ago) Nerf made foam rubber footballs that wouldn't break windows. I guess kids today don't want to play ball anymore: they want to shoot each other.

Hot Wheels, a Mattel brand name, still produces toy cars. But they also produce "Attack Birds" like "Night Slayer," and "Terrordactyl." What educational value do such products have? Once upon a time, the basic words used in selling toys to boys were words like "cool" or "new," now the key words are "missile," "attack," and "maniac." Lego has its "Legomaniac," and Pop Tarts are hawked by a "Chocomaniac." As if insanity were ever cool.

I suppose this all disturbs me because I subscribe to the old-fashioned notion that childhood should be a time of innocence. It seems to me that the young boys who will be the men of tomorrow will never experience the loss of innocence because we as a society have never allowed them the privilege of being innocent in the first place. Childhood innocence is one of the redeeming qualities of Western civilization, but we're foolishly eliminating it just so that a few toy companies can make some money selling hyper masculine, hyper muscular dolls with swords or "fusion missiles."



For the most part, I'm concerned with the products aimed at boys; Lorena Bobbitt and Tonya Harding aside, it is the boys of today who will become the rapists, maimers and murderers of tomorrow. Only a spate of deaths by accidental shooting by police officers stopped toy companies from selling realistic machine guns to kids. The only thing we can do about this problem is to boycott these products of questionable moral value. Next Christmas, get your young nephew or brother a Nerf football instead of "Conan, the mightiest Warrior ever known."

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I'm writing in response to last week's article on employee morale. Washington College employees: YOU'RE ALL SCREWED IN THE HEAD IF YOU STAY HERE ANY LONGER THEN YOU HAVE TO. I now work at Pizza Hut for about five hours a day and make more money than I ever did here. Get out now save yourselves while there's still a chance. Don't let the administration exploit you any longer. You are not pawns damn-it your people so start acting like it. In closing I would to say try chanting this to your local administrator, "STRIKE ! STRIKE !? Tony Lee Squires

Dear Dr. trout,

I write to express my appreciation to the entire Washington College community for the gracious hospitality with which I was received as a member of the Middle States Visiting Team on March 6 through March 9. Since Juniata College itself very recently experienced our ten-year reaccreditation

Melrose Placebo

I love Melrose Place. I want to live at Melrose Place when I grow up. I want to be neighbors with Billy, Allison, Amanda and the rest of that way cool gang. It just has to be the greatest place this side of Michael Jackson's Neverland Ranch. For those of you who are not familiar with the show, it is a lot like that other neighborhood you grew up with, Sesame Street, except for the fact that Snuffalupagus would be sleeping with Oscar the Grouch in his trashcan of love, behind Big Bird's big yellow back.

Where else can I see Jake start his own motorcycle shop, only to have it burned down, yet in a few weeks time, after a brief run-in with the F.B.I. and a counterfeit car ring, Jake would be chartering a boat that used to belong to his ex-girlfriend Jo's lover, who she killed because he was a drug dealer and stuck her down in the hold of the boat, but not before he got her pregnant. And you thought that Whitewater was difficult to explain and understand. Maybe we should have Senate Hearings on what is being put in the Melrose Placer's water.

I used to think Beverly Hills 90210 was cool but it just got to be too unrealistic and I couldn't relate to it anymore. I was so tired of listening to a bunch of rich spoiled college student brats whining about their lives and then I would leave the cafeteria to go watch the show. All these things about Steve being accused of date rape and Brenda crusading against laboratory testing of animals are silly and unimportant. Perhaps, since they left high school there are no more interesting stories to tell. Except for one and I have it on good authority that in an upcoming episode, either this year or next, the show will finally explore the incestuous relationship between the Walsh twins, Brenda and Brandon. Everyone knows that there is something going on between those two; they are always sitting on each other's beds or talking in the bathroom. And for all you prides out there, it wouldn't really be that sick because they are only actors and not really related.

Melrose Place is not afraid of such serious and controversial topics. Sidney's marriage to Michael, her brother-in-law, really makes one question the U.S. patriarchal system that has kept women earning substantially less than men for the same work. O.K. Maybe it doesn't make you think of that but it is still pretty cool; they all have really neat haircuts. And so what if everyone looks alike, the Melrose Placers act different. There is the scheming and horny Amanda, the goofy and horny Billy, the psychotic and horny Sydney. Well, you get

Scholar Speaks on Sexuality in the Workplace

Forrest George

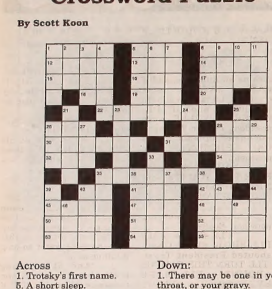
On Monday March 21 James D. Woods, author of The Corporate Closet, spoke on "Sexuality in the Workplace," a lecture sponsored by the William James Forum and the Goldstein Program. There was a dinner at Brown Cottage attended by students and professors to honor the speaker, and afterwards the lecture was presented in the Sophie Kerr Room in Miller Library. James Woods is an Assistant Professor of Communication Studies at the College of Staten Island, City University of New York. He outlined for the gathering of about 20 people the core of his book and answered questions from the audience.

In writing his book Woods conducted interviews with gay businessmen in New York City, Philadelphia, Washington DC, Houston and San Francisco, and conducted supplemental research in Virginia, Minnesota and Boston. The main purpose of this research was to document how white collar gays deal with their sexuality in the workplace. The role of sexuality in the workplace is a topic in which Professor Woods feels there is much growing interest. He cited as examples the interest the Anita Hill and Clarence Thomas hearings. For the gay rights movement the debate over inclusion of gays in the military has sparked a lot of attention on behavior in the workplace.

Woods began by dispelling a myth which is commonplace among professionals: that a workplace is, and should be, asexual. According to this myth professionals are asexual and the personal and professional lives of a person are totally separate. From his interviews Woods found that most of his subjects thought that "it would be rude and tacky" to discuss sex during the work day. Companies tend to attempt to uphold this myth through dress codes and work rules.

Woods contends, however, that this ideal is a myth. Woods opened his discussion by saying that the workplace is often a sexually charged environment. To disprove this myth about the separation of personal and private lives Woods asked the audience to think about an individual with whom we work and said we probably know a large amount about their personal life, including whether they are married and where they vacationed last.

Woods explained how heterosexuality is displayed at work. The most obvious example is flirting and harassment, but on another level there are benefits to heterosexual spouses; in a different category is communication about sex, jokes, wedding rings and family pictures. On a deeper level Woods explained that business is merely the management of relationships, and in the final and least obvious category Woods said we bring our life experiences to work. He quoted a history teacher as saying that he could not help but be gay in the classroom, even if the only way he expressed this is by discouraging jokes about gays.



These displays of heterosexuality are normal in the workplace and because of this it can be career-crippling for business people to conceal parts of their personal lives. Often times individuals who withdraw from the camaraderie of the workplace are labeled as not being team players or not having the necessary chemistry.

Then Woods drew a few distinctions between the place of the heterosexual in the workplace and the position of the bisexual or homosexual in the workplace. He likened the invisibility of heterosexuality to the invisibility of a chair. There is a presumption in most corporations that everyone is heterosexual. Individuals will ask marital status and warn about such and such a person of the opposite sex. Furthermore when a bisexual or homosexual comes out, Worldwide Rumors, Inc.

Everyone talks about how Washington College is so cliquey and gossipy because it's small, it's out-of-the way, and it's more like high school than other places. I'm now convinced that this is a fallacy.

It's not anything about DC that makes its rumor mill churn 24-7, except for human nature. Anywhere I've gone, and any group of people I've hung out with, has had the same gossip circles spreading the same folklore, albeit about different people.

Whether it'sWashington College, or non-WC Chestertown, or Manhattan, or Iowa City, or Rolling Stone, or the Internet, any large group of people I've been affiliated with has had the same set of concerns about its members, primarily focusing on members' sex lives and including any juicy tidbits that become known to more than one person.

Any group will break down into smaller cliques comprised of people who have more in common, such as similar taste in music, books, clothing, and each other. In cases outside of college there's usually class and education distinctions made, but not always.

I don't think that this behavior is particularly juvenile or snobbish, either. Birds of a feather often eat meals together, and while it may be a little extreme for the same group of people to eat lunch at the same table for all four years of their running, I don't think it's that unusual.

At Hopkins I was hanging out at the Nuyorican Poets' Café this summer, it was apparent that those who the management liked, also liked each other. There was a large clique of the "cool poets," which further broke down into sub-cliques of people who liked and/or lived with each other, and, while here, everyone knew who was sleeping with and/or fighting with whom.

That's been the case in almost every community I've belonged to. People have a need to socialize with one another, and they also have a modicum of inherent curiosity about each other. Whether this manifests itself as an interest in human nature in general or as a loose Tongue and an open door (on campus), it happens.

The study lounges and dorm rooms of the world may become telephone circles and Xerox stations in our future, non-WAC days. But they won't disappear. Witness our own faculty lounge, gossip station of the most venerated Ph.D.

Besides planning all student tests for the same three-day period, professors tenured and not spend inordinate amounts of time in the faculty lounge swapping stories about themselves and their students. You think they don't? Drop off a paper to a faculty mailbox around lunchtime. It sounds like a good night at the Lit House in there.

There are, of course, people who claim, perhaps sincerely, that they don't go in for those little reindeer games and have no interest in gossip. But present those same people with something particularly juicy and an interested "Oh, really?" pops to their lips almost involuntarily.

I'm not a huge cog in the rumor mill, and I think that there are two kinds of gossip: pleasant, benign and hurtful. Pleasant gossip includes, "did you hear that so-and-so got engaged/ won an award/ got into grad school/ went to Honfuras for Spring Break?" Such items are usually true, usually public domain, and usually hurt no one.

A benign rumor is like a benign tumor: it may not hurt anyone, but you don't generally want one for yourself. These items are usually known by more than confidants. They may not be intended to damage anyone's reputation, although they may be a little extreme for usually reliable regarding information, although they may not be so reliable in keeping secrets.

Hurtful gossip is just that. It may be completely made-up, or confused and twisted by people who may or may not know any better. It may consist of secrets no one was meant to know. Its sources should be shot and killed.

Of course, there are those rare birds who make up or spread rumors about themselves. Let them. No one listens to these people anyway.

So, the next time someone professes their hatred for the cliques and gossip at Washington College, just smirk and say "I know something you don't know." And if you don't, make something up.
